PREFACE TO THE NEW AND REVISED EDITION

IT is now more than a quarter of a century since the first edition of the present work was published. It was hardly possible for me to ascertain, at that date, that the time of its publication was not a very favourable one; it would, perhaps, have been better to have deferred its appearance for a few years, owing to the great advances that were being made, just at that period, in the methods of comparative philology. The whole system of estimating the vowel-sounds has since been completely reconsidered, and the history of their phonetic values, in particular, is now regarded in a very different light.

The chief writers on philology of that period, notably Curtius, Fick, Schleicher, and Vaniček agreed in the view, now known to be erroneous, that the primitive Indogermanic language had but three short primary vowels, viz. a, i, and u. This strange theory (for such we should now consider it) arose from the fact that the short primary vowels really were reduced to these three both in Gothic, which was justly regarded as being, upon the whole, the most primitive of the Teutonic (or Germanic) languages, and in Sanskrit, which was likewise known to possess many characteristics of extreme antiquity. But it is now recognized that more than half of the Indogermanic languages retain a primitive e, whilst just half of them retain a primitive o; so that the number of primary short vowels was really five, viz. a, e, i, o, u. The primitive form corresponding to the Gk. -ε, L. -que, Skt. cha, signifying 'and,' must have been que*, rather than qua*, because the Skt. ch is a palatal sound, due to the palatal vowel e, which once followed it. In other words, the Skt. cha was once che*.

The advance due to the following up of this discovery (for it was nothing less) has been very considerable. The whole subject has been thoroughly revised, and the results are fully exhibited in the Comparative Grammar of the Indogermanic Languages by Karl Brugmann; as well as in the special German, Dutch, and Danish Etymological Dictionaries by Kluge, Franck, and Falk and Torp respectively. It is needless to add that the same correct principles have been adopted in the New English Dictionary.

Owing to the large number of corrections which the use of the newer method renders imperative, I took the opportunity, in 1901, of printing an entirely new edition of my Concise Etymological Dictionary, first issued in 1882, and partially corrected in four later editions; the result being that the edition of 1901 entirely supersedes all that preceded it.

The time has now arrived when it has become absolutely necessary, in the same way, to reprint my larger Dictionary also. Alterations have now been made, more or less, in almost every article except such as are of the simplest character.

Not only have the methods of comparative philology been greatly improved, but many valuable works on special subjects have appeared in recent years, as, for example, those by Kluge, Franck, Falk, Prellwitz, Bréal, Walde, Uhlenbeck, Godefroy, Hatzfeld, and others; not one of these was available in 1879-82. Above all, I have been much assisted by the admirable articles in the New English Dictionary, from the beginning of A down to Ph. For the latter part of the alphabet, I have mainly consulted the Century Dictionary, the editors of which, by the way, of course had access to the second edition of the present work.

The number of words dealt with has been considerably increased, and (exclusive of cross-references and the like) stands approximately thus:—A, 882; B, 865; C, 1434; D, 845; E, 575; F, 639; G, 518; H, 517; I, 724; J, 145; K, 108; L, 527; M, 782; N, 242; O, 376; P, 1231; Q, 104; R, 648; S, 1555; T, 821; U, 92; V, 265; W, 319; X, 2; Y, 45; Z, 25. The greatest number of these begins with S; after which follow, in order, C, P, A, B, D, T, M, I, R, F, E, L, G, H, O, W, V, N, J, K, Q, U, Y, Z, X. Total number, 14,286.

I beg leave to refer the reader, for further information, to the former Prefaces here reprinted, the Brief Notes at p. xviii, the List of Books consulted, and the Key to the General Plan.

I am under obligation to a large number of correspondents and friends. In particular, I desire to mention the names of the Rev. A. L. Mayhew, of Oxford, who gave me so much assistance when revising my Concise Dictionary, and of P. Giles, M.A., of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, University Reader in Comparative Philology. My second daughter, Clara L. Skeat, has verified nearly all the references given in the third edition, and has in many ways rendered me efficient help.

CAMBRIDGE, April 30, 1909.

PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION

THE present work was undertaken with the intention of furnishing students with materials for a more scientific study of English etymology than is commonly to be found in previous works upon the subject. It is not intended to be always authoritative, nor are the conclusions arrived at to be accepted as final. It is rather intended as a guide to future writers, showing them in some cases what ought certainly to be accepted, and in other cases, it may be, what to avoid. The idea of it arose out of my own wants. I could find no single book containing the facts about a given word which it most concerns a student to know, whilst, at the same time, there exist numerous books containing information too important to be omitted. Thus Richardson's Dictionary is an admirable store-house of quotations illustrating such words as are of no great antiquity in the language, and his selected examples are the more valuable from the fact that he in general adds the exact reference¹. Todd's Johnson likewise contains numerous well-chosen quotations, but perhaps no greater mistake was ever made than that of citing from authors like 'Dryden' or 'Addison' at large, without the slightest hint as to the whereabouts of the context. But in both of these works the etymology is commonly of the poorest description; and it would probably be difficult to find a worse philologist than Richardson, who adopted many suggestions from Horne Tooke without inquiry, and was capable of saying that hod is 'perhaps hoved, hov'd, hod, past part. of heafan to heave.' It is easily ascertained that the AS. for heave is hebban, and that, being a strong verb, its past participle did not originally end in -ed.

It would be tedious to mention the numerous other books which help to throw such light on the history of words as is necessary for the right investigation of their etymology. The great defect of most of them is that they do not carry back that history far enough, and are very weak in the highly important Middle-English period. But the publications of the Camden Society, of the Early English

Chaucer are often utterly wrong, the numbers being frequently misprinted.

Text Society, and of many other printing clubs, have lately materially advanced our knowledge, and have rendered possible such excellent books of reference as are exemplified in Stratmann's Old English Dictionary and in the still more admirable but (as yet) incomplete 'Wörterbuch' by Eduard Mätzner. In particular, the study of phonetics, as applied to Early English pronunciation by Mr. Ellis and Mr. Sweet, and carefully carried out by nearly all students of Early English in Germany, has almost revolutionized the study of etymology as hitherto pursued in England. We can no longer consent to disregard vowel-sounds as if they formed no essential part of the word, which seems to have been the old doctrine; indeed, the idea is by no means yet discarded even by those who ought to know better.

On the other hand, we have, in Eduard Müller's Etymologisches Wörterbuch der Englischen Sprache¹, an excellent collection of etymologies and cognate words, but without any illustrations of the use or history of words, or any indication of the period when they first came into use. We have also Webster's Dictionary, with the etymologies as revised by Dr. Mahn, a very useful and comprehensive volume; but the plan of the work does not allow of much explanation of a purely philological character.

It is many years since a new and comprehensive dictionary was first planned by the Philological Society, and we have now good hope that, under the able editorship of Dr. Murray, some portion of this great work may ere long see the light. For the illustration of the history of words, this will be all-important, and the etymologies will, I believe, be briefly but sufficiently indicated. It was chiefly with the hope of assisting in this national work, that, many years ago, I began collecting materials and making notes upon points relating to etymology. The result of such work, in a modified form, and with very large additions, is here offered to the reader. My object has been to clear the way for the improvement of the etymologies by a previous discussion of all the more important words, executed on a plan so far differing from that which will be adopted by Dr. Murray as not to interfere with his labours, but rather, as far as possible, to assist them. It will, accordingly, be found that I have studied brevity by refraining from any detailed account of the changes of meaning of words, except where absolutely necessary for purely etymological purposes. The numerous very curious and highly interesting examples of words which, especially in later times, took up new meanings will not, in general, be found here; and the definitions of words are only given in a very brief and bald manner, only the more usual senses being indicated. On the other hand, I have sometimes permitted myself to indulge in comments, discussions, and even suggestions and speculations, which would be out of place in a dictionary of the usual character. Some of these, where the results are right, will, I hope, save much future discussion and investigation; whilst others, where the results prove to be wrong, can be avoided and rejected. In one respect I have attempted considerably more than is usually done by the writers of works upon English etymology. I have endeavoured, where possible, to trace back words to their Aryan roots, by availing myself of the latest works upon comparative philology. In doing this, I have especially endeavoured to link one word with another, and the reader will find a perfect network of cross-references enabling him to collect all the forms of any given word of which various forms exist; so that many of the principal words in the Aryan languages can be thus traced. Instead of considering English as an isolated language, as is sometimes actually done, I endeavour, in every case, to exhibit its relation to cognate tongues; and as, by this process, considerable light is thrown upon English by Latin and Greek, so also, at the same time, considerable light is thrown upon Latin and Greek by Anglo-Saxon and Icelandic. Thus, whilst under the word bite will be found a mention of the cognate Latin findere, conversely, under the word fissure, is given a cross-reference to bite. In both cases, reference is also made to the root BHID; and, by referring to this root (no. 240, on p. 738), some further account of it will be found, with further examples of allied words. It is only by thus comparing all the Aryan languages together, and by considering them as one harmonious whole, that we can get a clear conception of the original forms; a conception which must precede all theory as to how those forms came to be invented¹. Another great advantage of the comparative method is that, though the present work is nominally one on English etymology, it is equally explicit, as far as it has occasion to deal with them, with regard to the related words in other languages; and may be taken as a guide to the etymology of many of the leading words in Latin and Greek, and to all the more important words in the various Scandinavian and Teutonic tongues.

I have chiefly been guided throughout by the results of my own experience. Much use of many dictionaries has shown me the exact points where an inquirer is often baffled, and I have especially addressed myself to the task of solving difficulties and passing beyond obstacles. Not inconsiderable has been the trouble of verifying references. A few examples will put this in a clear light.

Richardson has numerous references (to take a single case) to the Romaunt of the Rose. He probably used some edition in which the lines are not numbered; at any rate, he never gives an exact reference to it. The few references to it in Tyrwhitt's Glossary and in Stratmann do not help us very greatly. To find a particular word in this poem of 7,700 lines is often troublesome; but, in every case where I wanted the quotation, I have found and noted it. I can recall several half-hours spent in this particular work.

Another not very hopeful book in which to find one's place, is the Faerie Queene. References to this are usually given to the book and canto, and of these one or other is (in Richardson) occasionally incorrect; in every case, I have added the number of the stanza.

One very remarkable fact about Richardson's dictionary is that, in many cases, references are given only to obscure and late authors, when all the while the word occurs in Shakespeare. By keeping Dr. Schmidt's comprehensive Shakespeare Lexicon² always open before me, this fault has been easily remedied.

To pass on to matters more purely etymological. I have constantly been troubled with the vagueness and inaccuracy of words quoted, in various books, as specimens of Old English or foreign languages. The spelling of 'Anglo-Saxon' in some books is often simply outrageous. Accents are put in or left out at pleasure; impossible combinations of letters are given; the number of syllables is disregarded; and grammatical terminations have to take their chance. Words taken from Ettmüller are spelt with ä and æ; words taken from Bosworth are spelt with æ and *æ*³, without any hint that the ä and æ of the former answer to æ and æ in the latter. I do not wish to give examples of these things; they are so abundant that they may easily be found by the curious. In many cases, writers of 'etymological' dictionaries do not trouble to learn even the alphabets of the languages cited from, or the most elementary grammatical facts. I have met with supposed Welsh words spelt with a v, with Swedish words spelt with æ, with Danish infinitives ending in *-a*⁴, with Icelandic infinitives in -an, and so on; the only languages correctly spelt being Latin and Greek, and commonly French and German. It is clearly assumed, and probably with safety, that most readers will not detect misspellings beyond this limited range.

But this was not a matter which troubled me long. At a very early stage of my studies, I perceived clearly enough, that the spelling given by some authorities is not necessarily to be taken as the true one ; and it was then easy to make allowances for possible errors, and to refer to some book with reasonable spellings, such as E. Müller, or Mahn's Webster, or Wedgwood. A little research revealed far more curious pieces of information than the citing of words in impossible or mistaken spellings. Statements abound which it is difficult to account for except on the supposition that it must once have been usual to manufacture words for the express purpose of deriving others from them. To take an example, I open Todd's Johnson at random, and find that under bolster is cited 'Gothic bolster, a heap of hay.' Now the fragments of Gothic that have reached us are very precious but very insufficient, and they certainly contain no such word as bolster. Neither is bolster a Gothic spelling. Holster is represented in Gothic by hulistr, so that bolster might, possibly, be bulistr. In any case, as the word certainly does not occur, it can only be a pure invention, due to some blunder ; the explanation 'a heap of hay' is a happy and graphic touch, regarded in the light of a fiction, but is out of place in a work of reference.

A mistake of this nature would not greatly matter if such instances were rare ; but the extraordinary part of the matter is that they are extremely common, owing probably to the trust reposed by former writers in such etymologists as Skinner and Junius, men who did good work in their day, but whose statements require careful verification in this nineteenth century. What Skinner was capable of, I have shown in my introduction to the reprint of Ray's Glossary published for the English Dialect Society. It is sufficient to say that the net result is this ; that words cited in etymological dictionaries (with very few exceptions) cannot be accepted without verification. Not only do we find puzzling misspellings, but we find actual fictions ; words are said to be 'Anglo-Saxon' that are not to be found in the existing texts ; 'Gothic' words are constructed for the mere purpose of 'etymology ;' Icelandic words have meanings assigned to them which are incredible or misleading ; and so on of the rest.

Another source of trouble is that, when real words are cited, they are wrongly explained. Thus, in Todd's Johnson, we find a derivation of bond from AS. 'bond, bound.' Now bond is not strictly Anglo-Saxon, but an Early English form, signifying 'a band,' and is not a past participle at all ; the AS. for 'bound' being gebunden. The error is easily traced ; Dr. Bosworth cites 'bond, bound, ligatus' from Somner's Dictionary, whence it was also copied into Lye's Dictionary in the form : 'bond, ligatus, obligatus, bound.' Where Somner found it, is a mystery indeed, as it is absurd on the face of it. We should take a man to be a very poor German scholar who imagined that band, in German, is a past participle ; but when the same mistake is made by Somner, we find that it is copied by Lye, copied by Bosworth (who, however, marks it as Somner's), copied into Todd's Johnson, amplified by Richardson into the misleading statement that 'bond is the past tense¹ and past participle of the verb to bind,' and has doubtless been copied by numerous other writers who have wished to come at their etymologies with the least trouble to themselves. It is precisely this continual reproduction of errors which so disgraces many English works, and renders investigation so difficult.

But when I had grasped the facts that spellings are often false, that words can be invented, and that explanations are often wrong, I found that worse remained behind. The science of philology is comparatively modern, so that our earlier writers had no means of ascertaining principles that are now well established, and, instead of proceeding by rule, had to go blindly by guesswork, thus sowing crops of errors which have sprung up and multiplied till it requires very careful investigation to enable a modern writer to avoid all the pitfalls prepared for him by the false suggestions which he meets with at every turn. Many derivations that have been long current and are even generally accepted will not be found in this volume, for the plain reason that I have found them to be false; I think I may at any rate believe myself to be profoundly versed in most of the old fables of this character, and I shall only say, briefly, that the reader need not assume me to be ignorant of them because I do not mention them. The most extraordinary fact about comparative philology is that, whilst its principles are well understood by numerous students in Germany and America, they are far from being well known in England, so that it is easy to meet even with classical scholars who have no notion what 'Grimm's law' really means, and who are entirely at a loss to understand why the English care has no connexion with the Latin cura, nor the English whole with the Greek ὅλος, nor the French charité with the Greek χάρις. Yet for the understanding of these things nothing more is needed than a knowledge of the relative values of the letters of the English, Latin, and Greek alphabets. A knowledge of these alphabets is strangely neglected at our public schools; whereas a few hours carefully devoted to each would save scholars from innumerable blunders, and a boy of sixteen who understood them would be far more than a match, in matters of etymology, for a man of fifty who did not. In particular, some knowledge of the vowel-sounds is essential. Modern philology will, in future, turn more and more upon phonetics; and the truth now confined to a very few will at last become general, that the vowel is commonly the very life, the most essential part of the word, and that, just as pre-scientific etymologists frequently went wrong because they considered the consonants as being of small consequence and the vowels of none at all, the scientific student of the present day may hope to go right, if he considers the consonants as being of great consequence and the vowels as all-important.

The foregoing remarks are, I think, sufficient to show my reasons for undertaking the work, and the nature of some of the difficulties which I have endeavoured to encounter or remove. I now proceed to state explicitly what the reader may expect to find.

Each article begins with a word, the etymology of which is to be sought. When there are one or more words with the same spelling, a number is added, for the sake of distinction in the case of future reference. This is a great convenience when such words are cited in the 'List of Aryan Roots' and in the various indexes at the end of the volume, besides saving trouble in making cross-references.

After the word comes a brief definition, merely as a mark whereby to identify the word.

Next follows an exact statement of the actual (or probable) language whence the word is taken, with an account of the channel or channels through which it reached us. Thus the word 'Canopy' is marked '(F.—Ital.—L.—Gk.)' to be read as 'French, from Italian, from Latin, from Greek;' that is to say, the word is ultimately Greek, whence it was borrowed, first by Latin, secondly by Italian (from the Latin), thirdly by French (from the Italian), and lastly by English (from French). The endeavour to distinguish the exact history of each word in this manner conduces greatly to care and attention, and does much to render the etymology correct. I am not aware that any attempt of the kind has previously been made, except very partially; the usual method, of offering a heap of more or less related words in one confused jumble, is much to be deprecated, and is often misleading¹.

After the exact statement of the source, follow a few quotations. These are intended to indicate the period at which the word was borrowed, or else the usual Middle-English forms. When the word is not a very old one, I have given one or two of the earliest quotations which I have been able to find, though I have here preferred quotations from well-known authors to somewhat earlier ones from more obscure writers. These quotations are intended to exemplify the history of the form of the word, and are frequently of great chronological utility; though it is commonly sufficient to indicate the period of the world's first use within half a century. By way of example, I may observe that canon is not derived from F. canon, but appears in King Ælfred, and was taken immediately from the Latin. I give the reference under Canon, to Ælfred's translation of Beda, b. iv. c. 24, adding 'Bosworth' at the end. This means that I took the reference from Bosworth's Dictionary, and had not, at the moment, the means of verifying the quotation (I now find it is quite correct, occurring on p. 598 of Smith's edition, at l. 13). When no indication of the authority for the quotation is given, it commonly means that I have verified it myself; except in the case of Shakespeare, where I have usually trusted to Dr. Schmidt.

Span. and Port. curso, Lat. cursum,' &c. Here the Latin form should have followed the French. With the Prov., Ital., Span., and Port. forms we have absolutely nothing to do.

A chief feature of the present work, and one which has entailed enormous labour, is that, whenever I cite old forms or foreign words, from which any given English word is derived or with which it is connected, I have actually verified the spellings and significations of these words by help of the dictionaries of which a list is given in the 'Key to the General Plan' immediately preceding the letter A. I have done this in order to avoid two common errors; (1) that of misspelling the words cited¹, and (2) that of misinterpreting them. The exact source or edition whence every word is copied is, in every case, precisely indicated, it being understood that, when no author is specified, the word is taken from the book mentioned in the 'Key.' Thus every statement made may be easily verified, and I can assure those who have had no experience in such investigations that this is no small matter. I have frequently found that some authors manipulate the meanings of words to suit their own convenience, when not tied down in this manner; and, not wishing to commit the like mistake, which approaches too nearly to dishonesty to be wittingly indulged in, I have endeavoured by this means to remove the temptation of being led to swerve from the truth in this particular. Yet it may easily be that fancy has sometimes led me astray in places where there is room for some speculation, and I must therefore beg the reader, whenever he has any doubts, to verify the statements for himself (as, in general, he easily may), and he will then see the nature of the premises from which the conclusions have been drawn. In many instances it will be found that the meanings are given, for the sake of brevity, less fully than they might have been, and that the arguments for a particular view are often far stronger than they are represented to be.

The materials collected by the Philological Society will doubtless decide many debatable points, and will definitely confirm or refute, in many cases, the results here arrived at. It is, perhaps, proper to point out that French words are more often cited from Cotgrave than in their modern forms. Very few good words have been borrowed by us from French at a late period, so that modern French is not of much use to an English etymologist. In particular, I have intentionally disregarded the modern French accentuation. To derive our word recreation from the F. récréation gives a false impression; for it was certainly borrowed from French before the accents were added.

In the case of verbs and substantives (or other mutually related words), considerable pains have been taken to ascertain and to point out whether the verb has been formed from the substantive, or whether, conversely, the substantive is derived from the verb. This often makes a good deal of difference to the etymology. Thus, when Richardson derives the adj. full from the verb to fill, he reverses the fact, and shows that he was entirely innocent of any knowledge of the relative value of the Anglo-Saxon vowels. Similar mistakes are common even in treating of Greek and Latin. Thus, when Richardson says that the Latin laborare is 'of uncertain etymology,' he must have meant the remark to apply to the sb. labor. The etymology of laborare is obvious, viz. from that substantive.

¹ With all this care, mistakes creep in; see the Errata. But I feel sure that they are not very numerous.

The numerous cross-references will enable the student, in many cases, to trace back words to the Aryan root, and will frequently lead to additional information. Whenever a word has a 'doublet,' i. e. appears in a varying form, a note is made of the fact at the end of the article ; and a complete list of these will be found in the Appendix.

The Appendix contains a list of Prefixes, a general account of Suffixes, a List of Aryan Roots, and Lists of Homonyms and Doublets. Besides these, I have attempted to give lists showing the Distribution of the Sources of English. As these lists are far more comprehensive than any which I have been able to find in other books, and are subdivided into classes in a much stricter manner than has ever yet been attempted, I may crave some indulgence for the errors in them.

From the nature of the work, I have been unable to obtain much assistance in it. The mechanical process of preparing the copy for press, and the subsequent revision of proofs, have entailed upon me no inconsiderable amount of labour ; and the constant shifting from one language to another has required patience and attention. The result is that a few annoying oversights have occasionally crept in, due mostly to a brief lack of attention on the part of eye or brain. In again going over the whole work for the purpose of making an epitome of it, I have noticed some of these errors, and a list of them is given in the Errata. Other errors have been kindly pointed out to me, which are also noted in the Addenda ; and I beg leave to thank those who have rendered me such good service. I may also remark that letters have reached me which cannot be turned to any good account, and it is sometimes surprising that a few correspondents should be so eager to manifest their entire ignorance of all philological principles. Such cases are, however, exceptional, and I am very anxious to receive, and to make use of, all reasonable suggestions. The experience gained in writing the first 'part' of the book, from A—D, proved of much service ; and I believe that errors are fewer near the end than near the beginning. Whereas I was at first inclined to trust too much to Brachet's Etymological French Dictionary, I now believe that Scheler is a better guide, and that I might have consulted Littré even more frequently than I have done. Near the beginning of the work, I had no copy of Littré of my own, nor of Palsgrave, nor of some other very useful books ; but experience soon showed what books were most necessary to be added to my very limited collection. In the study of English etymology, it often happens that instantaneous reference to some rather unexpected source is almost an absolute necessity, and it is somewhat difficult to make provision for such a call within the space of one small room. This is the real reason why some references to what may, to some students, be very familiar works, have been taken at second-hand. I have merely made the best use I could of the materials nearest at hand. But for this, the work would have been more often interrupted, and time would have been wasted which could ill be spared.

It is also proper to state that with many articles I am not satisfied. Those that presented no difficulty, and took up but little time, are probably the best and most certain. In very difficult cases, my usual rule has been not to spend more than three hours over one word. During that time, I made the best I could of it, and then let it go¹. I hope it may be understood that my object in making this and other similar statements regarding my difficulties is merely to enable the reader to consult the book with the greater safety, and to enable him to form his own opinion as to how far it is to be trusted. My honest opinion is that those whose philological knowledge is but small may safely accept the results here given, since they may else do worse ; whilst advanced students will receive them with that caution which so difficult a study soon renders habitual.

One remark concerning the printing of the book is worth making. It is common for writers to throw the blame of errors upon the printers, and there is in this a certain amount of truth in some instances. But illegible writing should also receive its fair portion of blame; and it is only just to place the fact on record, that I have frequently received from the press a first rough proof of a sheet of this work, abounding in words taken from a great many languages, in which not a single printer's error occurred of any kind whatever; and many others in which the errors were very trivial and unimportant, and seldom extended to the actual spelling.

I am particularly obliged to those who have kindly given me hints or corrections; Mr. Sweet's account of the word left, and his correction for the word bless, have been very acceptable, and I much regret that his extremely valuable collection of the earliest English vocabularies and other records is not yet published, as it will certainly yield valuable information. I am also indebted for some useful hints to Professor Cowell, and to the late Mr. Henry Nicol, whose knowledge of early French phonology was almost unrivalled. Also to Dr. Stratmann, and the Rev. A. L. Mayhew, of Oxford, for several corrections; to Professor Potwin, of Hudson, Ohio; to Dr. J. N. Grönland, of Stockholm, for some notes upon Swedish; to Dr. Murray, the Rev. O. W. Tancock, and the Rev. D. Silvan Evans, for various notes; and to several other correspondents who have kindly taken a practical interest in the work.

In some portions of the Appendix I have received very acceptable assistance. The preparation of the lists showing the Distribution of Words was entirely the work of others; I have done little more than revise them. For the word-lists from A—Literature, I am indebted to Miss Mantle, of Girton College; and for the lists from Litharge—Reduplicate, to A. P. Allsopp, Esq., of Trinity College, Cambridge. The rest was prepared by my eldest daughter, who also prepared the numerous examples of English words given in the List of Aryan Roots, and the List of Doublets. To Miss F. Whitehead I am indebted for the List of Homonyms.

To all the above-named and to other well-wishers I express my sincere thanks.

But I cannot take leave of a work which has closely occupied my time during the past four years without expressing the hope that it may prove of service, not only to students of comparative philology and of early English, but to all who are interested in the origin, history, and development of the noble language which is the common inheritance of all English-speaking peoples. It is to be expected that, owing to the increased attention which of late years has been given to the study of languages, many of the conclusions at which I have arrived may require important modification or even entire change; but I nevertheless trust that the use of this volume may tend, on the whole, to the suppression of such guesswork as entirely ignores all rules. I trust that it may, at the same time, tend to strengthen the belief that, as in all other studies, true results are only to be obtained by reasonable inferences from careful observations, and that the laws which regulate the development of language, though frequently complicated by the interference of one word with another, often present the most surprising examples of regularity. The speech of man is, in fact, influenced by physical laws, or in other words, by the working of divine power. It is therefore possible to pursue the study of language in a spirit of reverence similar to that in which we study what are called the works of nature; and by aid of that spirit we may gladly perceive a new meaning in the sublime line of our poet Coleridge, that ‘Earth, with her thousand voices, praises God.’

PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION

IN a work which, like the present undertaking, covers so much ground and deals with so many languages, it is very difficult to secure complete accuracy; it can, perhaps, at best be only aimed at. Several errors have been detected by myself, and kind friends have pointed out others. New facts are continually being brought to light; for the science of philology is, at this time, still rapidly progressive. Fortunately, everything tends in the direction of closer accuracy and greater certainty, and we may hope that the number of doubtful points will steadily diminish.

In particular, I am obliged to Mr. H. Wedgwood for his publication entitled 'Contested Etymologies in the Dictionary of the Rev. W. W. Skeat; London, Trübner and Co., 1882.' I have carefully read this book, and have taken from it several useful hints. In reconsidering the etymologies of the words which he treats, I have, in some cases, adopted his views either wholly or in part. In a few instances, he does not really contest what I have said, but notices something that I have left unsaid. For example, I omitted to state that he was the first person to point out the etymology of wanion; unfortunately, I did not observe his article on the subject, and had to rediscover the etymology for myself, with the same result. Hence the number of points on which we differ is now considerably reduced; and I think a further reduction might have been made if he could have seen his way, in like manner, to adopting views from me. I think that some of the etymologies of which he treats cannot fairly be said to be 'contested'; for there are cases in which he is opposed, not only to myself, but to every one else. Thus, with regard to the word avoid, he would have us derive the F. vuide (or vide), empty, from OIIG. wit rather than from the Lat. uiduus; to which I would reply that, in a matter of French etymology, most scholars are quite content to accept the etymology given by Littré, Scheler, and Diez, in a case wherein they are all agreed and see no difficulty in the matter¹.

The List of Errata and Addenda, as given in the first edition, has been almost entirely rewritten. Most of the Errata (especially where they arose from misprints) have been corrected in the body of the work; and I am particularly obliged to Mr. C. E. Doble for several minute corrections, and for his kindness in closely regarding the accentuation of Greek words. The number of Additional Words in the present Addenda is about two hundred, whereas the list of Additional Words in the first edition is little more than fifty. I am much obliged to Mr. Charles Sweet for suggesting several useful additions, and especially for sending me some explanations of several legal terms, such as assart, barrator, cscrow, essoins, and the like. I think that some of the best etymologies in the volume may be found in these additional articles, and I hope the reader will kindly remember to consult this supplement, commencing at p. 777, before concluding that he has seen all that I have to say upon any word he may be seeking for. Of course this supplement remains incomplete; there are literally no bounds to the English language.

I also gladly take the opportunity of gratefully acknowledging the assistance of the Rev. A. L. Mayhew, who not only sent me a large number of suggestions, but has much assisted me by reading the proof-sheets of the Addenda. I also beg leave to thank here the numerous correspondents who have kindly corrected individual words.

I have also made some use of the curious book on Folk-Etymology by the Rev. A. S. Palmer, which is full of erudition and contains a large number of most useful and exact references. The author is not quite sound as to the quantity of the Anglo-Saxon vowels, and has, in some instances, attempted to connect words that are really unrelated; thus, under Hatter, he connects AS. hát, hot, with Goth. hatis, hate. In many places I think the plan of his book has led him into multiplying unduly the number of 'corruptions'; so that caution is needful in consulting the book.

At the time of writing this, we are anxiously expecting the issue of the first part of Dr. Murray's great and comprehensive English Dictionary, founded on the materials collected by the Philological Society; and I suppose it is hardly necessary to add that, if any of my results as to the etymology of such words as he has discussed are found not to agree with his, I at once submit to his careful induction from better materials and to the results of the assistance his work has received from many scholars. I have already had the benefit of some kindly assistance from him, as for example, in the case of the words adjust, admiral, agnail, allay, alloy, almanack, and almond.

Every day's experience helps to show how great and how difficult is the task of presenting results in a form such as modern scientific criticism will accept. Every slip is a lesson in humility, showing how much remains to be learnt. At the same time, I cannot close these few words of preface without hearty thanks to the many students, in many parts of the world, who have cheered me with kindly words and have found my endeavours helpful.

CAMBRIDGE, December 21, 1883.

PREFACE TO THE THIRD EDITION

IN this Third Edition a few changes have been made in cases where the etymology previously given was certainly wrong. More might have been made if the spare time at my disposal had sufficed for making a more careful revision of the work.

CAMBRIDGE, November 18, 1897.

BRIEF NOTES UPON THE LANGUAGES CITED IN THE DICTIONARY

ENGLISH. Words marked (E.) are pure English, and form the true basis of the language. They can commonly be traced back for about a thousand years, but their true origin is altogether pre-historic and of great antiquity. Many of them, such as father, mother, &c., have corresponding cognate forms in Sanskrit, Greek, and Latin. These forms are collateral, and the true method of comparison is by placing them side by side. Thus father is no more 'derived' from the Sanskrit pitā than the Skt. pitā is 'derived' from the English father. Both are descended from a common Indo-germanic type, and that is all. Sometimes Sanskrit is said to be an 'elder sister' to English; the word 'elder' would be better omitted. Sanskrit has doubtless suffered less change, but even twin sisters are not always precisely alike, and, in the course of many years, one may come to look younger than the other. The symbol + is particularly used to call attention to collateral descent, as distinct from borrowing or derivation. English forms belonging to the 'Middle-English' period are marked 'ME.' This period extends, roughly speaking, from about 1200 to 1460, both these dates being arbitrarily chosen. Middle-English consisted of three dialects, Northern, Midland, and Southern; the dialect depends upon the author cited. The spellings of the 'ME.' words are usually given in the actual forms found in the editions referred to, not always in the theoretical forms as given by Stratmann, though these are, etymologically, more correct. Those who possess Stratmann's Dictionary will do well to consult it.

Words belonging to English of an earlier date than about 1150 or 1200 are marked 'AS.', i.e. Anglo-Saxon. Some have asked why they have not been marked as 'OE.', i.e. Oldest English. Against this, there are two reasons. The first is, that 'OE.' would be read as 'Old English,' and this term has been used so vaguely, and has so often been made to include 'ME.' as well, that it has ceased to be distinctive, and has become comparatively useless. The second and more important reason is that, unfortunately, Oldest English and Anglo-Saxon are not coextensive. The former consisted, in all probability, of three main dialects, but the remains of two of these are very scanty. Of Old Northern, we have little left beyond the Northumbrian versions of the Gospels and the glosses in the Durham Ritual: of Old Midland (or Mercian) we possess the Rushworth gloss to St. Matthew's Gospel, the important 'Corpus Glossary,' and the glosses to the 'Vespasian Psalter' (see Sweet's Oldest English Texts); but of Old Southern, or, strictly, of the old dialect of Wessex, the remains are fairly abundant, and these are commonly called Anglo-Saxon. It is therefore proper to use 'AS.' to denote this definite dialect, which, after all, represents only the speech of a particular portion of England. The term is well established and may therefore be kept; else it is not a particularly happy one, since the Wessex dialect was distinct from the Northern or Anglian dialect, and 'Anglo-Saxon' must, for philological purposes, be taken to mean Old English in which Anglian is not necessarily included. Our modern English is mainly Mercian.

Anglo-Saxon cannot be properly understood without some knowledge of its phonology, and English etymology cannot be fairly made out without some notion of the gradations of the Anglo-Saxon vowel-system. For these things, the student must consult Sweet's Anglo-Saxon Reader and the Grammars by Sievers and Wright. Only a few brief hints can be given here.

SHORT VOWELS: a, æ, e, i, o, u, y.

LONG VOWELS: ā, Æ, ē, ī, ō, ū, y.

DIPHTHONGS: ēa, answering to Goth. au; ēo, Goth. iū; also (in early MSS.) ie and īe.

BREAKINGS. The vowel a commonly becomes ea when preceded by g, c, or sc, or when followed by l, r, h, succeeded by a consonant, or by x. Similarly e or i may become eo. The most usual vowel-change is that produced by the occurrence of i (which often disappeared afterwards) in the following syllable. This 'mutation' changes the vowels in row (1) below to the corresponding vowels in row (2) below.

(1) a, e, u, ea, ā, ē, ū, ēā, ēō.

(2) e, i, y, ie, y, ie, y, æ, ē, ī, ie, y, ie, y.

These two rows should be learnt by heart, as a knowledge of them is required at almost every turn. Note that ā usually arises from an original Idg. (Indo-germanic) oi or ai; ēo from Idg. eu; and ēa from an Idg. ou or au.

Modern E. th is represented by AS. þ or ð, used indifferently in the MSS.; see note to Th (p. 638).

Strong verbs are of great importance, and originated many derivatives; these derivatives can be compared with the form of the past tense singular, of the past tense plural, or of the past participle, as well as with that of the infinitive mood. It is therefore necessary to ascertain all these leading forms or 'gradations.' Ex.: bindan, to bind; pt. t. s. band, pl. bundon, pp. bunden. The sb. band or bond exhibits the same 'grade' as the pt. t. s.; whilst the sb. bund-le exhibits that of the pp.

Examples of the 'principal parts' of the seven Strong Conjugations are these.

1. Scinan, to shine; pt. t. scān, pl. scinon, pp. scinen. Base SKEL.
2. Bēodan, to bid; pt. t. bēad, pl. budon, pp. boden. Base BEUD = √ BHEUDH.
3. Bindan, to bind; pt. t. band, pl. bundon; pp. bunden. Base BEND = √ BHENDH.
4. Beran, to bear; pt. t. bær, pl. bæron; pp. boren. Base BER = √ BHER.
5. Melan, to mete; pt. t. mæt, pl. mæton; pp. melen. Base MET = √ MED.
6. Faran, to fare; pt. t. fōr, pl. fōron, pp. faren. Base FAR = POR, from √ PER.
7. Feallan, to fall; pt. t. fēoll, pl. fēollon; pp. feallen. Base FAL = √ SPHAL.

Strong verbs are often attended by secondary or causal verbs; other secondary verbs are formed from substantives. Many of these ended originally in -jan; the j of this suffix often disappears, causing gemination of the preceding consonant. Thus we have þeccan, to thatch (for þac-jan*); biddan, to pray (for bed-jan*); secgan, to say (for sag-jan*); sellan, to give, sell (for sal-jan*); dyppan, to dip (for dup-jan*); setlan, to set (for sat-jan*). With a few exceptions, these are weak verbs, with pt. t. in -ode, -de (-te), and pp. in -od, -d (-t).

Authorities: Grein, Ettmüller, Somner, Bosworth, Leo, Clark Hall, Sweet, Wright's Vocabularies, Napier's Glosses; also the grammars by Sievers and Wright, and Mayhew's Old English Phonology. For many particulars concerning the 'native element' in English, see my Principles of English Etymology, Series I.

OLD LOW GERMAN. Denoted by 'OLowG.' This is a term which I have employed for want of a better. It is meant to include a not very large class of words, the precise origin of which is wrapped in some obscurity. If not precisely English, they come very near it. The chief difficulty about them is that the time of their introduction into English is uncertain. Either they belong to Old Friesian, and were introduced by the Friesians who came over to England with the Saxons, or to some form of Old Dutch or Old Saxon, and may have been introduced from Holland, possibly even in the fourteenth century, when it was not uncommon for Flemings to come here; or indeed, directly, from Hamburg and the other Hanseatic towns. Some of them may yet be found in Anglo-Saxon. I call them Old Low German because they clearly belong to some Old Low German dialect; and I put them in a class together in order to call attention to them, in the hope that their early history may receive further elucidation.

DUTCH. The introduction into English of Dutch words is somewhat important, yet seems to have received but little attention. I am convinced that the influence of Dutch upon English has been much underrated, and a closer attention to this question might throw some light even upon English history. I think I may take the credit of being the first to point this out with sufficient distinctness. History tells us that our relations with the Netherlands have often been rather close. We read of Flemish mercenary soldiers being employed by the Normans, and of Flemish settlements in Wales, 'where (says old Fabyan, I know not with what truth) they remayned a longe whyle, but after, they sprad all Englande ouer.' We may recall the alliance between Edward III and the free towns of Flanders; and the importation by Edward of Flemish weavers. The wool used by the cloth-workers of the Low Countries grew on the backs of English sheep; and other close relations between us and our nearly related neighbours grew out of the brewing-trade, the invention of printing, and the reformation of religion. Caxton spent thirty years in Flanders (where the first English book was printed), and translated the Low German version of Reynard the Fox. Tyndale settled at Antwerp to print his New Testament, and was strangled at Vilvorde. But there was a still closer contact in the time of Elizabeth. Very instructive is Gascoigne's poem on the Fruits of War, where he describes his experiences in Holland; and every one knows that Zutphen saw the death of the beloved Sir Philip Sidney. As to the introduction of cant words from Holland, see Beaumont and Fletcher's play entitled 'The Beggar's Bush.' After Antwerp had been captured by the Duke of Parma, 'a third of the merchants and manufacturers of the ruined city,' says Mr. Green, 'are said to have found a refuge on the banks of the Thames.' All this cannot but have affected our language, and it ought to be accepted, as tolerably certain, that during the fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth centuries, particularly the last, several Dutch and Low German words were introduced into England; and it would be curious to enquire whether, during the same period, several English words did not, in like manner, find currency in the Netherlands. The words which I have collected, as being presumably Dutch, are deserving of special attention.

For the pronunciation of Dutch, see Sweet's Handbook of Phonetics. It is to be noted that the English oo in boor exactly represents the Dutch oe in boer (the same word). Also, that the Dutch sch is very different from the German sound, and is Englished by sc or sk, as in landscape, formerly landskip. The audacity with which English has turned the Dutch ui in bruin (brown) into broo-in is an amazing instance of the influence of spelling upon speech. V and z are common, where English has f and s. The symbol ij is used for double i, and was formerly written y; it is now pronounced like E. i in wine. The standard Old Low German th appears as d; thus, whilst thatch is English, deck is Dutch. Ol appears as ou, as in oud, old, goud, gold, houden, to hold. D between two vowels sometimes disappears, as in weder (for weder*), a wether. The language abounds with frequentative verbs in -eren and -elen, and with diminutive substantives in -je (also -tje, -tje, -tje), a suffix which has been substituted for the obsolete diminutive suffix -ken.

Authorities: Oudemans, Kilian, Hexham, Sewel, Ten Kate, Calisch; dictionary printed by Tauchnitz.

For some account of the Dutch element in English, see my Principles of English Etymology, Series I, ch. xxiv.

OLD FRIESIC. Closely allied to Anglo-Saxon; some English words are rather Friesian than Saxon. Authorities: Richthofen; also (for modern North Friesic) Outzen; (for modern East Friesic) Koolman.

OLD SAXON. The old dialect of Westphalia, and closely allied to Old Dutch. Authority: Heyne.

LOW GERMAN. This name is here especially given to an excellent vocabulary of a Low German dialect, in the work commonly known as the Bremen Wörterbuch. Other authorities: Lübben, Berghaus, Woeste, &c.

SCANDINAVIAN. By this name I denote the Old Norse, introduced into England by the Danes and Northmen who, in the early period of our history, came over to England in great numbers. Often driven back, they continually returned, and on many occasions made good their footing and remained here. Their language is now best represented by Icelandic, owing to the curious fact that, ever since the first colonisation of Iceland by the Northmen about A.D. 874, the language of the settlers has been preserved with but slight changes. Hence, instead of its appearing strange that English words should be borrowed from Icelandic, it must be remembered that this name represents, for philological purposes, the language of those Northmen, who, settling in England, became ancestors of some of the very best men amongst us; and as they settled chiefly in Northumbria and East Anglia, parts of England not strictly represented by Anglo-Saxon, 'Icelandic' or 'Old Norse' (as it is also called) has come to be, it may almost be said, English of the English. In some cases, I derive 'Scandinavian' words from Swedish, Danish, or Norwegian; but no more is meant by this than that the Swedish, Danish, or Norwegian words are the best representatives of the 'Old Norse' that I could find. The number of words actually borrowed from what (in the modern sense) is strictly Swedish or strictly Danish is but small, and they have been duly noted.

Icelandic. Vowels, as in Anglo-Saxon, are both short and long, the long vowels being here marked with a mark of length, as ā, ē, &c. To the usual vowels are added ō, and the diphthongs au, ey, ei; also æ, which is written both for æ and æ, strictly of different origin; also ja, jā, jö, jü, jū. Among the consonants are ð, the voiced th (as in E. thou), and þ, the voiceless th (as in E. thin). D was at one time written both for d and ð. þ, æ, and ö come at the end of the alphabet. There is now no w. The AS. w and hw appear as v and hv. The most usual vowel-change is that which is caused by the occurrence of i (expressed or understood) in the following syllable; this changes the vowels in row (1) below into the corresponding vowels in row (2) below.

(1) a, e, o, u, au, ā, ō, ū, jō, jū.

(2) e, i, y, y, ey, æ, æ, j, j, j.

Assimilation is common; thus dd stands for ðd, or for Goth. ad (= AS. rd); kk, for nk; ll, for lr or lp; nn, for np, nd, or nr; ll, for dl, hl, kl, nl, ndl, þl. Initial sk should be particularly noticed, as many E. words beginning with sc or sk are of Scand. origin; the AS. sc being represented by E. sh. Very remarkable is the loss of v in initial vr = AS. wr; the same loss occurring in modern English. Infinitives end in -a or -ja; verbs in -ja, with very few exceptions, are weak, with pp. ending in -ð, -ðr, -l, -lr, &c.; whereas strong verbs have the pp. in -inn.

1. Skina, to shine; pt. t. s. skein, pl. skinnu; pp. skininn.

2. Bjōða, to bid; pt. t. s. baud, pl. buðu; pp. boðinn.
3. Binda, to bind; pt. t. s. batt [for bānd*], pl. bundu; pp. bundinn.
4. Bera, to bear; pt. t. s. bar, pl. bāru; pp. borinn.
5. Meta, to value [mete out]; pt. t. s. mað, pl. mālu; pp. metinn.
6. Fara, to fare; pt. t. s. för, pl. föru; pp. farinn.
7. Falla, to fall; pt. t. s. föll, pl. fillu; pp. fallinn.

Authorities: Cleasby and Vigfusson, Egilsson, Möbius, Noreen; also (for Norwegian), Aasen, Ross.

Swedish. To the usual vowels add ä, å, ö, which are placed at the end of the alphabet. Diphthongs do not occur, except in foreign words. Qv occurs where English has qu. The Old Swedish w (= AS. w) is now r. The Icelandic and AS. initial p (= th) is replaced by t, as in Danish, not by d, as in Dutch; and our language bears some traces of this peculiarity, as, e.g. in the word hustings (for husthings), and again in the word tight or taut (Icel. þítr).

Assimilation occurs in some words, as in finna (for finda*), to find, drieka (for drinka*), to drink; but it is less common than in Icelandic.

Infinitives end in -a; past participles of strong verbs in -en; weak verbs make the p. t. in -ade, -de, or -te, and the pp. in -ad, -d, or -t.

Authorities: Ihre (Middle Swedish, also called Suio-Gothic, with explanations in Latin); Widegren; Öman; Björkman; Tauchnitz dictionary; Rietz (Swedish dialects, a valuable book, written in Swedish).

For some account of the Scandinavian element in English, see my Principles of English Etymology, Series I, ch. xxiii.

Danish. To the usual vowels add æ and ø, which are placed at the end of the alphabet. The symbol ø is also written and printed as o with a slanting stroke drawn through it; thus ø. Qv is used by Ferrall where English has qu; but is replaced by kv in Larsen, and in Aasen's Norwegian dictionary. V is used where English has w. The Icelandic and AS. initial p (th) is replaced by t, as in Swedish; not by d, as in Dutch. Assimilation occurs in some words, as in drikke, to drink, but is still less common than in Swedish. Thus the Icel. finna, Swed. finna, to find, is finde in Danish. Mand (for mann*), a man, is a remarkable form. We should particularly notice that final k, t, p, and f sometimes becomes g, d, b, and v respectively; as in bog, a book, rag-e, to rake, tag-e, to take; ged, a goat, bid-e, to bite, græd-e, to weep (Lowland Scotch greet); reb, a rope, grib-e, to grip or gripe, knib-e, to nip; liv, life, kniv, knife, viv, wife. Infinitives end in -e; the past participles of strong verbs once ended in -en, but these old forms are not common, being replaced by later forms in -et or -t, throughout the active voice.

Authorities: Ferrall and Repp's Dictionary; Larsen's Dictionary; Molbech (dialects); Kalkar (Middle Danish); Falk and Torp (etymological).

Norwegian. Closely allied to Danish.

Authority: Aasen's Dictionary of Norwegian dialects (written in Danish), with Ross's supplement.

GOthic. The Gothic alphabet, chiefly borrowed from Greek, has been variously transliterated into Roman characters. I have followed the system used in my Mæso-Gothic Dictionary, which I still prefer. It is the same as that used by Massmann, except that I put w for his v, hw for his kv, and hw for his hv, thus turning all his v's into w's, as every true Englishman ought to do. Stamm has the same system as Massmann, with the addition of p for th (needless), and q for hw, which is not pleasant to the eye; so that he writes gab for kwath (i. e. quoth). J corresponds to the E. y. One peculiarity of Gothic must be particularly noted. As the alphabet was partly imitated from Greek, its author used gg and gk (like Gk. γγ, γκ) to represent ng and nk; as in tuggo, tongue, drigkan, to drink. The Gothic vowel-system is particularly simple and clear, and deserving of special attention, as being the best standard with which to compare the vowel-systems of other Teutonic languages. The primary vowels are a, i, u, always short, and ē, ō, always long. Original Germanic z usually appears as i (or as ai before r, h, hw), and Germanic ð as u (or as au before r, h); thus AS. etan, to eat, is Goth. ilan; AS. beran, to bear, is Goth. bairan; AS. geoc, a yoke, is Goth. juk; and AS. word, a word, is Goth. waurd. The diphthongs are ai, au, ei, and iū; the two former being distinguished, theoretically, into ai and di, au and du.

1. Skeinan, to shine; pt. t. s. skain, pl. (1 p.) skinum; pp. skinans.
2. Biudan, to bid; pt. t. s. bauth, pl. budum; pp. budans.

3. Bindan, to bind; pt. t. s. band, pl. bundum; pp. bundans.
4. Bairan, to bear; pt. t. s. bar, pl. bêrum; pp. baurans.
5. Milan, to mete; pt. t. s. mat, pl. mêlum; pp. milans.
6. Faran, to fare; pt. t. s. fôr, pl. fôrum; pp. farans.
7. Haldan, to hold; pt. t. s. haihald, pl. haihaldum; pp. haldans.

OLD HIGH GERMAN. Some remarks upon Old High German are given in the next paragraph (concerning German), but I shall here subjoin, for comparison, examples of the 'principal parts' of the OHG. Strong Verbs.

1. Scinan, to shine; pt. t. s. scin, pl. scinun; pp. giscinan.
2. Biolan, to bid, offer; pt. t. s. bôl, pl. butun; pp. gibolan.
3. Bintan, to bind; pt. t. s. bant, pl. buntun; pp. gibuntan.
4. Beran, to bear; pt. t. s. bar, pl. bârun; pp. giboran.
5. Mezzan, to mete; pt. t. s. maz, pl. mâzun; pp. gimezzan.
6. Faran, to go; pt. t. s. fuor, pl. fuorun; pp. gifaran.
7. Fallan, to fall; pt. t. s. fiat, pl. fiallun; pp. gifallan.

If we now compare all the examples of the vowel-gradations as exhibited in the principal parts of the strong verbs, as seen in Anglo-Saxon, Icelandic, Gothic, and Old High German, respectively, it becomes easy to compile a list of the comparative values of their vowels and diphthongs. In the following table, the first column exhibits the (theoretical) values of the original Teutonic vowels, the second column the Gothic, and so on. Lines 1, 2, 3 are due to the first conjugation, by omitting the gradation of the pt. t. plural; lines 4, 5, 6 are similarly due to the second conjugation; lines 7, 8, 9 to the third; 10, 11, 12, to the fourth; 13, 14, to the first two grades of the fifth; and 15, 16, to the first two grades of the sixth. Line 17 is due to comparing the past tense plurals in conjugations 4 and 5. Line 18 depends upon such instances as that of the AS. blōwan, to bloom as a flower, in which the ō is an original Indo-germanic long vowel, as shown by the cognate Latin flōrere, to flourish.

It will be noticed that Greek and Latin equivalents are given in the above scheme. Corresponding to the 'gradations' in the six Teutonic conjugations of strong verbs we may note similar examples in Greek; viz. as follows.

1. παίθω; perf. t. πέ-ποιθα; 2 aorist ἔ-πίθον.
2. ἐ-λείσσομαι; perf. t. εἰ-λή-λουθα; 2 aorist ἦ-λυθον.
3. τινάω, future tense; τόνος, sb.; perf. pass. τίταμαι.
4. δέρκομαι; perf. t. δέ-δορκα; 2 aorist ἔ-δρακον.
5. πίτομαι; ποτή, sb. Cf. L. sequi, v., socius, sb.
6. ἄγω; whence σπαρ-ηγός, sb. Cf. L. agere; whence ambāges, sb.

It is interesting to note that the E. words ear, hear, berry, are the same as Goth. ausō, hausjan, basī, showing that in such words the E. r is due to original s.

Authorities for Gothic: Gabelentz and Löbe, Diefenbach, Schulze, Massmann, Stamm, Uhlenbeck.

GERMAN. Properly called High-German, to distinguish it from the other Teutonic dialects, which belong to Low-German. This, of all Teutonic languages, is the furthest removed from English, and the one from which fewest words are directly borrowed, though there is a very general popular notion (due to the utter want of philological training so common amongst us) that the contrary is the case. A knowledge of German is often the sole idea by which an Englishman regulates his 'derivations' of Teutonic words; and he is better pleased if he can find the German equivalent of an English word than by any true account of the same word, however clearly expressed. Yet it is well established, by Grimm's law of sound-shiftings, that the German and English consonantal systems are very different. Owing to the replacement of the Old High German p by the Mod. G. b, and other changes, English and German now approach each other more nearly than Grimm's law suggests; but we may still observe the following very striking differences in the dental consonants.

German. t z (ss) d.

These changes are best remembered by help of the words day, tooth, foot, thorn, German tag, zahn, fuss, dorn; and the further comparison of these with the other Teutonic forms is not a little instructive.

Teutonic type	DAGOZ	TANTH	FÖT	THORNOZ, THORNUZ.
Anglo-Saxon	dæg	tōð	fōt	þorn .
Old Friesic	dei	toth	fōt	thorn .
Old Saxon	dag	land	fōt	thorn .
Low German	dag	län	foot	dorn .
Dutch	dag	land	voet	doorn .
Icelandic	dag-r	tönn	föl-r	þorn .
Swedish	dag	land	fot	törne .
Danish	dag	land	fod	tjörn .
Gothic	dag-s	tunthu-s	fōtu-s	thaurnu-s .
German	tag	zahn	fuss	dorn .

The number of words in English that are borrowed directly from German is quite insignificant, and they are nearly all of late introduction. It is more to the purpose to remember that there are, nevertheless, a considerable number of German words that were borrowed indirectly, viz. through the French.

Authorities: Schade, Kluge, Flügel, E. Müller. There is a good MHG. Dictionary by Lexer, another by Benecke, Müller, and Zarncke; and many more. For an account of the phonology, see Prof. Wright's Old High German Primer, and his German Grammar.

FRENCH. The influence of French upon English is too well known to require comment. But the method of derivation of French words from Latin or German is often very difficult, and requires the greatest care. There are numerous French words in quite common use, such as aïse, ease, trancher, to cut, which have never yet been clearly solved; and the solution of many others is highly doubtful. Latin words often undergo the most curious transformations, as may be seen by consulting Brachet's or Darmesteter's or Schwan's Historical Grammar. What are called 'learned' words, such as mobile, which is merely a Latin word with a French ending, present no difficulty; but the 'popular' words in use since the first formation of the language, are distinguished by three peculiarities: (1) the continuance of the tonic accent, (2) the suppression of the short vowel, (3) the loss of the medial consonant. The last two peculiarities tend to disguise the origin, and require much attention. Thus, in the Latin bonitātem, the short vowel i, near the middle of the word, is suppressed; whence F. bonté, E. bounty. And again, in the Latin ligāre, to bind, the medial consonant g, standing between two vowels, is lost, producing the F. lier, whence E. liable.

The result is a great tendency to compression, of which an extraordinary but well-known example is the Late Latin zelāticum, reduced to edage by the suppression of the short vowel i, and again to eage, aage by the loss of the medial consonant d; hence F. âge, E. age.

One other peculiarity is too important to be passed over. With rare exceptions, the substantives (as in all the Romance languages) are formed from the accusative case of the Latin, so that it is commonly a mere absurdity to cite the Latin nominative, when the form of the accusative is absolutely necessary to show how the French word arose. On this account, the form of the accusative is usually given, as in the case of caution, from L. cautiōnem, and in numberless other instances.

French may be considered as being a wholly unoriginal language, founded on debased Latin; but it must at the same time be remembered that, as history teaches us, a certain part of the language is necessarily of Celtic origin, and another part is necessarily Frankish, that is, Old High German. It has also borrowed words freely from Old Low German dialects, from Scandinavian (due to the Normans), and in later times, from Italian, Spanish, &c., and even from English and many entirely foreign languages.

Authorities: Cotgrave, Palsgrave, Littré, Scheler, Diez, Hatzfeld, Brachet, Burguy, Roquefort, Bartsch, &c. See also my Principles of English Etymology, Series II; especially chapter vi, for the phonology of Anglo-French, and chapters x and xi for the phonology of Central (or Parisian) French.

OTHER ROMANCE LANGUAGES. The other Romance languages, i.e. languages of Latin origin, are Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, Provençal, Romansch, and Wallachian. English contains words borrowed from the first four of these, but there is not much in them that needs special remark. The Italian and Spanish forms are often useful for comparison with (and consequent restoration of) the crushed and abbreviated Old French forms. Italian is remarkable for assimilation, as in ammirare (for admirare), to admire, ditto (for dicto), a saying, whence F. ditto. Spanish, on the other hand, dislikes assimilation, and carefully avoids double consonants; the only consonants that can be doubled are c, n, r, besides ll, which is sounded as E. l followed by y consonant, and is not considered as a double letter. The Spanish ñ is sounded as E. n followed by y consonant, and occurs in dueña, Englished as duenna. Spanish is also remarkable as containing many Arabic (Moorish) words, some of which have found their way into English. The Italian infinitives commonly end in -are, -ere, -ire, with corresponding past participles in -ato, -uto, -ito. Spanish infinitives commonly end in -ar, -er, -ir, with corresponding past participles in -ado, -ido, -ido. In all the Romance languages, substantives are most commonly formed, as in French, from the Latin accusative. See further in my Principles of English Etymology, Series II; ch. xiv (on the Italian element); ch. xv (on the Spanish element); and ch. xvi (on the Portuguese element).

CELTIC. Words of Celtic origin are marked '(C.)'. This was formerly a particularly slippery subject to deal with, for want of definite information as to its older forms in a conveniently accessible arrangement; but the contribution by Whitley Stokes to the 4th edition of Fick's Vergleichende Wörterbuch is now of great assistance, and Macbain's Etymological Dictionary of Gaelic is also very useful. That English has borrowed a few words from Celtic cannot be doubted, but we must take care not to multiply the number of these unduly. Again, 'Celtic' is merely a general term, and in itself means nothing definite, just as 'Teutonic' and 'Romance' are general terms. To prove that a word is Celtic, we must first show that the word is borrowed from one of the Celtic languages, as Irish, Gaelic, Welsh, Cornish, or Breton, or that it is of a form which, by the help of these languages, can be fairly presumed to have existed in the Celtic of an early period. The chief difficulty lies in the fact that Welsh, Irish, Cornish, and Gaelic have all borrowed English words at various periods, and Gaelic has certainly also borrowed some words from Scandinavian, as history tells us must have been the case. We gain, however, some assistance by comparing all the languages of this class together, and again, by comparing them with Latin, Greek, Sanskrit, &c., since the Celtic consonants often agree with these, and at the same time differ from Teutonic. Thus the word bard is Celtic, since it only appears in Welsh, Irish, and Gaelic; and again, the word down (2), a fortified hill, is Celtic, because it may be compared with the AS. tūn, a Celtic d answering to AS. l. On the other hand, the W. hōfo, to hover, is nothing but the common ME. hoven, to tarry, to hover, which appears to be of native E. origin. The Lectures on Welsh Philology by Prof. Sir John Rhys give a clear and satisfactory account of the values of Irish and Welsh letters as compared with other Indo-germanic languages.

Some Celtic words have come to us through French, for which assistance is commonly to be had from Breton. A few words in other Teutonic languages besides English are probably of Celtic origin.

RUSSIAN. This language belongs to the Slavonic branch of the Aryan languages, and, though the words borrowed from it are very few, it is frequently of assistance in comparative philology, as exhibiting a modern form of language allied to the Old Church Slavonic. My principal business here is to explain the system of transliteration which I have adopted, as it is one which I made out for my own convenience, with the object of avoiding the use of diacritical marks. The following is the Russian alphabet, with the Roman letters which I use to represent it. It is sufficient to give the small letters only.

Russian Letters: а б в г д ж з и к л м н о п р с т у ф х ц ч ш

Roman Letters: a b v g d e(é) j z i i k l m n o p r s t u f kh ts ch sh

Roman Letters: shch ' ui (e) ie é iu ia ph y

This transliteration is not the best possible, but it will suffice to enable any one to verify the words cited in this work by comparing them with a Russian dictionary. It is necessary to add one or two remarks.

The symbol ъ only occurs at the end of a word or syllable, and only when that word or syllable ends in a consonant; it is not sounded, but throws a greater stress upon the consonant, much as if it were doubled; I denote it therefore merely by an apostrophe. The symbol ь most commonly occurs at the end of a word or syllable, and may be treated, in general, as a mute letter, like the final e in French. э only occurs at the beginning of words, and is not common. е may be represented by e at the beginning of a word, or otherwise by é, if necessary, since it cannot then be confused with а. It is to be particularly noted that й is to have its French value, not the English; seeing that ж has just the sound of the French j, it is here so written. и and і are distinguished by the way in which they occur; іе can be written iž, to distinguish it from іе = і. о, which is rare, can be written ph, to distinguish it from ѳ, or f; the sound is all one. By kh, sh, I mean the German guttural ch, which comes very near to the sound of the letter; but the combinations ts, ch, sh, shch are all as in English. ы, or ui, somewhat resembles the French oui. The combinations іе, іи, іа, are to be read with і as English y, i.e. yea, you, yaa. ѱ, or y, pronounced as E. es, is of slight consequence, being rare. I do not recommend the scheme for general use, but only give it as the one which I have used.

The Russian and Slavonic consonants agree with Sanskrit, Greek, and Latin rather than with Teutonic. The same may be said of Lithuanian, which is a very well preserved language, and often of great use in comparative philology. The infinitive mood of Russian regular verbs ends in -ate, -iate, -iele, -ile, -ole, -ule, all with final mute e; that of some irregular verbs in -che, or -ti. In Lithuanian, the characteristic suffix of the infinitive is -ti.

The best authority is the Comparative Etymological Dictionary of the Slavonic Languages by F. Miklosich.

SANSKRIT. In transliterating Sanskrit words, I follow the scheme given in Benfey's Dictionary, with slight modifications. For च, I print c, as in Benfey and Uhlenbeck, instead of ś, as in Monier Williams's Grammar. There is this advantage about the symbol c, viz. that it reminds the student that this sibilant is due to an original č. I also follow Uhlenbeck in printing r (instead of ṛ, as in Benfey) for ऋ; but retain sh for श, which Uhlenbeck denotes by ś. I also follow him in writing ñ for ञ (Benfey's ñ). He also employs c and ch for Benfey's ch and chh; but I have not adopted these two changes.

Thus the complete alphabet is represented by a, ā, i, ī, u, ū, ṛ, ṝ, l, ē, ai, ô, au; gutturals, k, kh, g, gh, ŋ; palatals, ch, chh, j, jh, ñ; cerebrals, t, t̄h, ḍ, ḍh, ṇ; dentals, d, dh, d̄h, n; labials, p, ph, b, bh, m; semivowels, y, r, l, v; sibilants, ś, sh, s; aspirate, h. Add the nasal symbol m̄, and the final aspirate, h̄.

It is sometimes objected that the symbols ch, chh, are rather clumsy, especially when occurring as chchh; but as they are perfectly definite and cannot be mistaken, the mere appearance to the eye cannot much matter. Some write c and ch, and consequently chh instead of chchh; but what is gained in appearance is lost in distinctness; since च is certainly our ch, whilst c gives the notion of E. c in can.

The scientific order in which the letters of the Sanskrit alphabet is arranged should be observed.

There are a few points about the values of the Sanskrit letters too important to be omitted. The following short notes will be found useful.

The Skt. r is a sonant, and is perfectly distinct from r. Thus rch, to shine, is distinct from rich, to leave. Other languages sometimes preserve a better form than Skt.; thus the $\sqrt{\text{AG}}$, to drive, gives Lat. ag-ere, Gk. áyew, and (by regular change from g to k) Icelandic ak-a; but the Skt. is aj, a weakened form in which the g has been palatalised.

The chief difficulty in comparing the values of the consonants in different Indo-germanic languages lies in dealing with the guttural sounds. It has been ascertained that there are actually three distinct sets of gutturals, distinguished by difference of treatment in some of the languages belonging to the family. They are called by Brugmann the palatals, the pure velars, and the labio-velars; and by others the palatal, middle, and labialised velar gutturals. I distinguish the first set by the symbols GH, G, K; the second, by G(w)H, G(w), Q; and the third, by GwH, Gw, Qw.

It is not a little remarkable that, in Greek, Latin, and Celtic (all of which keep the original k-sound in the word for 'hundred,' as Greek ékarón, L. centum, Welsh cant) the middle gutturals are treated exactly like the palatals; whilst, on the contrary, in Sanskrit, Persian, Lithuanian, and Slavonic (all of which have an s-sound in the same word, as Skt. śalam, Pers. sad, Lith. szimtas, Russ. sto) the middle gutturals are treated like the labialised velars. Teutonic belongs to the former set, and goes with Greek, Latin, and Celtic. We may roughly characterise the two sets as Western and Eastern respectively.

Dental Series. The easiest series to deal with is that of the dentals; so it will be taken first. It will be noticed that the Germanic languages shift an original DH, D, or T to D, T, and TH respectively. This is called 'consonantal sound-shifting,' or simply 'sound-shifting'; otherwise known as 'Grimm's Law.'

Labial Series. In the same way, the Germanic languages shift an original BH, B, or P, to B, P, F respectively; by the same Law. The following table exhibits the results.

USUAL CORRESPONDENCES OF DENTAL AND LABIAL SOUNDS.

INDG.	SKT.	SLAV.	LITH.	GK.	LAT.	IRISH.	GOth.	AS.	TEUT.

T	t	t	t	τ	t	t, th	th [d]	p [d]	TH
BH	bh	b	b	φ	f, h (b)	b (m)	b	b	B
B	b	b	b	β	b	b	p	p	P
P	p	p	p	π	p	...	f [b]	f	F

The Skt. dh answers to Lat. f initially; the d, b only occur medially. The Irish th is an aspirated t, not the E. th. The AS. p is only a symbol for the sound of th, as in E. thorn. The appearance of L. l for d is remarkable; thus L. lingua represents an older dingua; and as L. d corresponds to AS. t, it is cognate with E. tongue. The Skt. ðh corresponds to L. f or h initially; medially, to b. The Gothic [ð] and Gothic and AS. [d] within square brackets are due to what is known as 'Verner's Law'; the th became d, and the f became b whenever the vowel next preceding these consonants did not, according to the original Indo-germanic system of accentuation, bear the principal accent of the word. See Wright's Gothic Primer, § 119.

Guttural Series. The usual correspondence of guttural sounds in the principal Indo-germanic languages is here given. It has been explained above that there are three sets of gutturals. Observe the identity of treatment in the second and third sets of rows to the left of the dark line, and in the first and second sets to the right of it.

NON-ARYAN LANGUAGES : HEBREW. The Hebrew words in English are not very numerous, whilst at the same time they are tolerably well known, and the corresponding Hebrew words can, in general, be easily found. I have therefore contented myself with denoting the alphabet beth, gimel, daleth, &c. by b, g, d, h, v, z, kh, l, y, k, l, m, n, s, ' , p, ts, q, r, sh or s, t. This gives the same symbol for samech and sin, but this difficulty is avoided by making a note of the few instances in which samech occurs; in other cases, sin is meant. So also with teth and tau; unless the contrary is said, tau is meant. This might have been avoided, had the words been more numerous, by the use of š and ṭ for samech and teth. I put kh for cheth, to denote that the sound is guttural, not E. ch. I denote ayin by the mark ' . The other letters can be readily understood. The vowels are denoted by a, e, i, o, u, ā, ē, ī, ō, ū.

ARABIC. The Arabic alphabet is important, being also used for Persian, Turkish, Hindustani, and Malay. But as the letters are variously transliterated in various works, it seemed to be the simplest plan to use the spellings given in Richardson's Arabic and Persian Dictionary (with very slight modifications), or in Marsden's Malay Dictionary; and, in order to prevent any mistake, to give, in every instance, the number of the page in Richardson or Marsden, or the number of the column in Palmer's Persian Dictionary; so that, if in any instance, it is desired to verify the word cited, it can readily be done. Richardson's system is rather vague, as he uses t to represent ت and ط (and also the occasional ث); also s to represent س and ص; also h for ح and ه; z for ز; kh and ظ; k for ق and ك; and he denotes ayin by the Arabic character. I have got rid of one ambiguity by using q (instead of k) for ق; and for ayin I have put the mark ' , as in Palmer's Persian Dictionary. In other cases, the reader can easily tell which t, s, h, or z is meant, if it happens to be an initial letter (when it is the most important), by observing the number of the page (or column) given in the reference to Richardson's or Palmer's Dictionary. Thus in Richardson's Dictionary, pp. 349-477 contain ت; pp. 960-981 contain ط; pp. 477-487 contain ث; pp. 795-868 contain س; pp. 924-948 contain ص; pp. 548-588 contain ح; pp. 1660-1700 contain ه; pp. 705-712 contain ز; pp. 764-794 contain ج; pp. 949-960 contain ض; and pp. 981-984 contain ظ. In Palmer's Dictionary, the same letters are distinguished as t (coll. 121-159); f (coll. 408-416); s (coll. 160, 161); s (coll. 331-371); š (coll. 396-405); h (coll. 191-207); h (coll. 692-712); ž (coll. 283-287); z (coll. 314-330); g (coll. 405-408); and š (coll. 416-418). Palmer gives the complete alphabet in the form a [ā, i, &c.], b, p, t, š, j, ch, h, kh, d, ž, r, z, sh, s, sh, š, z, f, ž, 'gh, f, k [which I have written as q], k, g, l, m, n, w, h, y. It deserves to be added that Turkish has an additional letter sāghir nūn, which I denote by n̄, occurring in the word yeh̄i, which helps to form the E. word janisary.

In words derived from Hindi, Hindustani, Chinese, &c., I give the page of the dictionary where the word may be found, or a reference to some authority. See, in particular, the List of Books referred to, at p. xxx.

CANONS FOR ETYMOLOGY

In the course of the work, I have been led to adopt the following canons, which merely express well-known principles, and are nothing new. Still, in the form of definite statements, they are worth giving.

1. Before attempting an etymology, ascertain the earliest form and use of the word; and observe chronology.
2. Observe history and geography; borrowings are due to actual contact.
3. Observe phonetic laws, especially those which regulate the mutual relation of consonants in the various Indogermanic languages, at the same time comparing the vowel-sounds.
4. In comparing two words, A and B, belonging to the same language, of which A contains the lesser number of syllables, A must be taken to be the more original word, unless we have evidence of contraction or other corruption.
5. In comparing two words, A and B, belonging to the same language and consisting of the same number of syllables, the older form can usually be distinguished by observing the sound of the principal vowel.
6. Strong verbs, in the Teutonic languages, and the so-called 'irregular verbs' in Latin, are commonly to be considered as primary, other related forms being taken from them.
7. The whole of a word, and not a portion only, ought to be reasonably accounted for; and, in tracing changes of form, any infringement of phonetic laws is to be regarded with suspicion.
8. Mere resemblances of form and apparent connexion in sense between languages which have different phonetic laws or no necessary connexion are commonly a delusion, and are not to be regarded.
9. When words in two different languages are more nearly alike than the ordinary phonetic laws would allow, there is a strong probability that one language has borrowed the word from the other. Truly cognate words ought not to be too much alike.
10. It is useless to offer an explanation of an English word which will not also explain all the cognate forms.

These principles, and other similar ones well known to comparative philologists, I have tried to observe. Where I have not done so, there is a chance of a mistake. Corrections can only be made by a more strict observance of the above canons.

A few examples will make the matter clearer.

1. The word surloin or sirloin is often said to be derived from the fact that the loin was knighted as Sir Loin by Charles II, or (according to Richardson) by James I. Chronology makes short work of this statement; the word being in use long before James I was born. It is one of those unscrupulous inventions with which English 'etymology' abounds, and which many people admire because they are 'so clever.' The number of those who literally prefer a story about a word to a more prosaïc account of it, is only too large.

As to the necessity for ascertaining the oldest form and use of a word, there cannot be two opinions. Yet this primary and all-important rule is continually disregarded, and men are found to rush into 'etymologies' without the slightest attempt at investigation or any knowledge of the history of the language, and think nothing of deriving words which exist in Anglo-Saxon from German or Italian. They merely 'think it over,' and take up with the first fancy that comes to hand, which they expect to be 'obvious' to others because they were themselves incapable of doing better; which is a poor argument indeed. It would be easy to cite some specimens which I have noted, but it is hardly necessary¹. I will rather relate my experience, viz. that I have frequently set out to find the etymology of a word without any preconceived ideas about it, and usually found that, by the time its earliest use and sense had been fairly traced, the etymology presented itself unasked.

2. The history of a nation generally accounts for the constituent parts of its language. When an early English word is compared with Hebrew or Coptic, as used to be done in the old editions of Webster's dictionary, history is set at defiance; and it was a good deed to clear the later editions of all such rubbish. As to geography, there must always be an intelligible geographical contact between races that are supposed to have borrowed words from one another; and this is particularly true of olden times, when travelling was less common. Old French did not borrow words from Portugal, nor did Old English borrow words from Prussia, much less from Finnish or Esthonian or Coptic, &c., &c. Yet there are people who still remain persuaded that Whitsunday is derived, of all things, from the German Pfingsten.

3. Few delusions are more common than the comparison of L. cūra with F. care, of Gk. ἐλός with

¹ I cite a few of these in my Principles of English Etymology, Series II, ch. xxv.—'On some False Etymologies.'

E. whole, and of Gk. χάρις with E. charity. I dare say I myself believed in these things for many years, owing to that utter want of any approach to any philological training, for which England in general has long been so remarkable. Yet a very slight (but honest) attempt at understanding the English, the Latin, and the Greek alphabets soon shows these notions to be untenable. The E. care, AS. ccaru, meant originally sorrow, which is only a secondary meaning of the Latin word; it never meant, originally, attention or painstaking. But this is not the point at present under consideration. Phonetically, the AS. c and the L. c, when used initially, do not correspond; for where Latin writes c at the beginning of a word, AS. has h, as in L. cil-āre, related to AS. hel-an, to hide. Again, the AS. ea, before r following, stands for original a, ccaru, answering to an older caru. But the L. cūra, Old Latin coira, is spelt with a long ū, originally a diphthong, which cannot answer exactly to an original a. It remains that these words both contain the letter r in common, which is not denied; but this is a slight ground for the supposed equivalence of words of which the primary senses were different. The fact of the equivalence of L. c to AS. h, is commonly known as being due to Grimm's law. The popular notions about 'Grimm's law' are extremely vague. Many imagine that Grimm made the law not many years ago, since which time Latin and Anglo-Saxon have been bound to obey it. But the word law is then strangely misapprehended; it is only a law in the sense of an observed fact. Latin and Anglo-Saxon were thus differentiated in times preceding the earliest record of the latter, and the difference might have been observed in the eighth century if any one had had the wits to observe it. When the difference has once been perceived, and all other AS. and Latin equivalent words are seen to follow it, we cannot consent to establish an exception to the rule in order to compare a single (supposed) pair of words which do not agree in the vowel-sound, and did not originally mean the same thing.

As to the Gk. ἄλος, the aspirate (as usual) represents an original s, so that ἄλος answers to Skt. sarva-, all, L. salvus, safe, unhurt. But the AS. hāl (which is the old spelling of whole) has for its initial letter an h, answering to Gk. κ. As to χάρις, the initial letter is χ, a guttural sound answering to Lat. h or f, and it is, in fact, allied to L. horlāri. But in charity, the ch is French, due to a peculiar pronunciation of the Latin c, and the F. charité is of course due to the L. acc. cāritātem, whence also Ital. caritate or carità, Span. caridad, all from L. cārus, with long a. When we put χάρις and cārus side by side, we find that the initial letters are different, that the vowels are different, and that, just as in the case of ccaru and cūra, the sole resemblance is, that they both contain the letter r! It is not worth while to pursue the subject further. Those who are confirmed in their prejudices and have no guide but the car (which they neglect to train), will remain of the same opinion still; but some beginners may perhaps take heed, and if they do, will see matters in a new light. To all who have acquired any philological knowledge, these things are wearisome.

4. Suppose we take two Latin words such as cāritās and cārus. The former has a stem cār-i-lāt-; the latter has a stem cār-o-, which may very easily turn into cār-i-. We are perfectly confident that the adjective came first into existence, and that the sb. was made out of it by adding a suffix; and this we can tell by a glance at the words, by the very form of them. It is a rule in all Indogermanic languages that words started from monosyllabic roots or bases, and were built up by supplying new suffixes at the end; and, the greater the number of suffixes, the later the formation. When apparent exceptions to this law present themselves, they require especial attention; but as long as the law is followed, it is all in the natural course of things. Simple as this canon seems, it is frequently not observed; the consequence being that a word A is said to be derived from B, whereas B is its own offspring. The result is a reasoning in a circle, as it is called; we go round and round, but there is no progress upward and backward, which is the direction in which we should travel. Thus Richardson derives chine from 'F. echine,' and this from 'F. echiner, to chine, divide, or break the back of (Cotgrave), probably from the AS. cinan, to chine, chink, or rive.' From the absurdity of deriving the 'F. echiner' from the 'AS. cinan' he might have been saved at the outset, by remembering that, instead of echine being derived from the verb echiner, it is obvious that echiner, to break the back of, is derived from echine, the back, as Cotgrave certainly meant us to understand; see eschine, eschiner in Cotgrave's Dictionary. Putting eschine and eschiner side by side, the shorter form is the more original.

5. This canon, requiring us to compare vowel-sounds, is a little more difficult, but it is extremely important. In many dictionaries it is utterly neglected, whereas the information to be obtained from vowels is often extremely certain; and few things are more beautifully regular than the occasionally complex, yet often decisive manner in which, especially in the Teutonic languages, one vowel-sound is deduced from another. The very fact that the AS. f is a modification of ō tells us at once that fēdan, to feed, is a derivation of fōd, food; and that to derive food from feed is simply impossible. In the same way the vowel e in the verb to set owes its very existence to the vowel a in the past tense of the verb to sit; and so on in countless instances.

The other canons require no particular comment.

KEY TO THE GENERAL PLAN OF THE ETYMOLOGICAL DICTIONARY

EACH article is arranged, as far as seemed advisable, according to a uniform scheme, and the following details will explain the nature of the information to be found in this work.

§ 1. The words selected. The Word-list contains all the primary words of most frequent occurrence in modern literature; and, when their derivatives are included, supplies a tolerably complete vocabulary of the language. I have been largely guided in the choice by the work known as the Student's English Dictionary, by John Ogilvie, as edited by Charles Annandale (1895). A few unusual words have been included on account of their occurrence in familiar passages of standard authors.

§ 2. The Definitions. These are given in the briefest possible form, chiefly for the purpose of identifying the word and showing the part of speech.

§ 3. The Language. The language to which each word belongs is distinctly marked in every case by means of letters within marks of parenthesis immediately following the definition. In the case of words derived from French, a note is (in general) also made as to whether the French word is of Latin, Celtic, German, or Scandinavian origin. The symbol '—' signifies 'derived from.' Thus the remark '(F.—L.)' signifies 'a word introduced into English from French, the French word itself being of Latin origin.' The letters used are to be read as follows.

Arab. = Arabic. AF. = Anglo-French. C. = Celtic, used as a general term for Irish, Gaelic, Welsh, Breton, Cornish, &c. E. = English. F. = French. G. = German. Gk. = Greek. L. or Lat. = Latin. Scand. = Scandinavian, used as a general term for Icelandic, Swedish, Danish, &c. Skt. = Sanskrit. W. = Welsh.

For other abbreviations, see § 8 below.

§ 4. The History. Next follows a brief account of the history of the word, showing (approximately) the time of its introduction into the language; or, if a native word, the Middle-English form or forms of it, with a few quotations and references. This is an important feature of the work, and (I believe) to some extent a new one. In attempting thus, as it were, to date each word, I must premise that I often cite Shakespeare in preference to a slightly earlier writer whose writings are less familiar; that an attempt has nevertheless been made to indicate the date within (at least) a century; and lastly, that in some cases I may have failed to do this, owing to imperfect information or knowledge. In general, sufficient is said, in a very brief space, to establish the earlier uses of each word, so as to clear the way for a correct notion of its origin.

§ 5. The References. A large number of the references are from Richardson's Dictionary, denoted by the symbol '(R.)' Some from Todd's Johnson, sometimes cited merely as 'Todd.' Many from Stratmann's Old English Dictionary, or the still better (but unfinished) work by Mätzner; these are all 'ME,' i.e. Middle-English forms. Many others are due to my own reading. I have, in very many instances, given exact references, often at the expenditure of much time and trouble. Thus Richardson cites 'The Romaunt of the Rose' at large, but I have given, in almost every case, the exact number of the line. Similarly, he cites the Fairy Queen merely by the book and canto, omitting the stanza. Inexact quotations are comparatively valueless, as they cannot be verified, and may be false.

§ 6. The Etymology. Except in a few cases where the etymology is verbally described, the account of it begins with the symbol —, which is always to be read as 'directly derived from,' or 'borrowed from,' wherever it occurs. A succession of these symbols occurs whenever the etymology is traced back through another language. The order is always backward, from old to still older forms.

§ 7. Cognate Forms. Cognate forms are frequently introduced by way of further illustration, though they form, strictly speaking, no part of the direct history of the etymology. But they frequently throw so much light upon the word that it has always been usual to cite them; though no error is more common than to mistake a word that is merely cognate with, or allied to, the English one for the very original of it! For example, many people will quote the German word acker as if it accounted for, or is the original of the English acre, whereas it is (like the Lat. ager, or the Icelandic akr) merely a parallel form.' It is remarkable that many beginners are accustomed to cite German words in particular (probably as being the only continental-Teutonic idiom with which they are acquainted) in order to account for English words; the fact being that no Teutonic language has contributed so little to our own tongue, which is, in the main, a Low-German dialect as distinguished from that High-German one to which the specific name 'German' is commonly applied. In order to guard the learner from this error of confusing cognate words with such as are immediately concerned with the etymology, the symbol \dagger is used to mark off such words. This symbol is, in every case, to be read as 'not derived from, but cognate with.' The symbol has, in fact, its usual algebraical value, i. e. plus, or additional; and indicates additional information to be obtained from the comparison of cognate forms.

§ 8. Symbols and Etymological References. The symbols used are such as to furnish, in every case, an exact reference to some authority. Thus the symbol 'Ital.' does not mean merely Italian, but that the word has actually been verified by myself (and may be verified by any one else) as occurring in Meadows's Italian Dictionary. This is an important point, as it is common to cite foreign words at random, without the slightest hint as to where they may be found; a habit which leads to false spellings and even to gross blunders. And, in order that the student may the more easily verify these words (as well as to curb myself from citing words of unusual occurrence), I have expressly preferred to use common and cheap dictionaries, or such as came most readily to hand, except where I refer by name to such excellent books as Rietz's Svenskt Dialekt-Lexicon. The following is a list of these symbols, with their exact significations.

AS.—Anglo-Saxon, or Wessex English in its earliest form. The references are to Grein, Bosworth, or Lye, as cited; or to some AS. work, as cited. All these words are authorized, unless the given form is marked by an asterisk preceding it, to denote that it is theoretical.

Bret.—Breton; as in Le Gonidec's Dictionary, ed. 1821.

Corn.—Cornish; as in Williams's Dictionary, ed. 1865.

Dan.—Danish; as in Ferrall and Repp's Dictionary, ed. 1861, or in Larsen (1897).

ME.—Middle English; i. e. English from about A.D. 1200 to about A.D. 1500. See § 5 above.

F.—French, as in the Dict. by Hamilton and Legros. The reference 'Cot.' is to Cotgrave's French Dictionary, ed. 1660; also denoted by MF. (Middle French). Wherever OF. (= Old French) occurs, the reference is to Burguy's Glossaire, unless the contrary be expressly stated, in which case it is (in general) to Godefroy, or to Roquefort.

Gael.—Gaelic; as in Macleod and Dewar's Dictionary, ed. 1839.

G.—German; as in Flügel's Dictionary, ed. 1861.

Gk.—Greek; as in Liddell and Scott's Lexicon, ed. 1849.

Goth.—Moeso-Gothic; as in Stamm's Ulfilas, ed. 1878.

W.—Welsh; as in Spurrell's Dictionary, ed. 1861.

For a complete list of authorities, see p. xxx. The above includes only such as have been used too frequently to admit of special reference to them by name.

Other abbreviations.—Such abbreviations as 'adj.' = adjective, 'pl.' = plural, and the like, will be readily understood. I may particularly mention the following. Cf. = confer, i. e. compare. pt. t. = past tense. pp. = past participle. q. v. = quod vide, i. e. which see. s. v. = sub verbo, i. e. under the word in question. tr. = translation, or translated. b. (or bk.) = book. c. (or ch., or cap.) = chapter; sometimes = canto. l. = line s. = section. st. = stanza. A. V. = Authorized Version of the Bible (1611).

§ 9. The Roots. In some cases, the words have been traced back to their original Indogermanic roots. This has only been attempted, for the most part, in cases where the subject scarcely admits of a doubt; it being unadvisable to hazard too many guesses, in the present state of our knowledge. The root is denoted by the symbol √, to be read as 'root.' I have here most often referred to Brugmann, Uhlenbeck, Prellwitz, or Kluge.

§ 10. Derivatives. The symbol 'Der.' i. e. Derivatives, is used to introduce forms derived from the primary word, or from the same source. For an account of the various suffixes, see Morris's Historical Outlines of English Accidence, and Haldemann's Affixes to English Words; or, for the purpose of comparative philology, consult Brugmann.

A, the indef. article; see An.

A, prefix, has at least twelve different values in English. a. Representative words are (1) adown; (2) aloot; (3) along; (4) arise; (5) achieve; (6) avert; (7) amend; (8) alas; (9) alysis; (10) ado; (11) aware; (12) avast. β. The full form of these values may be represented by of, on, and-, ā-, ad-, ab-, ex-, he-, an-, at-, ge-, hand. γ. This may be illustrated by means of the examples given; cf. (1) AS. ofdine; (2) on foot; (3) AS. andlang; (4) AS. ā-risan; (5) verb from F. ā chef, l. ad caput; (6) L. āuierre, for auertere; (7) F. amender, from L. emendāre, for emendāre; (8) F. hélas, where hé is interjectional; (9) Gk. ābuastos, for āv-buastos; (10) for at do, i.e. to do; (11) for ME. ywar, AS. gwar; (12) avist, Dutch houd vast, hold fast. These prefixes are discussed at greater length under the headings Of, On, Along, Arise, Ad-, Ab-, (1), Ex-, Alas, Un-, (1), At, Aware, Avast; each being given in its proper place in this Dictionary. ¶ Prefix a (5) really has two values: (a) French, as in avalanche; (b) Latin, as in astrigent; but the source is the same, viz. L. ad. Similarly, prefix a (6) really has two values: (a) French, as in ME. a-suiten, now spell assaid; (b) Latin, as in avert, avocation; the source being in L. ab. ¶ In words discussed below, the prefix has its number assigned in accordance with the above scheme, where necessary. AARDVARK, the S. African ground-hog. (Cape Du.) Lit. 'earth-hog.' From Du. aard-, for aarde, earth; and vark, for varken, a hog. See Earth and Farrow.

AB-, prefix. (L.) L. ab, short form a; sometimes extended to abs-. Cognate with Skt. āpa, away, from; Gk. ἀνά; Goth. of; AS. of; G. ab; see OF. Hence numerous compounds, as ab-usus, avert, ab-stract, &c. In French, it becomes a or av-; see Assail, Advantage.

ABACK, backwards. (E.) ME. abak; as in 'And worth to be put abak'; Gower, C. A. i. 205 (l. iii. 487). For on bak, as in 'Sir Thopas drough on bak full fast'; Chaucer, C. T., B 2017, in the Harleian MS, where other MSS. have othak = AS. othak; Matt. iv. 10. Thus the prefix is a - (2); for on. See On and Back.

ABACUS, a calculating frame; upper member of the capital of a column. (L.—Gk.) See Trivisa, tr. of Higden, vii. 69. L. abacus. —Gk. ἀβάξ (gen. ἀβάκος), a slab for reckoning on.

ABAST, on the aft, behind. (E.) a. From the prefix a - (2), for on, and -bast, which is contracted from bi-aft, i.e. by aft. Thus abast is for on by aft, i.e. in that which lies towards the after part. β. -bast is ME. biast, Allit. Poems, C. 148; the fuller form is hast, with which cf. 'He let biasten the more del' = he left behind the greater part; Genesis and Exodus, 3377. ME. biasten is from AS. beahtan, compounded of be, by, and astan, behind; Grein, i. 52. See By and Aft.

ABANDON, to forsake, give up. (F.—Low L.—OHG.) ME. abandonnen. 'Bot thai, that can thame abandonne Till ded'—but they, that gave themselves up to death; Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, xvii. 642. —F. abandonner, to give up. —F. a bandon, at liberty, at one's disposal; orig. 'in the power of'; discussed in Brachet, Etym. F. Dict. —F. a, prep., and bandon, control, jurisdiction. —L. ad to; and Low L. bandum, a feudal term (also spelt banuim) signifying an order, decree; see Ban. ¶ The F. a bandon is lit. 'by proclamation', and thus has the double sense (1) 'under control', and (2) 'at one's discretion, by permission'. The former is obsolete in modern English; but occurs frequently in ME. See Glossary to the Bruce; and cf. 'habben abandun, to have at one's will, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 189, l. 24. Der. abandon-ed, lit. given up; abandonment. ABASE, to bring low. (F.—L.) Shak. has 'abase our sight so low'; 2 Hen. VI, l. 2. 15. Cf. 'So to abase his realte'; Gower, C. A. i. 111 (bk. I. 2063). From a - (5), for F. a-, L. ad, and base, in imitation of OF. abaisier, abesier, MF. abaisser, abaisser, 'to debase, abase, abate, humble'; Cotgrave.—Late L. abassire, to lower. —L. ad, to; and Late L. basare, to lower, from Late L. basus, low. See Base. Der. abase-ment, A. V., Eccles. xx. 11. ¶ It is extremely probable that some confusion has taken place between this word and to abash; for in Middle E. (in the Northern dialect) we find abaisit with the sense of abashed or dismayed. See examples under abasen in Mätzner's Wörterbuch; and see N. E. D.

ABASH, to confuse with shame. (F.) ME. abaschen, abaischen, abaisien, abasen, &c. 'I abassie, or am amased of any thyng'; Palsgrave. 'Thei weren abaischid with a greet stonyng'; Wyclif, Mk. v.

42. 'He was abashed and agast'; K. Alisaunser, ed. Weber, l. 224. —OF. abais-, stem of pres. part. of abaisir, to astonish (see note below); mod. F. abahir. —OF. es- (L. ex, out, extremely); and baire, bahir, to express astonishment, an imitative verb formed from the interjection bah! of astonishment. Cf. prov. E. bo, boh, interj., a sudden cry to cause fright; Gk. βοῆν, L. boire, to shout out. ¶ The final -sh is to be thus accounted for. French verbs in -ir are of two forms, those which (like venir) follow the Latin inflexions, and those which (like fleurir) sometimes add -is- to the root. See Brachet's Hist. French Grammar, ed. Toynbee, § 581. This -is- is imitated from the L. -esc-, -isc-, seen in 'inchoative' verbs, such as flor-escō, trem-isco, and appears in many parts of the French verb, which is conjugated to a great degree as if its infinitive were fleurisier* instead of fleurir. β. An excellent example is seen in chaire, to obey, which would similarly have, as it were, a secondary form cheisier*; and, corresponding to these forms, we have in English not only to obey, but the obsolete form obeyche, obesch, as in 'the wynd and the see obeschon to hym'; Wyclif, Mk. iv. 40. γ. Easier examples appear in E. abolish, banish, cherish, demolish, embellish, establish, finish, flourish, furnish, garnish, languish, nourish, polish, punish, all from French verbs in -ir. δ. We also have examples like admonish, diminish, replenish, evidently from French sources, in which the termination is due to analogy; these are discussed in their proper places. ¶ It is probable that the word to abash has been to some extent confused with to abase. See Abase. Der. bash-ful (for bashful); abash-ment. ABATE, to beat down. (F.—L.) ME. abaten. 'To abate the host of that breme duke'; Will. of Palerne, 1141. 'Thow... abatest alle tyranné'; K. Alisaunser, ed. Weber, l. 7499. —OF. abatire, to beat down. —Late L. abattere; see Brachet, l. 44, to; and battere, popular form of battere, to beat. Der. abate-ment, Hamlet, iv. 7. 121; abat-is (below), and F. abatt-oir, a public slaughter-house. ¶ Often contracted to bate, q. v.

ABATIS, ABATTIS, a military defence made of felled trees. (F.—L.) Spelt abatiss in Todd's Johnson. —F. abatiss; OF. abatis (Itzfeldt). —OF. abatire, to beat down (above).

ABBOT, the father (or head) of an abbey. (L.—Gk.—Syriac.) ME. abbot, abbot. 'Abbot, abbas'; Prompt. Parv. Spelt abbot, Ancrer Kiwe, p. 314. AS. abbot, abbot; Ælfric's homily on the Old Test. begins with the words 'Ælfric abbot'. —L. abbōtem, abbādem, acc. of abbas, father. —Late Gr. ἀββας (gen. ἀββᾶτος, ἀββᾶτος); see Ducange. —Syriac abbā, father; see Romans, vii. 15; Galat. iv. 6. ¶ The restoration of the t (for d in AS.) was due to a knowledge of the L. form; cf. OF. abbez (= abets, pl.), Chanson de Roland, 2955.

ABBREVIATE, to shorten. (L.) Fabyan has abreyaryd in the sense of abridged; Henry III, an. 26, ed. 1811, p. 333. Elyot has 'an abbreviate, called of the Grekes and Latines epitoma'; The Governor, b. iii. c. 25. —L. abbreviare (pp. abbreviatus), to shorten, in Rom. ix. 28 (Vulgate). —L. ad, to; and brevis, short. See Brief and Abridge. Der. abbreviat-ion, -or. Doublet, abridge. ¶ Here abbreviare would at once become abbreviare; cf. Ital. abbonare, to improve, abbassare, to lower, abbellare, to embellish, where the prefix is plainly ad. ¶ The formation of verbs in -ate in English is curious; a good example is create, equivalent to L. creare; but it does not follow that crea was necessarily formed from the pp. creatus. Such verbs in -ate can be formed directly from L. verbs in -are, by mere analogy with others. All that was necessary was to initiate such a habit of formation. This habit began with words like advocate, which was originally a pp. used as a sb., and, secondarily, was used as a verb by the common English habit of creating verbs from sbs.

ABDICATE, lit. to renounce. (L.) In Levins, A. D. 1570; and used by Bishop Hall, in his Contemplations, N.T., b. iv. cont. 6.

§ 2. — Abdicat-us, pp. of abdicare (see note to Abbreviate). — Ab, ab, from; and dicare, to proclaim. (Dicare is allied to dicere, to say; see Diction. Der. abdicat-ion.)

ABDOMEN, the lower part of the belly. (L.) Defined as 'the fat which is about the belly'; Coles, ed. 1684. Der. abdomin-al.

ABDUCE, to lead away. (L.) Not odd, and not usual. Used by Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 20. § 4; where some edd. have adduce. More common is the derivative abduction, used by Blackstone, Comment. b. iv. c. 15, and a common law-term. — Abducere, to lead away. — Ab, ab, from, away; and ducere, to lead. See Duke. Der. abduct, abduct-ion, abduct-or; cf. the pp. abductus.

ABED, in bed. (E.) Shakespeare has abed, As You Like It, ii. 2. 6, and elsewhere; ME. a-bedde, Chaucer, Troil. i. 915. The prefix a- stands for on. 'Thou restest on bedde' = thou restest three abed; Layamon, ib. 372.

ABET, to incite. (F. — Scand.) Used by Shak. Com. of Errors, ii. 2. 172. ME. abetten, Sir Ferumbras, i. 5816 (ab. 1380). [Cf. ME. abet, ab, meaning 'instigation'; Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 357.] — OF. abeter, to deceive, also to incite (Godefroy); AF. and OF. abet, instigation, deceit. — OF. a < L. ad, to; and beter, to bait. Cf. 'Nus ours, quant il est bien betes' = No bear, when he is well baited; Rom. Rose, 10168. OF. beter is from Icel. beita, to bait, chase with dogs, set dogs on; lit. 'to make to bite'; causal verb from bita, to bite. See Bait; and see Bet. Der. abetment, AF. abettement; abet-or, Shak. Lucrece, 886.

ABEYANCE, expectation, suspension. (F. — L.) A law term; used by Littleton, and in Blackstone's Commentaries; see Cowell's Law Dict., and Todd's Johnson. — A. F. abeyance, as in the phrase 'droit en abeyance', a right in abeyance, or which is suspended; OF. abeyance, expectation; see Godefroy. — F. prefix a- (< L. ad); and beance, expectation (Godefroy); allied to OF. béant, gaping, pres. pt. of obs. verb béer (mod. F. bayer), to gape, to expect anxiously. — L. ad; and badire, to gape, to open the mouth, used by Isidore of Seville; see Brachet, s. v. bayer. The word badire is probably imitative.

ABHOR, to shrink from with terror. (L.) Shak. has it frequently. It occurs in Lord Surrey's translation of Virgil, b. ii. l. 16; cf. 'quantum animus meminisse horret'; Aen. ii. 12. Caxton has abhorryng, Troy Book, leaf 20, l. 11. — L. abhorre, to shrink from. — L. ab, from; and horre, and horre, to bristle (with fear). See Horrid. Der. abhorrent, abhor-ence.

ABIDE (1), to wait for. (E.) ME. abiden, Chaucer, C. T., E 757, 1106; and in common use. AS. ābidan, Grein, i. 12. — AS. prefix a-, and bidan, to bide. Cf. Goth. usbeidan, to expect. See Bide.

Der. abid-ing; abode, formed by gradation, from the and grade bād.

ABIDE (2), to suffer for a thing. (E.) a. We find in Shak.

'lest thou abide it deare'; Mids. Nt. Dream, iii. 2. 175; where the first quarto has aby. The latter is correct; the verb in the phrase 'to abide it ' being a mere corruption, due to confusion with abide (1). β. The

ME. form is abeyen, as in 'That thou shalt with this launcegay abeyen

it ful soure'; Chaucer, C. T., B 2011 (l. 13751). This verb abeyen is also spelt abuggen and abiggen, and is common in Middle E.; see examples in Mätzner and Strattmann. Its pt. tense is aboughte, and we still preserve it, in a reversed form, in the modern to buy off.

γ. Hence 'lest thou abide it dear' signifies 'lest thou have to buy off it dearly'; i. e. lest thou have to pay dearly for it. — AS. ābeygan, to pay for. 'Gif friman wið fries mannes wið geligēð, his wergelde ābeyge' = If a free man lie with a freeman's wife, let him pay for it with his wergeld; Laws of King Æthelbirt, 31; in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, i. 10. — AS. a-, prefix; and AS. beygan, to buy. See Buy.

ABILITY; see Able.

ABJECT, mean; lit. cast away. (L.) Shak. has it several times, and once the subst. abject; Rich. III. i. 1. 106. It was formerly used also as a verb. 'Almightie God abjected Saul, that he shulde no more reigne ouer Israel'; Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. ii. c. i. § 3. — L.

abicius, cast away, pp. of abice, to cast away. — L. ab, from, away; and iacere, to cast. Cf. Jet (1). Der. abject-ly, abject-ion, abject-ness, abjects (pl. sb.).

ABJURE, to forswear. (L.) Sir T. More has abjure, Works,

p. 214 b. Colgrave has 'abjur', to abjure, forswear, deny with an oath. — L. abjurāre, to deny. — L. ab, from; and iurare, to swear, from iis (gen. iuris), law, right. In several words of this kind, it is almost impossible to say whether they were derived from Lat.

immediately, or through the French. It makes no ultimate difference.

Der. abjur-at-ion.

14, l. 19. — F. ablatis, the ablative case, Cot. — L. ablativus, the name of a case. — L. ab, from; and latum, to bear, used as active supine of fero, but from a different root. Latum is from an older form lātum, supine of tollo, to lift, take away. Co-radicate words are tolerate and the ME. thole, to endure. See Tolerate. ¶ 'We learn from a fragment of Cæsar's work, De Analogia, that he was the inventor of the term ablative in Latin. The word never occurs before; Max

Müller, Lectures, i. 118 (8th edit.).

ABLAZE, on fire. (E.) For on blaze, i. e. in a blaze. 'Al on blaze;' Gower, C. A. ii. 244 (bk. v. 3510). The AS. and ME. on commonly has the sense of in. See Abed and Blaze.

ABLE, having power; skilful. (F. — L.) ME. able, Chaucer,

Prol. 584. — OF. able (Godefroy), able; F. habile, 'able, . . . active';

Cot. — L. habilis, easy to handle, active. — L. habere, to have, to hold.

β. The spelling hable is also found, as, e.g. in Sir Thomas More,

Dialogue concerning Heresies, b. iii. c. 16; Works, p. 245 a; habilitye,

R. Ascham, The Schoolmaster, ed. 1570, leaf 19 (ed. Arber, p. 63).

Der. ab-ly, abil-ity (from L. acc. habilitatem, from habilitas).

ME. ablucious, Chaucer, C. T., G 856. — F. ablution. — L. acc. ablutionem.

— L. abluer, to wash away. — L. ab, away; and luere, to wash. Cf.

Minshew (1627) has abnegation. — L. abnegat-us, pp. of abnegare, to deny. — L. ab, from, away; and negare, to deny. See Negation.

Der. abnegat-ion.

ABNORMAL, irregular. (F. — L. — Gk.) Modern; and very corrupt (N. E. D.). Made by popular etymology, as if from L. ab, from, and norma, rule (see Normal); but really from F. anormal

(Hatzfeld). — Med. L. anormalis, by-form of anormalus (Duc.), a corruption of animalus (whence F. anomal) — Gk. ἀνώμαλος, uneven; see Anomaly. ¶ An anomalous word.

ABOARD, on board. (E.) For on board. 'And stood on borde

Coer de Lion, 2543; in Weber, Met. Romances.

ABODE, a dwelling. (E.) The ME. abod almost always has the sense of 'delay' or 'abiding'; see Chaucer, C. T. 967 (A 965).

Also North E. abod, Barbour's Bruce, i. 142. A verbal sb. from abide, with the same stem-vowel as abid, the pt. t. of that verb.

ABIDE (1). For the modern sense, see John, xiv. 23.

ABOLISH, to annul. (F. — L.) Caxton has the pp. abolysshed,

Eneydos, ch. xxvi (p. 92, l. 32). Hall, Henry VIII, an. 28, § 8, has the unnecessary spelling abolish, just as abominate was once written abominate. — F. aboliss, from inf. abolir; (for the ending -iss see remarks on Abask). — L. abolere, imperative form of aboler, to annul.

¶ The etymology of abolire is not clear; Fick (ii. 47) compares it with Gk. ἀβάλλω, to destroy; see Prellwitz, s. v. ἀλάσσω. Bréal derives ab-olere from ab and olere as in ad-olere, as if it meant 'to check the growth'. See Adolescent. Der. abol-it-ion, abol-it-ion-ist.

ABOMINATE, to hate. (L.) The verb is in Levins, A. d. 1570; spelt abkominare, p. 41, l. 30 (not noted in N. E. D. before 1644).

Wyclif has abkominable, Titus, i. 16; abkominable, Gower, C. A. i.

263; iii. 204 (bk. ii. 3107; bk. vii. 3337). — L. abominā-us, pp. of abomināri, to dislike; lit. to turn away from a thing that is of ill omen; (for the ending -ate, see note to Abbreviate). — L. ab, from;

and omin-, for omen, a portent. See Omen. Der. abomin-able,

ABORIGINES, indigenous inhabitants. (L.) 'Calling them aborigines and αὐτόχθονες;' Selden's notes to Drayton's Polyolbion, song 8, note 2. — L. aborigines, the ancestors of the Romans, the nation which, previous to historical record, drove out the Siculi

(Lewis and Short). Coined from L. ab origi, where origi is the

abl. of origo; see Origin. Cf. origi, Æn. i. 642. Der.

shew, ed. 1627; and in Hakewill's Apology, p. 317 (R.). Shak. has

abortus, pp. of aboriri, to fail. — L. ab, from, away; and oriri, to arise, grow. See Orlent. From the same stem, abort-ive, -ly, -ness.

ABOUND, to overflow, to be plentiful. (F. — L.) ME. abounden,

Wyclif, 2 Cor. ix. 8. Also spelt habunden, as in Chaucer's tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 4, l. 62. — OF. and F. abonder. — L. abundāre, to overflow. — L. ab, and undāre, to flow in waves, from unda, a wave. See Undulate. Der. abund-ance, q. v.; abund-ant (habundant in Ch. C. T., E 59); abund-ant-ly.

ABOUT, around, concerning. (E.) ME. abuten, Ormulum, 4087;

later, abouten, aboute. AS. ābutan; as in 'ābutan þone munt' = around the mountain, Exod. xix. 12. a. Here the prefix a- is short for an-, another form of on; and we accordingly find also the form anbūtan, Genesis ii. 11. [A commoner AS. form was ymbūtan, but here the prefix is different, viz. ymb, about, corresponding to G. um.] ā. The word būtan is itself a compound of bē, by, and ātan, outward. Thus the word is resolved into on-bē-ātan, on (that which is) by (the) outside. γ. Again ātan, outward, outside, is an adverb formed from the prep. ā, out. See On, By, and Out. The words abast and aboue have been similarly resolved into on-by-ast and on-by-oue(r). See Abast, Above. ¶ Similar forms are found in Old Frisian, where abesta is deducible from an-bi-asta; abuppa (above), from an-bi-uppa; and abūta (about), from an-bi-tūta.

ABOVE, over. (E.) ME. abufen, Ormulum, 6438; later, aboven, above. AS. ābūfan, AS. Chron. an. 1090. — AS. an, on; bē, by; and ufan, upward; the full form be-ufan actually occurs in the Laws of Æthelstan, iv. 4; in Thorpe, i. 224. See About. The word ufan is equivalent to the cognate G. oben, which is allied to E. over. See On, By, and Over. Cf. Du. boven, above.

ABRADE, to scrape off. (L.) In Bailey, vol. ii. ed. 1731 (an earlier notice in N.E.D. under 1677). — L. abrādere, to scrape off, pp. abrāsus. — L. ab, off; and rādere, to scrape. See Rase. Der. abrase, pp. in Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, Act v. sc. 3, descr. of Apheleia; abras-ion, in Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674.

ABREAST, side by side. (E.) In Shak. Hen. V, iv. 6. 17. The prefix is for an, ME. form of on; cf. abed, asleep, &c.

ABRIDGE, to shorten. (F.—L.) ME. abregre, Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, 4577; also abregge, Chaucer, C. T. 3001 (A 2999). — OF. abrevier (Godefroy); also abregier, abrigier. — L. abbreuiare, to shorten. Der. abridge-ment, Lucrece, 1198. Doublet, abbreviate, q.v.

Weber, l. 148. = OF. acorder, to agree. = Late L. accordare, to agree, used in much the same way as L. concordare, and similarly formed. = L. ac-, for ad, to, i. e. in agreement with; and cord-, stem of cor, the heart. Cf. E. concord, discord. The L. cor is cognate with E. Heart, q. v. Der. accord, sb. Chaucer, C. T. The pl. sb. accounts, i. e. accounts, occurs in Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 135. = OF. acompter or acomptier (Godefroy); the two forms being still preserved in F. comptier and compter, which are doubles. = F. a-, prefix, for L. ad; and compter, or comptier, to count, from L. computare, to compute, count. See Count. Der. account, sb., account-able, account-able-ness, account-ant.

ACCOUNTRE, to equip. (F.-L.) Shak. has accounted, Jul. Cas. i. 2. 105. = MF. accouterer, accouterer. Cotgrave gives both forms, and explains accouterer by 'to cloath, dress, apparel, attire, array, deck, trim.' Marked by Brachet 'origin unknown.' But a likely guess is that which connects it with the OF. costre, coustre, nom. case of OF. costor, costour (Godefroy), the sacristan of a church. One of the sacristan's duties was to have charge of the sacred vestments, whence the notion of dressing may have arisen. The OF. costre represents the Late L. custor, just as OF. costor represents the acc. custorem. DuCange (ed. Favre) quotes the Late L. custor, glossed by aditus; and it is a variant of L. custos, which was also used in the same sense of 'sacristan.' See Custody. Cf. G. Kister, a sacristan, vestry-keeper; from the same Late L. custor. Der. accoutrement, Merry Wives, iv. 2. 5.

ACCRUE, to grow to, to come to in the way of increase. (F.-L.) Spenser, P. Q. iv. 6. 18, has both decreased, decreased, and accrued, increased or gathered. Holinshed, Chron. iii. 1235, has 'new accresces of soldiers,' where accresce is a sb. = MF. accruer, L. 'a growth, increase, augmentation.' Cot. Orig. fem. of MF. accruere, growne, increased, enlarged, augmented, amplified; Cot. [The F. word must have been borrowed from the sb., and turned into a verb.] = MF. accroistre (Cotgrave), now accroître, to increase, enlarge; of which accruer (accru) is the pp. = L. acrescere, to enlarge. = L. ac-, for ad, to; and erescere, to grow. See Cure. Der. accurat-ness, accurat-ly; also accur-acy, answering (nearly) to L. accursio.

ACCURSED, cursed, wicked. (E.) The spelling with a double c is false, and due to the frequency of the use of ac- = L. ad as a prefix. ME. accursen, accursen. 'Ye schule . . . accursi alle fytinge;' Owl and Nightingale, 1793; accorse, Rob. of Glouc. p. 296, l. 5993. = AS. ā-, intens. prefix; and cursian, to curse. See Curse.

ACHE, to throb with pain; as a sb. a severe pain. (E.) The spelling ache is non-phonetic, and chiefly due to the attempt to connect it with the Gk. áchos, which is wholly unconnected with it. In old authors the spelling ache is common both for the verb and the sb. Strictly, ache represented the verb only, whilst ache (pronounced nearly as mod. E. archer) represented the form of the sb. in the Southern and Midland dialects of Middle English. Hence Shak. has 'When your head did but ache', K. John, iv. 1. 41; and 'Fill all thy bones with ach-es, make thee roar', Temp. i. 2. 370. The sb. form is really obsolete, and the verbal form is used both for sb. and verb. Cf. 'Ache, or ache, or akyng, dolor,' Prompt. Parv. β. The ME. achen, to ache, was a strong verb, forming its past tense as ok, ok, pl. ooke, oke, oken. 'She saide her hede oke' [better spelt ok, pron. awk]. The Knight of La Tour, ed. Wright, p. 8. 'Thaugh alle my syngres oken;' P. Plowman, C. xx. 159. From AS. acan (pt. t. ōc), strong verb, to ache; from the same root as L. ag-ere, to drive; see AGENT. Cf. Icel. aka (pt. t. ök), to drive. Cf. The ME. ache, sb., a pain, is regularly formed from AS. æce, sb., a pain; which is derived from the strong verb acēan.

ACHIEVE, to accomplish. (F. — L.) ME. acheuen = acheven. Chaucer has 'acheued and performed'; tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 4. l. 141. — OF. achever, to accomplish. Formed from the phrase venir a chef or venir a chief, to come to the end or arrive at one's object. — Late L. ad caput venire, to come to a head (Brachet). See CHIEF. Der. achievement, IIcn. V. iii. 5. 60; also hatchment, q. v.

ACHROMATIC, colourless. (Gk.) Modern and scientific. Formed with suffix -ic from Gk. ἀχρόματος, colourless. — Gk. á-, privative; and χρῶμα, stem of χρῶμα, colour. See CHROMATIC.

ACID, sour, sharp. (L.) Bacon speaks of 'a cold and acide Iuyce'; Nat. Hist. § 644. — L. acidus, sour. — Gk. ák, to pierce; cf. Skt. ar, to pervade; E. to egg on. See EGG, verb. Der. acid-ity, acid-ul-ate (from L. acid-ul-us, subacid), acid-ul-at-ed, acid-ul-us.

ACKNOWLEDGE, to confess, own the knowledge of. (E.) Common in Shakespeare; cf. ME. knowlechen, to acknowledge. a. The prefixed a- is due to the curious fact that there was a ME. verb aknowen with the same sense; ex. 'To mee wold shee neuer aknow That any man for any meede Neighed her body', Merline, 901, in Percy Folio MS., i. 450. This aknowen is the AS. oncwītan, to perceive. Hence the prefixed a- stands for AS. on. β. The verb knowlechen is common, as e.g. in Wyclif; 'he knowlechede and denyede not, and he knowlechede for I am not Christ'; John, i. 20. It appears early in the thirteenth century, in Iñali Meidenhad, p. 9; Legend of St. Katharine, l. 1352. And hence was formed the sb. knowledge, now spelt knowledge. See KNOWLEDGE. Der. acknowledg-ment, a hybrid form, with F. suffix; in IIcn. V. iv. 8. 124.

ACME, the highest point. (Gk.) Altogether a Greek word, and written in Gk. characters by Ben Jonson, Discoveries, sect. headed Scriptorum Catalogus. — Gk. ἀκμή, edge. — Gk. ák, to pierce.

ACOLYTE, a servant. (F. — Late L. — Gk.) MF. acolyte, Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 329; AF. acolyte. Cotgrave has 'Acolyte, Acolyte, he that ministers to the priest while he sacrifices or saies mass.' — Late L. acolytus, borrowed from Gk. = Gk. ἀκούουτος, a follower. — Gk. á-, with (akin to Skt. sa-, with); and κλέυθος, a road, way (with gradation of ev to ov); so that ἀκούουτος meant originally 'a travelling companion.' The Gk. κλέυθος is cognate with L. callis, a path; see PRELITZ.

ACONITE, monk's hood; poison. (F. — L. — Gk.) Occurs in Ben Jonson, Sejanus, Act iii. sc. 3. l. 29. [It may have been borrowed from the Latin, or through the French.] — F. aconit, aconitum, 'a most venomous herb, of two principall kinds, viz. Libbards-bane and Wolf-bane.' Cot. — L. aconitum. — Gk. ἀκόνιτον, a plant like monk's-hood; Pliny, Nat. Hist. bk. xxvii. c. 3. ¶ Pliny says it is so called because it grew ev δόκοναι, on 'steep sharp rocks' (Liddell and Scott). — Gk. ἀκόνι, a whetstone, hone. — Gk. ák, to pierce; PRELITZ.

ACORN, the fruit of the oak. (E.) Chaucer speaks of 'acornes of okes'; tr. of Boethius, b. ii. met. 5. l. 6. AS. acorn, acira; pl. acernu, which occurs in the AS. version of Gen. xliii. 11, where the exact meaning is not clear, though it is applied to some kind of fruit. Lit. 'fruit of the field'; from AS. acorn, a field; see AORE. + Icel. akorn, an acorn; Dan. agern; Goth. akrana, fruit, in the comp. akrana-laus, fruitless. ¶ The suffix -ern has been changed to -orn, from a notion that acorn meant an ack-orn; but it is remarkable that acorn is related, etymologically, neither to oak nor to corn. β. If it be remembered that acorn should rather be spelt acorn or ahorn (the latter is common in MF.), and that acorn should rather be acorn or ahorn, it will be seen that ahorn is derived from aker much in the same way as silver from silver, or wooden from wood. γ. The cognate languages help here. The Icel. akorn is derived from akr, a field, not from eik, oak; Danish has agern, an acorn, from ager, a field; Goth. akrana, fruit, is from akrs, a field. δ. Thus the original sense of the AS. neut. pl. acernu or acernu was simply 'fruits of the field', understanding 'field' in the sense of wild open country; cf. Gk. áγρος, a field, the country, and áγρος, wild. ε. Hence Chaucer's expression 'acornes of okes' is correct, not tautological.

ACOTYLEDON, without a seed-lobe. (Gk.) From Gk. á-, negative prefix; and COTYLEDON, q. v.

ACOUSTIC, relating to sound. (Gk.) In Coles's Dict., ed. 1684. — Gk. ἀκουστικός, relating to hearing (or sound). — Gk. ἀκούειν, to hear. Der. acoustic-al, acoustic-s.

'Wel akointed mid ou' — well acquainted with you; Ancien Riwle, p. 218. — OF. acointier, acointier, to acquaint with, to advise. — Late L. adcoignitūre, to make known; see Brachet. — L. adcoignitum, adcoignitum, pp. of adcoignere, to recognise (Tertullian). — L. ad, to; and cognitus, known, pp. of cognoscere, to know, which is compounded of co-, for cum, with, and gnosco (commonly spelt nosco), to know, cognate with E. know. See QUAINT and KNOW. Der. acquaint-ance, in Chaucer, C. T., A 245; acquaintance-ship.

ACRE, a field. (E.) ME. aker. The pl. akres occurs in Rob. of Brunne's tr. of P. Langtoft, ed. Hearn, p. 115. AS. æcer, a field. + OFries. ekker; OSax. akkar; Du. akker; Icel. akr; Swed. äker; Dan. ager; Goth. akrs; OHG. achar, G. acker. + L. ager; Gk. áγρος; Skt. ágra-s. Teut. type akroz*; Idg. type agros*. Brugm. i. § 175. Perhaps originally 'a chase' or hunting-ground (cf. Gk. áγρος, the chase); later sense 'a pasture'; from AG*, to drive; L. ag-ere, Gk. áγ-ew, Skt. aj, to drive. See AOT. ¶ The spelling acre is AF.; see Year-books of Edw. I. Der. acre-age.

ACRID, bitter, pungent, tart. (L.) Not in early use. Bacon has acrimony, Nat. Hist. sect. 639. There is no good authority for the form acrid, which has been made (apparently in imitation of acid) by adding -id to acri-, stem of L. acer, sharp; from Gk. ák, to pierce. Der. acrid-ness; acri-mony, acri-moni-ous, from L. acriminā, sharpness. Co-radicate words are acid, acerbity, and many others.

ACROBAT, a tumbler. (F. — Gk.) Modern. Borrowed from F. acrobate. — Gk. ἀκροβάτης, lit. walking on tip-toe. — Gk. ἀκρο-, a point, neut. of ἀκρος, pointed; and βάτης, verbal adj. of βαίνειν, to walk, which is cognate with E. come. See ACRID and COME. Der. acrobatic-al.

ACROPOLIS, a citadel. (Gk.) Borrowed from Gk. ἀκρόπολις, a citadel, lit. the upper city. — Gk. ἀκρο-, pointed, highest, upper; and πóλις, a city. For akros, see ACRID. For pólis, see POLICE.

ACROSS, cross-wise. (E. and Scand.) Surrey, in his Complaint of Absence, l. 22, has 'armes across'. Formed from the common prefix a- (short for an, a later form of AS. on), and cross; so that across is for on-cross, like abel for on bed. Thus the prefix is English; but cross is Scand. See CROSS.

ACROSTIC, a short poem in which the letters beginning the lines spell a word. (Gk.) Better acrostich; cf. distich. Ben Jonson has Aerostichs; Underwoods, lxi. 39. From Gk. ἀερός, an acrostic. — Gk. ἀερός, pointed, also first; and ὀρύξω, a row, order, line. — ✓AK, to pierce; and stigh*, weak grade of ✓STEIGH, to climb, march, whence Gk. verb ὀρύξω, to march in order. See Aorid and Stirrup.

ACT, a deed. (F.—L.) ME. act, pl. actes. The pl. actes occurs in Chaucer's Pardoner's Tale, C. T. 12508 (C 574). — F. acte, — L. acta, pl. of actum, an act, thing done, neut. of pp. actus, done. — ✓AG, to do, lit. to drive. — Gk. ἀγναι, to drive; Icel. aka, to drive; Skt. aj, to drive. — ✓AG, to drive; Brugm. i. § 175. Der. act, verb, whence acting; also act-ion, act-ion-able, act-ive, act-iv-ity, act-or, act-or-ous; also act-u-al (L. actualis), act-u-al-ity; also act-u-ary (L. actuarius); also act-u-ate (from Late L. actuatus, to perform, put in action). From the same root are exact, react, and a large number of other words, such as acre, &c. See Agent.

ACUMEN, keenness of perception. (L.) It occurs in Selden's Table-Talk, art. Liturgy. Borrowed from L. acumen, sharpness. — ✓AK, to pierce; whence the verb ac-u-are, to sharpen, ac-u-men, sharpness, ac-u-s, a needle, with added -us. Brugm. i. § 177. The word adder is identical with nadder, and the two forms are used interchangeably in ME. [There are several similar instances of the loss of initial n in English, as in the case of auger, umpire, orange, &c.; see note on N.] AS. nādre, nādre, an adder, snake; Grein, ii. 275. + Du. adder, a viper, OS. nādra; G. natter, OLG. nātrara. Here addle was afterwards lengthened to addled, which occurs in Cowper, Pairing-time Anticipated. We find add eye, i. e. 'addle egg', in The Owl and Nightingale, 133. Here add is due to an attributive use of the ME. sb. adel, filth; so that add-el-y was lit. 'filth-egg'. — Late L. ovum ūrina, urine-egg, mistaken form of L. ovum urinum, wind-egg; which was due to Gk. οὐρον ὄωρον, wind-egg, unproductive egg. ME. adel orig. meant 'mud,' or 'filth'; from AS. adela, mud (Grein). Cf. Low G. adal, a puddle. See N.E.D.

More has adherentes, Works, p. 232 d. — L. adhaerere, to stick to. — L. ad, to; and haerere, to stick, pp. haesus. — ✓GHAIS, to stick; whence also Lith. gaiziti, to linger. Der. adjura-tion.

ADJUST, to settle, make right. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave; who has 'ajuster, to adjust, place justly'; as if from L. ad, to, and iustus, exact. See Just. But this use was due to a misunderstanding of MF. ajuster, to adjoint or put unto, also, as ajuster; Cot. — OF. ajoster, ajuster, ajouster (mod. F. ajouter), to arrange, lit. to put side by side. — Late L. adiutare, to put side by side, arrange. — L. ad, to, by; and iutare, near to. See Joust. Der. adjust-able; adjust-ment.

ADMIRAL, the commander of a fleet. (F.—Arabic.) See Trench's Select Glossary, which shows that the term was often applied to the leading vessel in a fleet, called in North's Plutarch the 'admiral-galley,' i. e. galley of the admiral. Thus Milton speaks of 'the mast Of some great admiral'; P. L. i. 294. ME. admiral, admiral, admiral (Laymon, iii. 103), also amiral, amirail. Rob. of Glouc. has amirail, p. 409, l. 8460. —OF. amirail, amirail; also found as amir. —Arabic amir, a prince, an 'emir'; see Rich. Dict., p. 171. The suffix -al (as if from L. -ālis) was really due to the frequent use of the Arab. al in phrases, such as amir-u'l umarā, prince of princes (Rich. Dict.), amir-al-bahr, prince of the sea, &c., see N.E.D. And see Emir. Popular etymology confused the am- with F. am- from L. adm-, and thus produced forms with adm-; it also turned the Arab. al into Late L. -ald-us, OF. -ald, -aud. In King Horn, l. 89, admirald rhymes with bold, bold; and in numerous passages in ME., amiral or amirail means no more than 'prince,' or 'chief.' Der. admiral-ty.

ADMIRE, to wonder at. (F.—L.) Gram. ii. 2. 68. This idiom was properly peculiar to Northern English, and is of Scandinavian origin; for the sign of the infinitive is at in Icelandic, and att in Swedish.

ADULTERATE, to corrupt. (L.) Sir T. More, Works, p. 636 b, has adulterate as a past participle; Shak. has it both as adj. and verb; Hamlet, i. v. 42; K. John, iii. 1. 56. —L. adulterāt-us, pp. of adulterāre, to commit adultery, to corrupt, falsify; cf. L. adulter, an adulterer, a debaser of money. β. L. ad-ulterāre was orig. ADVANCE, to go forward. (F.—L.) [The modern spelling is not good; the inserted d is due to the old mistake of supposing that, in the old form avance, the prefix a- and represents the L. ad. The truth is, that the prefix is av-, and represents the L. ab. The inserted d came in about A.D. 1500, and is found in the Works of Sir T. More, who has aduancement, p. 1369 g. The older spelling is invariably without the d.] ME. avancen, avancement. Chaucer has 'avancement and forthred', tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 4. l. 48. The word is common, and occurs in the Ancien Riwele, p. 156. —OF. avancer (F. avancer), to go before. —OF. and F. avani, before. —Late L. ab ante, also written abante, before (Brachet). —L. ab, from; ante, before. See Ante, and Van. Der. advance-ment, ME. avancement, Rob. of Glouc. p. 312, l. 6388; and see below.

ADVANTAGE, profit. (F.—L.) Properly a state of forwardness or advance. [The d is a mistaken insertion, as in advance (see above); and the ME. form is avantage or avantage.] 'Avantage, proventus, emolumentum'; Prompt. Parv. p. 17. Hampole has avantage, Pricke of Conscience, l. 1012; and it is common. —OF. and F. avantage, formed with suffix -age from prep. avant, before. See Advantage. Der. advantage-ous, advantage-on-ness.

ADVENT, approach. (L.) ME. advent, Rob. of Glouc. p. 463, l. 9510; Ancien Riwele, p. 70. —L. adventus, a coming to, approach. —L. advent-us, pp. of advenire, to come to. —L. ad, to; and venire, to come, cognate with E. come. See Come. Der. advent-u-al, advent-it-i-ous; adventure (below).

ADVENTURE, an accident, enterprise. (F.—L.) [The older spelling is aventure, the F. prefix av- having been afterwards replaced by the corresponding L. prefix ad-.] Sir T. More, Works, p. 761 e, has adventure as a verb. The old form aventure is often cast down to avntre. Rob. of Glouc. has the sb. avntre at p. 65 (l. 1482). The sb. aventure, i. e. occurrence, is in the Ancien Riwele, p. 340. —OF. aventure, fem., an adventure. —Late L. adventūra, fem. sb., analogous to L. abs in -ūra; see Roby's Lat. Gram., 3rd ed., pt. i. § 893. Formed as if from L. adventū-us, fut. part. of advenire, to come to, happen. —L. ad, to; and venire, to come, cognate with E. come. See Come. Der. adventure, vb., adventur-er, adventur-ous, adventur-ous-ness; also per-adventure.

ADVERB, a part of speech. (F.—L.) In Ben Jonson, Eng. Grammar, ch. xxi; and in Palgrave, p. 798. Used to qualify a verb; and adapted from F. adverse (in Sherwood's index to Cotgrave). — L. adversum. — L. ad, to; and verbum, a verb, a word. See Verb. Der. adversial, adversial-ly.

ADVERSE, opposed to. (F.—L.) ME. adverse. Gower has 'When he fortune sint [finds] adverse;' C. A. ii. 116 (bk. iv. 3403). Adversity, i.e. adversity, occurs in the Ancien Riwle, p. 194. Chaucer has adversarie, an adversary, C. T. 14596 (B 3808). — OF. advers, generally avers, adverse to. — L. adversus, turned towards, contrary, opposed to; pp. of advertere, to turn towards. — L. ad, to; and vertere, to turn. See Verb. Der. advers-ary, advers-at-ive, adverse-ness, advers-ity. See below.

ADVERTISE, to inform, warn. (F.—L.) Fabyan has advertised, Hist. c. 84. § 2. — MF. advertiss-, lengthened stem of advertir (OF. avertir). Cotgrave has 'Advertir, to inform, certifie, advertise, warn, admonish.' — Late L. advertire, used in place of L. advertere, to turn towards, advert to. See Advert. [Thus advertise is really a doublet of advert.] Der. advertis-er, advertising; also advertise-ment, in Caxton, Troy-book, leaf 122, l. 8, from MF. advertissement, which see in Cotgrave.

ADVICE, counsel. (F.—L.) Sir T. More, Works, p. 11 a, has advisedly. Fabyan has adwyce, Hen. III, an. 46. § 5. Cotgrave has 'Advis, m., advise, opinion, counsel, sentence, judgment,' &c. β. But in ME. and OF. there is generally no d. Rob. of Glouc. has avis, p. 144 (l. 3042). — OF. avis, an opinion; really a compounded word, standing for a vis, lit. according to my opinion, or 'as it seems' to me; which would correspond to a L. form ad visum. — L. ad, according to; and visum, that which has seemed best, pp. neuter of videre, to see; from VIDE, to know. See Wit. Der. advise (MF. adviser); advise-able, advise-ness, advise-adv, advise-ed-ness, advise-er. See below.

ADVISE, to counsel. (F.—L.) The form advise is from MF. adviser, a form given by Cotgrave, and explained to mean 'to advise, marke, heell, consider of,' &c. β. But in ME., as in OF., the usual form is without the d; avised occurs in Gower, C. A. i. 5 (prol. 65). The pt. t. aviseide occurs in Rob. of Glouc. p. 558 (l. 11694), and the sb. avis (i.e. advice) in the same, p. 144 (l. 3042). — OF. aviser, to have an opinion. — OF. avis, opinion; see above.

ADVOCATE, one called on to plead. (L.) 'Be myn advocat in that helye place;' Chaucer, See Nun's Ta., G. 68. — L. advocatus, a common forensic term for a pleader, advocate, one 'called to' the bar. [Cf. also MF. advocat, 'an advocate,' Cot.] — L. ad, to; and vocatus, called, pp. of vocare, to call. See Voice. Der. advocate, verb; advocate-ship; advocate-y (MF. advocat-ile, which see in Cotgrave); also advocace, advocoun, for which see below.

ADVOWSON, the right of presentation to a benefice. (F.—L.) Occurs in the Statute of Westminster, an. 13 Edw. I, c. 5; see Blount's Law Dictionary. From AF. advowson, older form avowson, Stat. of Realm, i. 293; and see Godefroy. The sense is patronage, and the corresponding term in Law L. is advocatio (see Blount), because the patron was called advocatus, or in OF. avoué, MF. advoué (Cotgrave), now spelt avoué or advocé in English. Hence advowson is derived from L. advocatio, or advocé, of advocatio, and advowee is derived from L. advocatus. See Advocate.

ADZE, a cooper's axe. (E.) ME. adze; the pl. adzes occurs in Palladius on Husbandrie, bk. i. l. 3161; adze, Wyclif, Isaiah xlv. 13. AS. adna, an axe or hatchet; Ælfric's Glossary, Voc. 141. 29; Bede, Hist. Eccl. iv. 3; Grein, p. 1.

ÆDILE, a magistrate in Rome, a municipal officer. (L.) In Shak. Cor. iii. l. 173. — L. ædilis, a magistrate who had the charge of temples, &c. — L. ædēs, ædēs, a building. See Edify.

AERIAL, airy, high, lofty. (L.—Gk.) Milton has aerial, also written aereal, P. L. iii. 445, v. 548, vii. 442; also aery, P. L. i. 430, 775. Formed, apparently in imitation of ethereal (P. L. i. 45, 285, &c.). from L. aërius, dwelling in the air. — L. aër, the air. — Gk. ἀήρ, air. See Air. Der. From the same L. sb. we have aer-ate, aër-ify. From Gk. ἀήρ we have the Gk. prefix ἀερο-, relative to air, appearing in English as aero-. Hence aero-lite, an air-stone, from Gk. ἀήρ, a stone; aero-naut, F. aéronaute, a sailer or sailor in the air, from Gk. ναύτης (L. navis) a sailor, which is from Gk. ναῦς, a ship; aero-static, for which see Static, &c.; aer-ate.

ÆRY, lit. an eagle's nest; also, a brood of eagles or hawks. (F.) 'And like an eagle o'er his airy (orig. ærye) towers;' K. John, v. 2. 149. 'There is an æry (orig. ærye) of young children;' Hamlet, ii.

2. 354. From Med. L. aeria, aria, Latinised form of F. aire; Cotgrave has 'Aire, m. an airie or nest of hawks.' Cf. Late L. ārea, a nest of a bird of prey; of which we find an example in Ducange. 'Aues rapaces . . . expectant se inuicem aliquando prope nidum suum consuetum, qui a quibusdam area dicitur;' Fridericus II, de Venat. lib. ii. c. 3. β. The word aire is marked as masculine in Cotgrave, whereas F. aire, L. area, in the ordinary sense of 'floor,' is feminine. It is probable that the Late L. ārea is quite a distinct word from the classical L. area; and some derive F. aire from L. ātrium, a hall, a court, or from agrum, acc. of ager, a field. See Körtling, § 828. The OF. aire was both m. and f.; the former would correspond to L. ātrium, the latter to ātria, pl. taken as fem. sing. The mod. F. airer, to make a nest, represents OF. airier, adairier; see Godefroy. ¶ The E. word was sometimes connected with ME. ey, an egg, as if the word meant an egg-ery; hence it came to be spelt eyrie or eyry, and to be misinterpreted accordingly.

ÆSTHETIC, tasteful, refined; relating to perception. (Gk.) Modern. Formed from Gk. αἰσθητικός, perceptive. — Gk. αἰσθάνομαι, to perceive. — ¶ AV; see Brugmann, ii. § 841. ¶ The word was really introduced from German, the G. word being formed from Greek. 'Ihis Vorschule der Ästhetik (Introduction to Aesthetics);' Carlyle, Essay on Richter, in Edinb. Rev. June, 1827, p. 183; Essays, l. 8 (pop. edition). Cf. Baumgarten's Ästhetica, 1750. Der. aesthetic, a-esthetic, æ-esthetic.

AFAR, at a distance. (E.) For on far or of far. Either expression would become a far, and then a-far; and both are found; but, by analogy, the former corresponds better with the modern use; cf. abed, asleep, &c. Strutt gives of far, O. E. Homilies, i. 247; a fer, Gower, C. A. i. 314 (bk. iii. 1039); on ferum, Gawan, 1575; a ferrum, Minot, vii. 70. See Far. ¶ Apparently, of far became ofer, and was refashioned as on fer, which became a far.

AFFABLE, easy to be addressed. (F.—L.) Milton has affable, P. L. vii. 41; viii. 648. — F. affable, 'affable, gentle, courteous, gracious in words, of a friendly conversation, easily spoken to by, willingly giving ear to others;' Cot. — L. affabilis, easy to be spoken to. — L. af-, for ad, to; and fari, to speak. See Fable. Der. affabil-y, affability, in Sir T. Flyot, The Governour, bk. i. c. 3. § 3 (P. affabilité = L. affabilitas, acc. of affabilitas).

AFFAIR, business. (F.—L.) ME. affere, afere, offer; the pl. affaires is in P. Plowman, C. vii. 152. Commonest in Northern English; spelt after in Barbour's Bruce, vii. 30. — OF. afaire, afere (and properly so written with one f), business; merely the phrase a faire, to do, used as a substantive, like ado in English for to do; see Ado. OF. faire = L. facere; see below.

AFFECT, to act upon. (F.—L.) In Shak. it means to love, to like; Gent. of Ver. iii. 1.82; Antony, i. 3. 71, &c. The sb. affection (formerly affectionis) is in much earlier use, and common in Chaucer. — MF. affecter, 'to affect, fancy;' Cot. — L. affectare, to apply oneself to; frequentative form of affecto, to aim at, treat. — L. af-, for ad; and facere, to do, act. See Fact. Der. affect-ed, affect-ed-ness, affect-ing, affect-ion-ism, affect-ion-ate, affect-ion-ate-ly. Of these, affectation occurs in Men Jonson, Discoveries, sect. cxx. headed Periacti, &c. Also dis-affect.

AFFEEER, to assess, confirm. (F.—L.) Rare; but it occurs in Macbeth, iv. 3. 34; 'the title is affeer'd.' Blount, in his Law Dictionary, explains Affeerers as 'those that are appointed in courts-lets upon oath, to settle and moderate the fines of such as have committed faults arbitrarily punishable.' β. Blount first suggests an impossible derivation from F. affeer, but afterwards adds the right one, saying, 'I find in the Customary of Normandy, cap. 20, this word affeer, which the Latin interpreter expresseth by taxare, that is, to set the price of a thing, which etymology seems to me the best.' — AF. affeer, OF. affeer, to fix the price of things officially; Godefroy (s.v. affeer). — Late L. afforare, to fix the price of a thing; Ducange (s.v. affor). — L. af-, for ad; and forum, or forum, both of which are used synonymously in Late L. in the sense of 'price;' the OF. form of the sb. being four or feur, which see in Godefroy. The classical L. is forum, meaning 'a market-place,' also 'an assize;' and is also (rarely) written forus. Allied to L. foris, and E. door; Brugmann, i. § 360. See Door. ¶ The change from L. o to AF. and E. ee is clearly seen in l. bouen, OF. buof, AF. bif, E. beef. The Late L. equivalent of affeerer is afforator.

AFFIANCE, trust, marriage-contract. (F.—L.) [The verb affy is perhaps obsolete. It means to trust, confide, Titus Andronic. i. 1. 47; also to betroth, Tam. of Shrew, iv. 4. 49.] Both affy and affiance occur in Rob. of Brunne's tr. of P. Langtoft, pp. 87, 155. 1. The verb is from OF. brunne of Brunne's tr. of P. Langtoft, pp. 87, 155. 1. The verb is from OF. brunne, to trust, in also spelt affy; which is from a-, for ad, and ferre, formed from Late L. fidare, a late form from L. fidus, faithful, allied to fides, faith, and fideri, to trust. 2. The sb. is from OF. affiance, which is compounded of a-, for ad, and fiance, formed from Late L. fidantia, a pledge, security; which is from the same fidare, pres. pt. fidans, of which the stem is fidant-. Thus both are allied to L. fidere, to trust. See Faith. Der. affiance, verb; affiance-ed.

AFFIDAVIT, an oath. (L.) Properly the Late L. affidavit = he made oath, 3 p. s. perf. of affidare, to make oath, pledge. = L. af-, for ad; and Late L. fidare, to pledge, from fidus, faithful. See above.

AFFILIATION, assignment of a child to its father. (F.-L.) The verb affiliare seems to be later than the sb., and the sb. does not appear to be in early use, though the corresponding terms in French and Latin may have been in use in the law courts. = F. affiliation, explained by Cotgrave as 'adoption, or an adopting.' = Law L. affiliationem, acc. of affiliatio, 'an assigning a son to'; Ducange. = Late L. affiliare, to adopt; cf. the pp. affiliatus. = L. af-, for ad; and filius, a son. See Filial.

AFFINITY, nearness of kin, connexion. (F.-L.) Fabian has affinite, c. 134; affinite is in Rob. of Brunne, Handling Synne, l. 7379. = F. affinité, 'affinity, kindred, alliance, nearness'; Cot. = L. affinitatem, acc. of affinitas, nearness. = L. affinis, near, bordering upon. = L. af-, for ad, near; and finis, a boundary. See Final.

AFFIRM, to assert strongly. (F.-L.) ME. affermen; Chaucer has affirmed; C. T. 2351 (A 2349). It occurs earlier, in Rob. of Brunne's tr. of P. Langtoft, p. 316. = OF. affermer, to fix, secure. = OF. a-, for L. ad; and L. firmare, to make firm, from firmus, firm. See Firm. ¶ The word has been assimilated to the L. spelling, but was not taken immediately from L. Der. affirm-able, affirm-ation, affirm-at-ive, affirm-at-ive-ly.

AFFIX, to fasten, join on to. (F.-L.) 'To affixe the desyres,' Caxton, Golden Legend; The Ascension, § 6. [Not from L. directly, but from French, the spelling being afterwards accommodated to L.] ME. affischen. Gower has 'Ther wol thei al here love affische, rhyming with riche; C. A. ii. 211 (bk. v. 2520). Wyclif has affickede (printed affickede), 4 Kings, xviii. 16. = OF. afficher, to fix to. = OF. a-, for L. ad; and ficker, to fix, from Late L. figicare (an unauthenticated form) developed from L. figere, to fix. See Fix. Der. affix, sb.

AFFLICT, to harass. (L.) Sir T. More has afflicteth, Works, p. 1080 g. [The pp. afflycht occurs in Octovian, l. 191; and the pt. t. afflicte in Gower, C. A. i. 327 (bk. iii. 1422); these are from OF. afflit (lem. afflie), pp. of afflire, to afflict. The sb. affliction occurs early, in Rob. of Brunne's tr. of Langtoft, p. 202.] = L. affligere, to strike to the ground. = L. af-, for ad, to, i. e. to the ground; and figere, to dash, strike, pp. fligere. From the same root are con-flict, in-flict, pro-flicite, etc. Der. afflict-ion (L. acc. afflict-ionem, from pp. affligere); also afflict-ive.

AFFLUENCE, profusion, wealth. (F.-L.) It occurs in Wotton's Reliquiae, art. A Parallel; and in his Life of Buckingham in the same collection (R.). Also in Caxton's Eneydos, ch. vi. p. 26. = F. affluence, 'affluence, plenty, store, flowing, fullness, abundance'; Cot. = L. affluentia, abundance. = L. affluere, to flow to, abound. = L. af-, for ad; and fluere, to flow. See Fluent. Der. affluent (from L. affluentem, acc. of affluens, pres. pt. of affluere); afflux, given by Cotgrave as being also a French word (from L. affluxus, pp. of affluere).

AFFORD, to supply, produce. (E.) This word should have but one f. The double f is due to a supposed analogy with words that begin with aff- in Latin, where aff- is for adf-; but the word is not Latin, and the prefix is not ad-. Besides this, the pronunciation has been changed at the end. Rightly, it should be aforth, but the th has changed as in other words; cf. murther, now murder, further, provincially further. From ME. aforthen, to afford, suffice, provide. 'And here and there, as that my litell witte aforth may [i. e. may suffice], I thinke translate it;' Hoccleve, Regiment of Princes, l. 2113. 'And thereof was Peres proude, and put hem to werke, And yaf hem mete as he myghte aforth [i. e. could afford or provide], and mesurable hyure' [hire]; P. Plowman, B. vi. 200. β. In this word, as in anore, q. v., the prefix a- is substituted for the AS. prefix ge-, which in ME. became ye-, later y- or i-, and yforth easily passed into aforth, owing to the atonic nature of the syllable. We find the forms yeforthian and yforthien in the 12th century. Ex. 'thanne he seiceth that he ne mæhte na mare yeforthian' = when he saw that he could afford no more; Old Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, 1st series, p. 31; 'do thine elmesse of thou thet thu maht yforthien' = do thine alms of that which thou mayest afford, id. p. 37. = AS. geforðian (where the ge- is a mere prefix that is often dropped), or forðian, to further, promote, accomplish, provide, afford. 'Hwile man swā hænede behāten to faren to Rome, and he ne myhte hit forðian' = whatever man has promised [vowed] to go to Rome, and may not accomplish it; AS. Chron. ed. Thorpe, an. 675, later interpolation; see footnote on p. 58. 'Pa wæs geforðad þin figere weorc' = then was accomplished thy fair work (Grein); 'hæðe geforðad, þæt hē his fræan gehēt' = had performed that which he promised his lord; Grein, l. 401. = AS. ge-, prefix (of slight value); and forðian, to promote, forward, produce, cause to come forth, from AS. forð, forth, forward. See Forth.

AFFRAY, to frighten; AFFRAID, frightened. (F.-L. and Teut.) Shak. has the verb, Romeo, iii. 5. 33. It occurs early. Rob. of Brunne, in his translation of P. Langtoft, p. 174, has 'it affraid the Sarazins' = it frightened the Saracens; and 'ther-of had many affray' = thereof many had terror, where affray is a sb. = OF. effraier, effraier, esfreer, to frighten. = Late L. ex-fraidiere, to break the king's peace, to cause an affray or fray; hence, to disturb, frighten. = L. ex, intensive prefix; and OIIG. fridu (G. friede), peace. See Romania, 1878, vii. 121. Der. affray, sb., also shortened to fray; afraid, orig. affrayed, pp. of affray.

AFFREIGHTMENT, the act of hiring a ship for the transportation of goods. (F.-L. and G.) Still in use. Blount gives affretamentum, with a reference to Pat. 11 Hen. IV. par. 1. m. 12, which represents an OF. affretement, the same word as mod. F. affrètement, the hiring of a ship (Littre). Formed with suffix -ment from OF. affreter (mod. F. affréter), to hire a ship (Littre). = L. af-, for ad, prefix; and F. fret, 'the freight or freight of a ship, also the hire that's paid for a ship, or for the freight thereof'; Cotgrave. This fret is of G. origin; see further under Freight, Freight.

AFFRIGHT, to frighten. (E.) The double f is modern, and a mistake. The prefix is AS. ā-. A transitive verb in Shak. Mids. Nt. Dream, v. 142, &c. A late formation; from ME. afright, which was really a pp., and was lengthened to afright-ed by mistake, as in Othello, v. 2. 99. Cf. ME. afright, in Chaucer, Nun's Priest's Tale, l. 75. AS. āfryht (contracted form of āfryht-ed), pp. of āfryhtan, to terrify; Grein, l. 19. Cf. 'hā weardas wæron āfryhte, the guards were afright (frightened); Matt. xxviii. 4. = AS. ā-, prefix, with intensive force; and fryhtan, to terrify, from AS. fryhtan, fright, terror. See Fright. Der. afright-ed-ly.

AFFRONT, to insult, lit. to stand front to front. (F.-L.) The double f was originally a single one, the prefix being, the F. ME. affronter, afrownter, to insult. 'That affrontede me soule' = who foully insulted me; P. Plowman, C. xxiii. 5. The inf. afrownt occurs in the Aenbite of Inwyt, p. 229. = OF. affronter, to confront, oppose face to face; also, to slap in the face. = OF. a-, to, against; and front, the front; so that a front answers to L. ad frontem; cf. Late L. af-frontare, to strike against. = L. ad; and frontem, acc. case of frons, the forehead. See Front. Der. affront, sb.

AFFY, to trust in; see Affiance.
AFFLOAT, for on float. (E.) 'Now er alle on fole' = now are all afloat; Rob. of Brunne's tr. of P. Langtoft, p. 169. So also on foat, afloat, in Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, xiv. 359.

AFOOT, for on foot. (E.) 'The way-ferande frækez on fole and on hors' = the wayfaring men, afoot and on horse; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 79. We still say 'to go on foat'.

AFORE, before, in front; for on fore. (E.) ME. afore, aforn. 'As it is afore seid', Book of Quinte Essence, ed. Furnivall, p. 12; aforn, Rom. Rose, 3952. AS. onforan, adv. in front, Grein, ii. 344. There is also an AS. form aforan, prep., Grein, i. 61. See Fore. Der. afore-said, afore-hand, afore-time.

AFFRAID, for affrayed, pp. of affray; see Affray.
AFFREET, AFFRIT, an evil demon. (Arab.) In Southey, Thalaba, bk. xii. st. 19. = Arab. ifrit, a giant, demon, spectre; Rich. Diet. p. 1016.

AFRESH, anew. (E.) Sir T. More, Works, p. 1390 c; Shak. Tam. Shrew, i. 1. 143. Either for on fresh or of fresh. Perhaps the latter, by analogy with anew, q. v.

AFT, AFTER, behind. (E.) Comparison with abaft shows that aft is shortened from AS. æfteran, adv., behind. After answers to AS. æfter, both prep. and adv.; Grein, i. 53, 54. = ICel. aftan (pron. afan), adv. and prep. behind; aftr, aftr, aftran, backwards; aftr, back, in composition; Dan. and Swed. efter, prep. and adv. behind, after; Du. achter, prep. and adv. behind; OIIG. aftr, prep. and adv. behind. ¶ In English, there has, no doubt, been a feeling that after was formed from aftr; but we can only compare the AS. forms æfter and æftan. β. Of these, æftan is cognate with Goth. aftana, from behind, from aftr, behind; and af-tr is from Goth. af, off, away, with an orig. superl. suffix -ta (Ilg. -to), as in Gk. ὑπερ-ῶς, first. γ. After is a comparative form, to be divided as af-ter. The -ter is the suffix which appears in the Gk. comparative form ἄνω-τερος, further off. The positive form af- corresponds to Skt. apa, Gk. ἀπό, L. ab, Goth. af, af, E. of and off. See Of. Der. after-crop, after-moat (q. v.), after-noon, after-piece, after-ward, after-wards (q. v.), ab-af (q. v.).

AFTERMATH, a second crop of mown grass. (E.) In Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xvii. c. 8. Malth = AS. malth, a mowing; Kemble, Cod. Dipl. ii. 400; allied to Mow and to Mead (2), q. v. Cf. G. mahd, a mowing; nachmahd, aftermath.

AFTERMOST, hindmost. (E.) 'The suffix -moat in such words as utmost is a double superlative ending, and not the word most'; Morris, Outlines of Eng. Accidence, p. 110. ME. aftermeste, Early Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 23. AS. æftemest, æftemyst, last, used by Ælfric and Alfred (Bosworth). † Goth. aftumists, the last; also aftuma, the last, which is a shorter form, showing that aftum-ists is formed regularly by the use of the suffix -ists (E. -est). ¶ The division of aftuma is into af and -tu-ma (see explanation of aft), where af is the Goth. af, E. of, and -tu-ma is the same as the L. -tu-mus in OL. op-tu-mus, best, and the Skt. -ta-ma, a double superl. termination. Thus afturmost is for afturmost, i.e. af-to-m-est, superl. of af = of, off. See Aft.

AFTERWARD, AFTERWARDS, subsequently. (E.) ME. afterward, Ormulum, 14793; after-ward, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 24. The adverbial suffix -ward, ME. -es (originally a gen. sing. suffix) was added at a later time. Shakespeare has both forms; and the earliest example of the lengthened form occurs about A.D. 1300, in the form afterwardes; St. Brandan, l. 10 (N.E.D.). AS. afterward, adj. behind, Grein, l. 55. — AS. after, behind; and ward, answering to E. -ward, towards. See After and Towards.

AGA, AGHA, a chief officer; in Turkey. (Turk.) 'Janizaries ... commanded by their Agas;' Sandys, Travels, 1632, p. 48. — Turk. aghā, master.

AGAIN, a second time; AGAINST, in opposition to. (F.) ME. (North.) again, again; (South.) ayen, ayen, aye, onyan, generally written with y for y, and very common both as an adverb and preposition. Also in the (North.) forms againes, againes; (South.) ayaines, ayens, onyaines, generally written with y for y. β. At a later period an excrement i (common after s) was added to the latter, as in whilst from the older form whiles, or in the provincial Eng. wunst for once; and in betwixt-i, amongst-i. Ayens occurs in Maundeville's Travels, p. 220; and ayenest in Chaucer's Boethius, bk. l. pr. 3. 51 (MS. Addit. 10340), it is hardly older than A.D. 1350. γ. The final -es in ayaines is the adverbial suffix -es, originally marking a gen. singular. The form ayaines occurs in Old Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, l. 7; onyaines is in the Ormulum, l. 249; it is hardly older than A.D. 1200, though the word tu-gegens or to-gegens is common at an early period. AS. ongegen, ongean, against, again, prep. and adv. Grein, l. 344. † OSax. angegein, prep. and adv. again, against; Icel. í gegn, against; Dan. igen, adv. again; Swed. igen, adv. again; OHG. ingegene, ingegine (mod. G. entgegen, where the t appears to be merely excrement). ¶ Hence the prefix is plainly the AS. and mod. E. on, generally used in the sense of in. The simple form gean occurs in Caedmon, ed. Thorpe, p. 62, l. 5 (ed. Grein, 1009); 'he him gean þingade' = he addressed him again, or in return; cf. Icel. gegn, G. gegen, contrary to. AS. ongean seems thus to mean 'in opposition to'. The orig. sense seems to have been 'in a direct line with'; hence, over against, opposite; cf. prov. E. gain, direct, straight, Icel. gegn, direct (said of a path); the orig. Teut. type being apparently gaginos*, adv. Cf. Gk. εἰς ἄνω, εἰς ἄνω*, I light upon, I meet with. ¶ The prefix again is very common in Mid. Eng., and enters into numerous compounds in which it frequently answers to L. re or red; e.g. ayenbite = again-biting, i.e. re-morse; ayenbyen = buy back, i.e. red-emption. Nearly all these compounds are obsolete. The chief remaining one is MF. ayen-sien, now shortened to gain-say.

AGALLOCHUM; see Aloes-wood, under Aloe.

AGAPE, on the gape. (F.) In Milton, P. l. v. 357; for on gape; cf. 'on the broad grin'. See Abed; and see Gape.

AGARIC, a kind of fungus. (F. — L. — Gk.) Turner has agarike; Names of Herbs, p. 9. — F. agraric, 'agarick', a white and soft mushroom; Cot. — L. agaricus, = Gk. ἀγρίκιον, a tree-fungus.

AGATE, a kind of stone. (F. — L. — Gk.) Shak. L. L. l. ii. 236. [Perhaps confused with agate or gagate, i.e. jet, in Middle English; see Spec. of Eng. ed. Morris and Skeat, sect. xviii. A. 30, and agate in Halliwell.] — MF. agate, spelt aguite in Cotgrave = L. achates, an agate (see Gower, C. A. iii. 130, bk. vii. 1362); borrowed from Gk. ἀγάθης, an agate, which, according to Pliny, 37, l. 10, was so called because first found near the river Achates in Sicily. For the ME. agate, see Jot.

AGE, period of time, maturity of life. (F. — L.) 'A gode clerk we is in age;' Rob. of Brunne, tr. of P. Langtoft, p. 114. — OF. age, age; fuller form, edage (11th century). — Late L. etaticum, a form which is not found, but the ending -itium is very common; for the changes, see age in Brachet. — L. etatem, acc. of etatis, age; which is a contraction from an older form avitiis, formed by suffixing -itis to the stem avi; from avum, life, period, age. — Gk. αἰών (for αἰών), a period; Goth. aiur, a period, time, age; Skt. āyus, life. Brugm. ii. § 112. Der. age, v.; ag-ed. (See Max Müller, Lectures, l. 337, ii. 274, 8th ed.) And see Age.

AGENT, one who performs or does, a factor. (L.) Shak. Macb. iii. 2. 53. — L. agentem, acc. of agens, pres. pt. of agere, to do, drive, conduct; pp. actus. — Gk. αἰών, to conduct; Icel. aga, to drive; Skt. aj, to drive. — † AG, to drive, conduct. See Brugm. i. 175. Der. agency, from Late L. agentia, a faculty of doing, cf. F. agenceur, to arrange, which see in Brachet; also (from l. pp. actus) act, act-ion, &c. See Act. Also, from the same root, ag-ile, ag-ility; see Agile.

Also, from the same root, ag-itate, ag-itation, ag-itation; see Agitate. Also, from the same root, ag-ony, anti-ag-onist; see Agony. Also amb-ig-uous, q. v., as well as co-ag-nate, co-g-ent, co-g-itate, counter-act, en-act, essay, ex-act, examine, ex-ig-ent, pro-dig-al, trans-act.

AGGLOMERATE, to mass together. (L.) In Coler's Dict. (1684). Used by Thomson, Autum, 766. — L. agglomeratus, pp. of agglomerare, to form into a mass, to wind into a ball. — L. ad, to, together (which becomes ag- before g); and glomerare, to wind into a ball, from glomer, decl. stem of glomus, a clue of thread (for winding), a thick bush, orig. a mass; related to L. globus, a globe, a ball. See Globe. Der. agglomeration.

AGGLUTINATE, to glue together. (L.) Agglutinated occurs in Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 1. § 14. — L. agglutinatus, pp. of agglutinare, to glue together. — L. ad (> ag- before g); glutinare, to fasten with glue, from gluten (decl. stem glutin-), glue. See Glue. Der. agglutination, agglutinate.

AGGRANDISE, to make great. (F. — L.) Young has aggrand-ize, Night Thoughts, Nt. 6, l. 111. — F. aggrandir, extended stem of aggrandir, which Cotgrave explains by 'to greater, augment, enlarge', &c. The older form of the verb was agrandir, with one g, as in mod. F.; the double g is due to analogy with L. words beginning with agg-. — OF. a, to (for L. ad); and grandir, L. grandire, to increase, from grandis, great. See Grand. Der. aggrandisement, in Blount's Gloss.

AGGRAVATE, lit. to make heavy, to burden. (L.) Shak. Rich. II, i. 1. 43. Spelt aggravo in Palgrave, p. 418. — L. aggravatus, pp. of aggravare, to add to a load. — L. ad (> ag- before g); gravare, to load, make heavy, from gravis, heavy. See Grave. Der. aggravation.

AGGREGATE, to collect together. (L.) Aggregate occurs in Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 23. § 7. (ME. has the form aggrege, from the F. aggreger (which see in Brachet); it occurs in Chaucer's Melibeus (l. 2477).) — L. aggregatus, pp. of aggregare, to collect into a flock. — L. ad (> ag- before g); gregare, to collect a flock, from grex (stem greg-), a flock. See Gregarious. Der. aggregate, pp. as adj. or sb.; aggrege, v., aggregation, f.

AGGRESS, to attack. (F. — L.) Prior has aggressing, France; Ode to Qu. Anne, st. 14. — F. agresser, 'to assault, assault, set on'; Cot. — Late L. aggressor. — L. aggressor, pp. of aggradi, I assail. — L. ad (> ag- before g); gradi, I walk, go, from gradus, a step. See Grade. Der. aggression, aggressive, aggressiveness, aggress-or, aggressive, aggressive, to bear heavily upon. (F. — L.) ME. agresser; whence agress, Chaucer, C. T. 2049 (l. 2047); Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 323. — OF. agress, to overwhelm. — OF. a, to; and gress, to burden, injure. — L. ad, to; gravare, to weigh down, from gravis, heavy. See Grave. ¶ Aggress is thus nearly a doublet of aggrandise.

AGHAST, struck with horror. (E.) Misspelt, and often misinterpreted. Rightly spelt agast. [Appearing as agazed in Shak. I Hen. VI, i. 1. 126. 'All the whole army stood agazed on him'; evidently with the notion that it is connected with gaze.] Shakespeare did not write this line, as he rightly has gasted for 'frightened' in Lear, ii. 1. 57; a word which is also rightly misspelt ghasted. 1. ME. agasten, to terrify, of which the pp. is both agast and agast; and examples of the latter are numerous. See Mätzner, Altenglische Sprachproben (Wörterbuch), ii. 41. In Wyclif's Bible, Luke xxiv. 37, we have 'Thei, troublid and agast,' where one MS. has agasted. 'He was abashed and agast;' K. Alisaunder, ed. Weber, l. 224. 'So sore agast was Emelye;' Chaucer, C. T. 2343 (A 2341). 'What may hit be That me agasteth in mydreme!' Leg. of Good Wom. Diol. 248. 'The deouel schal set agasteth ham' — the devil shall yet terrify them; Ancr. Riwle, p. 212. 2. The simple form gasten also occurs. 'Gaste crowen from his corn' — to frighten crows from his corn; P. Plowman, A. vii. 129. — AS. intensive prefix g-; and g-stan, to terrify, hence, to frighten by torture, torment; 'hie g-ston godes ceþpan g-stre and life' — they tortured God's champions with spear and flame; Juliana, 17; Grein, l. 374. The vowel-change in AS. g-stan, EE. gasten, later gasten, is partly parallel to that in AS. lidan, EE. lasten, mod. E. last. The final t in the base g-st- answers to Idg. -d-, which appears to be an addition to the root. B. Hence the root is an AS. g-st-, answering to Goth. gais, to terrify, which appears in the compound us-gaisjan, to make afraid. See Iringmann, l. § 816 (2); and see Ghastly. ¶ With the form agast compare: 'the were so sore agast' — they were so sorely terrified; Chester Plays, ed. T. Wright, ii. 82.

AGILE, active. (F. — L.) Shak. has agile once; Romeo, iii. 1. 171. — F. agile, which Cotgrave explains by 'nimble, agile, active,' &c. — L. agilis, nimble, lit. moveable, easily driven about; formed with suffix -ilis from agere, to drive. — † AG, to drive. See Agent. Der. agil-ity, from F. agilité (Cotgrave); from L. agilitas, acc. of agilis.

AGIO, difference of value in exchanging money. (Ital.) In Bailey, vol. ii (1731). — Ital. agio, ease, convenience.

AGISTMENT, the pasturage of cattle by agreement. (F.—L.) See Halliwell; Blount gives a reference for the word, anno 6 Hen. VI. cap. 5, and instances the verb to agist and the sb. agistor, agistage. All the terms are Law French. The F. verb agister occurs in the Year-Books of Edw. I, vol. iii. 231; agistement in the same, iii. 23; and agistours, pl. in the Statutes of the Realm, vol. i. p. 161, an. 1311. The sb. are from the vb. agister, lit. to assign a resting-place or lodging. — F. a. (L. ad), to; and OF. giste, 'a bed, couch, lodging, place to lie on or to rest in,' Cotgrave. This OF. giste = mod. E. joist; see Joist.

AGITATE, to stir violently. (L.) Shak. has agitation, Mach. v. 1. 12. Agitate is used by Cotgrave to translate F. agiter. — L. agitatus, pp. of agitare, to agitate; which is the frequentative of agere, to drive. See Agent. Der. agitatio, agitation.

AGILET, a tag of a lace; a spangle. (F.—L.) Spenser has agilet, F. Q. ii. 3. 26. Sir T. More agilet, Works, p. 675 h. 'Aggilot, or an agilet to lace with-alle;' Prompt. Parv. = F. agillette, a point (Cotgrave), dimin. of aiguille, a needle; formed by adding the dimin. fem. suffix -ette. — Late L. aculea, for accula, dimin. of L. acus, a needle. — AK, to pierce. See Aoid, Aome.

AGNAIL, a corn on the foot (obsolete); a 'hang-nail.' (E.) Much turns on the definition. In Ash's Dictionary, we find it to be 'the disease called a witlow (sic);' but in Todd's Johnson it is 'a disease of the nails; a whitlow; an inflammation round the nails;' without any citation or authority. The latter definition proves that the definer was thinking of the provincial E. hangnails, more correctly agnails, explained by Halliwell to be 'small pieces of partially separated skin about the roots of the finger-nails;' an explanation due to a perverted meaning (by popular etymology) of AS. agnagel, of which the orig. sense seems to have been a corn on the foot, a compressed, painful, round-headed excrescence fixed in the flesh like an iron nail; see E. D. D. and N. E. D., s.v. agnail. Cf. A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 81, § 34. β. The old word agnail really meant a swelling or a corn. It means 'a corn' in Rider's Dictionary, A.D. 1640 (Webster); especially used of a corn on the foot. Palsgrave has 'agnayle upon ones too;' and in MS. Med. Ling. fol. 300 is a receipt 'for agnayls one [on] mans fete or womans' (Halliwell). The fuller form is agnail; see E. D. D. γ. The sense was much perverted; partly (perhaps) by confusion with MF. agnailles, which Cotgrave explains by 'botches, pockle bumps, or sores;' partly by comparison with late Gk. wapovoxia, late L. paronychia (Pliny, xxi. 20), as if the reference were to a sore between the finger-nail; but chiefly by losing sight of the original sense of 'iron nail' or 'spike.' The etymology is from AS. ang, painful, compressed, as in ang-sum, narrow, hard; and nagel, an (iron) nail, spike. See Anger, Anguish, and Nail. E. Müller cites, as cognate words, OHG. ungnagel, prov. G. annagel, ennagel, O. Fries. ongnail, ongnail.

AGNATE, allied; as sb., a kinsman. (L.) 'Agnation, kindred;' Phillips (1658). — L. agnatus, allied; pp. of agnasci = ad-gnasci. — L. ad, to; nasci, earlier form gnasci, to be born. See Natal.

AGNOSTIC, one who disclaims knowledge of what is behind material phenomena. (Gk.) First used in 1869 (N. E. D.). From Gk. ad-, negative prefix; and Gnostico.

AGO, AGONE, gone away, past. (E.) [Distinct from ago, the old pp. of ago.] ME. ago, agon, agoon: common, and used by Chaucer, C. T., A 1782. This is the pp. of the verb agōn, to go away, pass by. Thus we find 'his worldes wele al agoth;' — this world's wealth all passes away; Reliquie Antique, i. 160. — AS. agān, to pass away (not uncommon); Grein, i. 20. — AS. ā-, prefix, away; and gān, to go. See Go. Cf. G. ergehen, to come to pass; Goth. us-gaggan, to go forth.

AGOG, in eagerness; hence, eager. (F.) Well known as occurring in Cowper's John Gilpin; 'all agog;' i.e. all eager. Gog signifies eagerness, desire; and is so used by Beaumont and Fletcher: 'you have put me into such a gog of going, I would not stay for all the world.' Wit Without Money, iii. 1; near the end. To 'set agog' is to put in eagerness, to make one eager or anxious to do a thing. A-gog, for on gog, is an adaptation of the F. phrase en gogues (Littre), lit. 'in mirth.' Cotgrave has estre en ses gogues, 'to be frolicke, ... in a vein of mirth.' Cf. Norm. dial. en gogue, mirthful, goguer, to be mirthful (Moisy). The origin of OF. gogue, mirth, diversion, is unknown. (Perhaps cf. Breton gogé, trickery, rallery.)

AGONY, great pain. (F.—L.—Gk.) The use of agonie by Gower, C. A. i. 74 (bk. i. 968) shows that the word was not derived directly from Gk., but from French. Wyclif employs agonie in Luke xxii. 43, where the Vulgate has 'factus in agonia.' — F. agonie (Cotgrave). — L. agonia, borrowed from Gk. áywvía, agonia; orig. a contest, wrestling, struggle. — Gk. áywv, (1) an assembly, (2) an arena for combatants, (3) a contest, wrestle. — Gk. áywv, to drive, lead. —

AG, to drive. See Agent. Der. agonis, from F. agoniser, 'to grieve extremely, to be much perplexed' (Cotgrave); whence agonising, agonis-ing; Agonist, directly from Gk. áywvιστής, a champion. Also anti-agonist, anti-agon-istic, anti-agonism.

AGOUTI, a rodent animal, of the guinea-pig family. (F.—Span.—Brazil.) Spelt agouty in Bailey, vol. ii. (1731). — F. agouti. — Span. aguti. — Brazil. acuti, aguti; Hist. Nat. Brasilie, ii. 224.

AGRAFFE, a kind of clasp. (F.—OHG.) In Scott, Ivanhoe, ch. 8. — F. agrafe, also agraffe (Cot.), a hook, clasp; agrafer, to clasp. The verb is from F. a, for L. ad, to; and MHG. kraffe, OHG. crapo, chrapfo, a hook, which is allied to E. cramp.

AGRARIAN, pertaining to land. (L.) 'The Agrarian Law;' Phillips (1658). — L. agrarius, pertaining to land; with suffix -arius (L. -arius). — L. agr., for ager, field; with suffix -arius. See Acro.

AGREE, to accord. (F.—L.) ME. agrēen, to assent. 'That ... Ye wolde somtyme frendly on me see And thanne agrēen that I may ben he;' Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 131. Chaucer also has agrēably, graciously, tr. of Boethius, bk. ii. pr. 4. 93, whence mod. E. agreeably. — OF. agrēer, to receive favourably; a verb made up from the phrase à grē. — OF. à grē, favourably, according to one's pleasure; composed of prep. à, according to (L. ad), and grē, also grēi, grēit, pleasure, from L. neuter grātum, an obligation, favour; from grātus, pleasing. See Grateful. Der. agree-able (F.), agree-able-ness, agree-ment; also dis-agree, dis-agree-able, dis-agree-ment.

AGRICULTURE, the art of cultivating fields. (L.) Used by Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, bk. vi. c. 3. § 7. — L. agricultūra (Cicero). — L. agri, gen. of ager, a field; cultūra, culture. Ager is cognate with E. acre; cultūra is from L. colere, to till, pp. cult-us. See Acro and Culture. Der. agricultural, agriculturalist.

AGRIMONY, a plant. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. agremoine, agremoine, Chaucer, C. T. 16268 (G 800). — MF. agrimoine, agrimoine, 'agrimony, or egrimony;' Cot. — Late L. argimonia, corruption of L. argemônia, a plant, Pliny, xxv. 9 (Lewes). We also find L. argemônē, Pliny, xxvi. 9, answering to a Gk. ἀργεμόνη.

AGROUND, on the ground. (E.) 'For on ground. 'On gronde and on lotte,' i.e. aground and aloft; Piers Plowman, A. i. 88; the B-text reads 'agrounde and aloft,' i. 90.

AH! an interjection. (F.—L.) Not in AS. 'He bleynte and cryde a!' As though he stongen were unto the herte,' Chaucer, C. T. 1080 (A 1078). In the 12th century we find a woh or a wey, i.e. ah! woe! See Old Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 25, 29. — OF. ah, interjection. — L. ah, interjection. — Gr. ā, int.; Skt. ā, int.; Icel. ā, int.; OHG. ā, int.; Lithuanian ā, i, int. See Fick, i. 4. We also find ME. a ha! as in Towneley Myst. p. 214. This is formed by combining a with ha! Matzner remarks that a ha! in Mid. English denotes satisfaction or irony. See Ha!

AHEAD, in front. (E.) Prob. for on head, where on signifies in, as common in ME; cf. afout, abed, &c. Used by Milton, on the Doctrine of Divorce (R.); and Dryden, Enn., bk. v. l. 206. See Head.

AHOY, interj. esp. used in hailing a boat. (E.) The prefixed a- is here a mere interjectional addition, to give the word more force; and ho! is a natural exclamation, which occurs in P. Plowman, C. ix. 123; where the B-text has how! and the A-text has hey! Cf. mod. E. hi!

AI, a three-toed sloth. (Brazil.) Brazil. ai, a kind of sloth; Hist. Nat. Brasilie, ii. 221. Named from its cry.

AID, to help. (F.—L.) Palsgrave has 'I ayde or helpe;' p. 419. — OF. aid, to aid. — L. adiutare, to aid, in Late L. adiutare, afterwards shortened to aiutare; see Brachet. Adiutare is the frequent. form of adiuvare, to assist. — L. ad, to, and iuvare, to help, pp. iutus. Cf. Brugm. ii. § 583. See Adjutant. Der. aid, sb.; also F. aide-de-camp, lit. one who aids in the field. From the same root, adjutant. AIGETTE, a tuft of feathers (orig. those of the egret); a spray of gems. (F.—OHG.) 'Aigrettes by Ombrars won, Wrought of rare gems;' Scott, Vision of Don Roderick, li. 31. — F. aigrette, the lesser white heron; see Egret.

AIL, to feel pain; to give pain. (E.) ME. ailen, rarely ailen. 'What yleth thee?' Chaucer, C. T., A 1081. Spelt eylen, Ormulum, 4767. AS. eglan, to trouble, pain; Grein, i. 222. From AS. egle, troublesome, hostile. — Goth. aglan, only in the comp. us-aglan, to distress, to weary out, Luke, xviii. 3; from aglan, difficult, hard; cf. aglān, anguish; aglikha, tribulation. From a stem ag-, with Idg. adj. suffix -lo-; see Brugmann, ii. § 107. The stem ag- appears in Icel. ag-, mod. E. awe, and in AS. eg-ean, awe, terror, distress, eg-sian, to frighten; also in Goth. ag-is, fright, af-aj-gan, to terrify; also in Gk. 4x-or, distress, pain. See Awe. Der. al-meni, in Kersey, a hybrid compound, with F. suffix.

A1M, to estimate, to intend. (F.—L.) ME. amen, aimen, eimen, to guess at, to estimate, to intend. 'No mon upon wold might ayme the number;'. Will. of Palerne, 1596, 3819, 3875. Wyclif has aymeth, Levit. xxvii. 8. 'Gesayn or ayme, estimo, arbitro'. Prompt. Parv. p. 190. 'I ayme, I mente or gesse to hyt a thynge'. Palsgrave. 'After the mesure and aymyng [i.e. estimation] of the synne;'. Wycl. Levit. v. 18; cf. xxvii. 2, 8.—OF. aesmer, to estimate; prob. confused with aesmer (without e, prefix). [Cotgrave has aesmer, to aim, or levell at; to make an offer to strike, to purpose, determine, intend; also aesme, an aim, or levell taken; also, a purpose, intention, determination.]. The s was dropped in English before m just as in blame, from OF. blasmer, emerald from OF. emeralde, ammell (i.e. en-amel) from OF. esmail (translated by Cotgrave, 'ammell or emmell'), &c. The OF. aesmer = L. aestimare, but OF. aesmer = L. adestimare; yet they may have been confused. There was also a form aesmer, by-form of aesmer. See examples in Godefroy.—L. ad; and aestimare, to estimate. See Estimate. Der. aim, sb., aim-less.

A1R (1), the atmosphere, &c. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. air, air. Spelt ayr in Mandeville's Travels, p. 312; eyre in Chaucer, C. T., G 767 (Can. Yeom. Tale).—F. air, air.—L. air, air.—Gk. 4ip, air, mist; allied to 4nyu, I blow; see Prellwitz. Cf. Skt. va, to blow, and E. wind, q.v. Der. air, verb, ay-y, air-less, air-gun, &c.

A1R (2), demanour; tune; an affected manner. (F.—L.—Gk.) air in the phrase 'to give oneself airs', &c. 'His very air'; Shak. Wint. Tale, v. 1. 128.—F. air, air, mien, tune (see Cot). Affected by Ital. aria, 'a look', . . . a tune; Florio.—L. aeris, fem. of aerius, adj. formed from aer.—Gk. 4ip, air. See Air (1).

A1RT, a point of the compass. (Gael.) In Burns, I love my Jean, l. 1; M. art. Blind Harry, Wallace, l. 309.—Gael. aird, a quarter or point of the compass. Cf. O. Irish aird, a point, limit. Some compare Gk. 4ipus, a point.

A1SLE, the wing of a church. (F.—L.) Spelt aiste in Gray's Elegy and by Addison; see Richardson. Spelt ele in 1370; aile in 1410; also ile, isle.—F. aile, a wing.—L. ala, a wing; the long a being due to contraction. It is no doubt contracted from aetia or aetia, whence the dimin. axilla, a wing; see Cicero, Orat. 45. 153; Brugm. i. § 490. The proper meaning of aetia is rather 'shoulder-blade' or 'shoulder'; cf. G. achsel. It is a diminutive of L. axis, a word borrowed by us from that language. See Axis and Axle. (Max Müller quotes the passage from Cicero; see his Lectures, ii. 309, 8th ed.) ¶ The word aiste was confused with Late L. ascella, a form of axilla; with F. isle (L. insula), to which word it owes its present pronunciation; and even with E. alley; see N. E. D. The spelling is a cross between aile and isle.

A1T, a small island. (F.) ME. ait, ait; Layamon, 1117. 23873. From iget, by-form of iget, AF. form of AS. igod, igod, an island, from AS. ig, O. Merc. eg, island; see Eyot and Ialand. The form iget occurs in Kemble, Cod. Dipl. v. 17. l. 30.

A1TCH-BONE, the rump-bone. (Hybrid; F.—L. and E.) Miss Baker, in her Northamp. Gloss., gives aitch-bone, the extreme end of a rump of beef, cut obliquely. It also appears as edge-bone (Welster), ice-bone (Forby), nache-bone (Carr's Craven Glossary). All the forms are corruptions of nache-bone, i.e. rump-bone. The nache is 'the point of the rump'; Old Country Words, E. D. S., p. 97. We find nache also in Fitzherbert's Husbandry (Glossary); and nach in G. Markham's Husbandry (Of Oxen). The earliest example I have found is nack-bone, Book of St. Albans, leaf 3, b. 1, l. 8; A. D. 1486.—OF. nache, sing. of naches, the buttocks (Godefroy).—Late L. naticas, acc. of natica, buttocks; not in Ducange, but cited by Roquefort. Dimin. of L. natis, pl. of natis, the rump. Allied to Gk. 4avrov, the back. ¶ Dr. Murray draws my attention to the fact that Mr. Nicol obtained this etymology (independently) in 1878; see Minutes of Meetings of Phil. Soc. Feb. 1, 1878.

A1JAR, on the turn; only used of a door or window. (E.) A corruption of a-char, which again stands for on char, i.e. on the turn; from ME. char, a turn.

'Quahairy the day was dawin, weil I knew; . . .

Ane schot-wyndow vnschet a lytill on char,

Persawit the mornyng bla, wan, and har.'

G. Douglas, tr. of Virgil; Prol. to Book vii. 129.

It means 'I undid a shot-window, a little ajar'. The ME. char was earlier spelt chere, as in the Ancræn Riwe, pp. 36, 408; it is not uncommon; see Strattmann.—AS. on cerre, on cyrr, on the turn; where cerre is the dat. case of cer, a turn, turning, time, period; cf. AS. cerran, cirran, cyrran, to turn; Grein, i. 156, 161, 180.—OHG. chirren (G. kehren), to turn.

A1KIMBO, in a bent position. (Scand.) In the Tale of Beryn, ed. Furnivall, oddly spelt in kembow; 'The host . . . set his hand in kembow'; l. 1838 (l. 1105 in Urry). Cotgrave, s. v. Arcade, has 'to set his hands a-kembow. Dryden uses kimbo as an adj. in the sense of 'bent', 'curved'. 'The kimbo handles seem with bears-foot carved;'. Virgil, Eccl. 3. a. It is clear that in kembow, lit. in a sharp curve, is a corruption, because bent in ME. is not used to denote 'sharp' in such a context. Also in here is a translation of the older form ow, of which a is a shortened form (through the intermediate form aw). β. Cf. prov. E. a-kimbou, akimbou, in E. D. D., s. v. kingbow, which suggests that it arose from Icel. 4heng, 'into a crook'; with the E. bow needlessly added. Here heng is the acc. of henger, a crook, twist, kink. Cf. Icel. 4hengbogi, bent into a crook. See Kink.

AKIN, of kin. (E.) For of kin; 'near of kin' and 'near akin' are equivalent expressions. A- for of occurs in Adown, q.v.

ALABASTER, a kind of soft marble. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'Alabaster, a stone;'. Prompt. Parv. p. 8. Wyclif has 'a boxe of alabastre' in Mark xiv. 3, borrowed from the Vulgate word alabastrum.—OF. alabastre (F. albatre).—L. alabastrum, alabaster, alabaster.—Gk. 44abastrop, 44abastrop, alabaster, more properly written 44abastros. Said to be derived from Alabastron, the name of a town in Egypt; see Pliny, Nat. Hist. 36. 8, 37. 10. Another suggestion is to derive the Gk. forms from Arab. al-basrah; where basrah means 'whitish stones, earth out of which they dig stones, also the city of Bassora'; Rich. Diet. p. 275. (Zeitschrift der deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, xxv. 538.)

ALACK, interjection. (E.) Very common in Shakespeare; Temp. i. 2. 151; L. L. L. ii. 186, &c. From ME. a, ah! interjection; and lak, signifying loss, failure, defect, misfortune. 'God in the gospel grymly reproth Alle that lakken any lyf, and lakkes han hem-seluc'—God grimly reproves all that blame anybody, and have faults themselves; P. Plowman, B. x. 262. Thus alack would mean 'ah! failure' or 'ah! a loss'; and alackaday would stand for 'ah! lack on (the) day', i.e. ah! a loss to-day! It is almost always used to express failure. Cf. alack the day! Shak. Pass. Pilgrim, 227. In modern English lack seldom has this sense, but merely expresses 'want'.

ALACRITY, briskness. (L.) Sir T. More has alacritie, Works, p. 75 b. [The word must have been borrowed directly from the Latin, the termination being determined by analogy with such words as bounty (from OF. bonte, bontet, L. acc. bonitatem). This we know because the MF. form was alacreté, which is seen in Cotgrave; the form alacrité being modern.]—L. acc. alacritatem, from nom. alacritas, briskness.—L. alacer, brisk. Perhaps from 4EL, to drive, Fick, i. 500; he compares Gk. 444avrov, 444avrov, to drive. ¶ The Ital. allegro is likewise from L. alacer.

ALARM, a call to arms. (F.—Ital.—L.) ME. alarme, used interjectionally, to call men to arms. 'Alarme! Alarme! quath that lord;'. P. Plowman, C. xxiii. 92.—F. alarme, a call to arms. Cotgrave gives 'Alarme, an alarm'. Brachet says that the word alarme was first introduced into French in the 16th century, but this must be a mistake, as it occurs in the Glossary to Bartsch's Crestomathie, and came to England before 1400. The form, however, is not French, as the OF. form was armes; and we actually find armes in Alisander, ed. Weber, 3674. It was obviously borrowed from Italian, and may have become generally known in the crusades.—Ital. alarme, to arms! a contracted form of alle arme, where alle stands for a le, lit. 'to the', and arme is the pl. of arma, a weapon, not now used in the singular. The corresponding Latin words would be ad illa arma, but it is remarkable that the L. pl. arma is neuter, whilst the Ital. pl. arme is feminine. Ducange, however, notes a Late L. sing. arma, of the feminine gender; and see Ital. alle arme answers to Late L. ad illis armis. See Arms. Der. alarmist. ¶ Alarm is a doublet of alarm, q.v.

ALARUM, a call to arms; a loud sound. (F.—L.—Ital.) ME. alarum; mention is made of a 'loude alarum' in Allit. Poms, ed. Morris, B. 1207. The o is no real part of the word, but due to the strong trilling of the preceding r. Similarly in Havelok the Dane, the word arm is twice written arum, ll. 1982, 2408; harm is written harum, and corn is written koren. Thus alarum is really the word alarm, which see above.

ALAS, an interjection, expressing sorrow. (F.—L.) ME. alas, allas. Occurs in Rob. of Glouc. p. 125, l. 2670; Havelok, l. 1878.—OF. alas, interjection. [The mod. F. has only kélas, formed with interj. ké in place of the interj. a, the second member las being often used as an interjection in OF. without either prefix.]—OF. a, ah! and las! wretched (that I am)! Cf. Ital. ahi lasso (or lassa), ah! wretched (that I am)!—L. ah! interj. and lassus, fatigued, miserable. See Brugm. i. § 197, where he supposes lassus to stand for 4ad-lus, and compares it with Goth. lats, which is the E. late. See Late.

ALB, a white priestly vestment. (F.—L.) ME. alb, Rob. of Brunne's tr. of Langtoft, p. 319; and in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 163.—OF. albe, an alb.—Late L. alba, an alb; fem. of L. albus, white. Cf. Gk. 444444, a white rash; OHG. albiz, a swan; see Brugm. i. § 481. Cf. album, alumen.

ALBACORE, a kind of tunny. (Port.—Arab.?) 'The fish which is called albacore;' Hakluyt, Voy. ii. pt. 3. p. 100. =Port. albacor, albacora (Span. albacora). Said to be of Arab. origin (N. E. D.).

ALBATROSS, a large sea-bird. (Port.—Span.—Arab.—Gk.) The word occurs in Hawkesworth's Voyages, A.D. 1773 (Todd's Johnson). 'The name albatross is a word apparently corrupted by Dampier [died 1712] from the Portuguese alcátraz, which was applied by the early navigators of that nation to cormorants and other sea-birds.' Eng. Cyclopaedia. [Dampier, Voy. i. 531, has alcatrosses; N. E. D.] And Drayton has alcátraz, in his poem named The Owl. =Portuguese alcátraz, a sea fowl; Span. alcátraz, a pelican. Variant of Port. alcátraz, a bucket, Span. arcaduz, M. Span. alcaduz (Minshew), a bucket on a water-wheel. =Arab. al-qādūs, the same (Dozy). [Similarly, Arab. sagāḥ, a water-carrier, a pelican, because it carries water in its pouch (Devic; supp. to Littre).] Finally, Arab. qādūs is from Gk. qados, a jar, cask.

ALBEIT, although it may be. (E.) ME. al be it, Cursor Mundi, 4978. From ME. al, in the sense 'although'; be, subj. mood, pres. t.; and it.

ALBINO, a human being with skin and hair abnormally white, and pink eyes. (Span.—L.) Applied to some negroes by the Portuguese (1777; N. E. D.); but the word is rather Spanish. =Span. albino, 'born with very white hair and a white skin'; Pineda. =L. albus, white; with suffix -inus. See Alb.

ALBUMEN, white of eggs. (L.) Merely borrowed from L. albumen ovi, the white of an egg, rarely used. More commonly albumen ovi. From L. albus, white (whence albū-men, lit. whiteness). See A. b. Der. albumin-ous.

ALCAIDE, a judge. See Cadi.

ALCHEMY, the science of transmutation of metals. (F.—Arab.—Gk.) Chaucer has alkemist, an alchemist; C. T., G. 1204. The usual ME. forms of the word are alcanemy and alcanomy; P. Plowman, A. xi. 157; Gower, C. A. ii. 89 (bk. iv. 2612); where the mistaken suffix -omy is imitated from that of astronomy. =OF. alchemie, arguemie; see arguemie in Roquefort. =Arab. al-kīmīā; in Freytag, iv. 75 b, Rich. Dict. p. 1224; a word from no Arabic root, but composed of the Arabic def. article al, prefixed to the late Gk. χημία, i.e. 'transmutation' of gold and silver, occurring about A.D. 300 (N. E. D.). =Late Gk. χημία, transmutation of metals, alchemy, chemistry, a work of uncertain origin, which was confused with Gk. χημία, a mingling, from Gk. χέω, to pour (root χέω), cognate with funder. See Chemist. See N. E. D.; and Devic.

ALCOHOL, pure spirit. (Low L.—Arabic.) From Low L. alcohol, the original signification of which is a fine, impalpable powder. 'If the same salt shall be reduced into alcohol, as the chymists speak, or an impalpable powder, the particles and intercepted spaces will be extremely lessened;' Boyle (in Todd's Johnson). =Arab. alkohl, compounded of al, the definite article, and khāl, (the very fine) powder of antimony, used to paint the eyebrows with; from kahala, to stain the eyes; cf. Heb. kāhal (the same), Gesenius, p. 376. And see T. L. O. Davies, Supplementary Glossary. See Richardson's Dict. p. 1173; cf. kahl, collyrium; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 484. The extension of meaning from 'fine powder' to 'rectified spirit' is European, not Arabic. Der. alcohol-ic, alcohol-ize.

ALCORAN; see KORAN. (Al is the Arabic def. article.)

ALCOVE, a recess, an arbour. (F.—Span.—Arabic.) 'The Ladies stood within the alcove;' Burnet, Hist. of His Own Time, an. 1688 (R.) =F. alcove, a word introduced in the 16th century from Spanish. =Span. alcoba, a recess in a room; 'a close room for a bed;' Minshew (1633). =Arab. al, def. article, and qubbah, a vaulted space or tent; Freytag, iii. 388 a; qubbah, a vault, arch, dome; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 467. See Alcova in Diez, whose explanation is quite satisfactory. ¶ Not to be confused with E. cone.

ALDER, a kind of tree. (F.) Chaucer has alder, C. T. 2923 (Kn. Ta. 2063). 'Allder-tree or oryelle tree, alnus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 9. [The letter d is, however, extraneous, as in alder-first for alder-first, i.e. first of all; or as in alder-lest, used by Shakespeare for alder-lest. Hence the older form is aller.] 'Coupet de aune, of alterne;' Wright's Vocabularies, i. 171; 13th century. =AS. alr, an alder-tree =L. alnus; Elric's Glossary, Nomina Arborum; also alor, alder =Du. els, alder; elzen, alder; elzen-boom, alder tree; Icel. ölr, an alder; Swed. äl; Dan. äl; OHG. elira, erila, erla; MHG. erle; G. erle; prov. G. eller, alder; Span. aliso (from Gothic). Test. types aluz*, aluz*. Allied to L. alnus; Lithuanian alnis (with excrement al), an alder-tree; Church-Slavonic jelikka, an alder-tree; Russian oljka. Perhaps allied to elm.

ALDER, prefix, of all. (F.) As in alder-lest, dearest of all, 2 Hen. VI. i. 1. 28. For ME. aller, alre, O. Merc. alra, AS. alra, gen. pl. of al, col, all; see Al.

ALDERMAN, a chief officer in the corporation of a town. (E.) ME. alderman, alderman. 'Principes, alderman;' Wright's Vocabularies, 538; 14th century. Spelt alderman in Layamon, i. 60. =O. Merc. and Northumbrian alderman, used to explain centurio in Mark, xv. 39, and occurring in many other passages in the Northumbrian glosses; West-Saxon alder-man, a chief. See Turner's Hist. of the Anglo-Saxons, bk. viii. c. 7. =AS. aldor, alder, a chief (Grein, i. 241); and man, a man. Allied to O. Fries. alderman, a chief; alder, a parent; G. eltern, parents; L. al-tor, a bringer up, from alere, to nourish. E. old, is from the same root; see Old.

ALE, a kind of beer. (E.) ME. ale, Reliquie Antique, i. 177; Layamon, ii. 604. AS. eadu, Grein, i. 244 (gen. alof); stem alut*, + Icel. öl; Swed. öl; Dan. öl; Lithuanian alus, a kind of beer; Church-Slavonic olu, beer. ¶ [See Fick, iii. 57. [The nature of the connexion with Gaelic and Irish ol, drink, is not clear.] Der. brid-al, i.e. bride-ale; ale-vake (Chaucer), ale-house, ale-wife, ale-conner (see Con).

ALEMBIC, a vessel formerly used for distilling. (F.—Span.—Arab.—Gk.) Also limbeck, as in Shak. Macb. i. 7. 67, but that is a docked form. Chaucer has the pl. alembikes, C. T., G. 794. =F. alambique, 'a limbeck, a stillatory;' Cot. =Span. alambique. =Arab. al-anbiq; where al is the definite article, and anbiq (pron. ambiq) is 'a still,' adapted from the Greek. =Gk. ἀμβίκτη, stem of ἀμβίκτης, a cup, goblet, used by Dioscorides to mean the cap of a still.

ALERT, on the watch. (F.—Ital.—L.) Alertness, Spectator, no. 566. 'The prince, finding his ruttlers [knights] alert, as the Italians say,' &c.; Sir R. Williams, Actions of the Low Countries, 1618, p. 27 (R.). =F. alerte, formerly alterte, and in Montaigne and Rabelais à l'erte, à l'erte, on the watch; originally a military term, borrowed from Italian in the 16th century (Brachet). =Ital. all'erta, on the watch; properly in the phrase stare all'erta, to be on one's guard. =Ital. alta (for la), at the, on; and erita, fem. of adj. erito, erect. =L. ad, prep., at; illam, fem. accus. of ille, he; and erectum, fem. accus. of erectus, erect. See Erect. ¶ The phrase 'on the alert' contains a reduplication; it means 'on-the-at-the-erect.' Der. alert-ness.

ALGEBRA, calculation by symbols. (Low L.—Arab.) It occurs in Ben Jonson, The Alchemist, i. 1. 38. Brachet (s.v. algebra) terms algebra a medieval scientific Latin form; and Prof. De Morgan, in Notes and Queries, 3 S. ii. 319, cites a Latin poem of the 13th century in which 'computation' is oddly called 'ludus algebrae almuqabalaque.' β. This phrase is a corruption of Arab. al-jabr wa'l muqabala, lit. the putting-together-of-parts and the equation, to which the nearest equivalent English phrase is 'restoration and reduction.' γ. In Palmer's Pers. Dictionary, col. 165, we find 'Arabic jabr, power, violence; restoration, setting a bone; reducing fractions to integers in Arithmetic; al-jabr wa'l muqabala, algebra.' =Arab. jabara, to set or re-unite a bone, to bind together, to consolidate. Muqabala is lit. 'comparison;' from the root qabala, he approached; Rich. Dict., pp. 494, 1114, 1465. Der. algebra-ic, algebra-ist.

ALGUAZIL, a police-officer. (Span.—Arab.) In Beaum. and Fletcher, Span. Curate, v. 2. =Span. alguazil, a police-officer; spelt alguazil in Minshew's Dict., 1623. =Arab. al, def. art., the; and wazir, a vizier, officer, lieutenant. Cf. Port. avasil. See Vizier.

ALGUM, the name of a tree; sandal-wood. (Heb.—Skt.) Called algum in 2 Chron. ii. 8, ix. 10, 11; corrupted to almug in 1 Kings, x. 11, 12. =Heb. alghumim; or (transposed) almugin. A foreign word in Hebrew, and borrowed from some Indo-germanic source, being found in Sanskrit as valguka, sandal-wood. 'This valguka, which points back to a more original form valgu [for the syllable -ka is a suffix], might easily have been corrupted by Phœnician and Jewish sailors into algum, a form, as we know, still further corrupted, at least in one passage of the Old Testament, into almug. Sandal-wood is found indigenous in India only, and there chiefly on the coast of Malabar.' Max Müller, Lectures, i. 232, 8th ed.

ALIAS, otherwise. (L.) Low Latin; aliās, otherwise; from alius, another. From the same root as E. else. See Alien and Elise.

ALIEN, strange; a stranger. (F.—L.) We find 'an aliene knight;' K. Alisaunder, ed. Weber, l. 3919. Wyclif has aliens, i.e. strangers, Matt. xvii. 24; also 'an alien woman,' Eccles. xi. 36. 'Aliens sould some fond our heritage to wyne;' Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 141. =OF. alien, alien, a stranger (Roquefort). =L. aliēnus, a stranger; or as adj., strange. =L. alius, another (stem ali-, whence ali-inus is formed). + Gk. άλλος, another; Goth. aljis (stem aljo-), other; Old Irish alio, another. Brugm. i. § 175. See Elise. Der. alien-able, alien-ate, alien-at-ion; cf. al-ter, al-ter-nate, al-ter-c-at-ion.

ALIGHT, (1) to descend from; (2) to light upon. (E.) 1. ME. alighten, alhiten, particularly used of getting off a horse. 'Heo lotten alle the horsmen i than wude alhten.' =they caused all the horsemen to alight in the wood; Layamon, iii. 58, 59. 2. Also ME. alighten, alighten; as in 'ur loured an erthe alighten her' = our Lord alighted here upon earth; Koh. of Glouc. p.l. 668, l. 9589. β. The two senses of the word seem at first to show that the prefix a- has not the same force in both cases; but both go back to AS. alhtian, to get down, in Alfric's Grammar, 1b. (Quarta Conj. § iii; where we find 'Disulo, of alhtite' so that the prefix is the AS. intensive prefix a-; see ā- (4). The simple form lhtian, to alight (from horseback), occurs in the Death of Byrthnoth, ed. Grein, l. 23. [The radical sense of lhtian is to render light, to remove a burden from,] = O. Merc. lht, Northumbrian lht, West-Saxon lroht, light (i.e. unheavy); see AS. Gospels, Matt. xi. 30. See Light (3).

ALIGN: see Aline.

ALIKE, similar. (E.) ME. alike, alyke, adj. and adv. 'Alyke or cunnlyke, equalis; alyke, or lyke yn lyknes, similis.' Prompt. Parv. p. 10. Also olike, Gen. and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 2024. α. The forms alike, olike, are short for anlike, onlike; the adverbial form retains the final a, but the adj. is properly without it. β. The adj. form alike is also written anlike, as in 'ther is him anlike' — that is like him; Aenbite of Iawyt, p. 186. γ. The prefix is therefore a- or o-, short for an- or on-, and corresponding to AS. on-, = AS. onlic, adj. Grein, ii. 248; also written anlic, Grein, i. 8. = AS. on, prep. on, upon; and lic, like. Cf. also Icel. álíkr, the form cognate with AS. on- lic; which was doubtless confused with it (N. E. D.). ¶ The fullest form appears in the Gothic adv. analeiks, in like manner. See Like and On.

ALIMENT, food. (F.-L.) Milton has alimental, P. L. v. 424; Bacon has 'medicine and aliment.' Nat. Hist. sect. 66. = F. aliment, 'food, sustenance, nourishment'; Cot. = L. alimentum, food; formed with suffix -mentum from alere, to nourish. [This suffix is due to a combination of the Idg. suffixes -men and -to, on which see Brugmann.] = L. alere, to nourish. † Goth. alre, to nourish; Icel. ala, to nourish, support. Cf. Old Irish altram, nourishment. = √ al-, to nourish. See Brugmann, i. § 490. Der. alimental, aliment-ary, aliment-al-ion; cf. also aliminy (from L. alimonia, sustenance, which from stem ali- with suffixes -min and -ia). ¶ From the same root al- we have also adolescent, ad-ult, old, elder, alder; also altitude, alto, coalesce, enalt, haughty, hautbois, proletarian.

ALINE, ALIGN, to range in a line. (F.-L.) Aline is first used in 1693 (N. E. D.). From F. aligner, to range in a line. = F. à l'igée, into line. = L. ad, to; linea, a line. See Line. ¶ Aline is the better spelling for the F. word.

ALIQUEOT, proportionate. (F.-L.) Borrowed from F. aliquote, as in partie aliquote, a proportional part. = Late L. aliquota, fem. of aliquotus, an adj. made from L. aliquot, indef. indecl. numeral, 'several'; which is from ali- us, other, some, and quot, how many.

ALIVE, in life. (E.) A contraction of the ME. phrase on live, in life, where on signifies in, and live or lyve (livē, lyv) is the dat. case of lyf, life. 'Yf he haue wyt and his on lyve' = if he has wit, and is alive; Seven Sages, ed. Wright, l. 56. = AS. on lyfe, alive, Grein, ii. 184; where on is the preposition, and lyfe is dat. case of lyf, life. See On and Life.

ALKALI, a salt. (Arabic.) Chaucer has alkaly, C. T. G 810. = Arab. al qali; where al is the def. article, and qali is the name given to the 'calcin'd ashes' of the plant glass-wort (Salicornia), which abounds in soda. ¶ By some, qali is derived from the Ar. verb qalay, to fry, hence, to calcine (Rich. Dict. p. 1146); Palmer's Pers. Dict. gives 'qali, alkali,' and 'qaliyah, a fricassee, curry'; col. 474. Der. alkali-ness, alkal-escant, alkal-oid, alkali-fy.

ALL, every one of. (E.) ME. al in the singular, and alle (disyllabic) in the plural; the mod. E. is the latter, with the loss of final e. Chaucer has al, i.e. the whole of, in the phrase 'al a companye,' C. T. G 996; also al, i.e. wholly. C. T. C 633. The plural alle is very common. = AS. eal, sing., ealle, plural; but the mod. E. follows the O. Merc. form alle; see Matt. v. 15 (Rushworth gloss); = Icel. allr, sing., allir, pl.; Swed. all, pl. alle; Dan. al, pl. alle; Du. al, alle; OHG. al, aller; Goth. all, allai. Teut. type alno-*. Allied to Irish and Gael. uile, all, every, whole; from Idg. type oļios*; Stokes-Fick, p. 52. Brugmann (ii. § 66) takes Teut. alno-* as from Teut. alan-* (Goth. alan), to grow up, to increase; allied to L. alere, to nourish. As if al = full, complete. ¶ When al is used as a prefix, it was formerly spelt with only one l, a habit still preserved in a few words. The AS. form of the prefix is eal. O. Merc. al, Icel. al, Gothic ala-. Hence al-mighty, al-most, al-one, al-so, al-though, al-together, al-ways, and ME. al-gates, i.e. always. This prefix is now written all in later formations, as all-powerful, &c. In all-hallows, i.e. all saints, the double l is correct, as denoting the plural. ¶ In the phrase all-to-brake, Judges, ix. 53, there is an ambiguity. The proper spelling, in earlier English, would be al tobak, where al is an adverb, signifying 'utterly,' and tobak the 3 p. s. pt. of the verb tobroken, to break in pieces; so that al tobak mean 'utterly broke in pieces.' The verb tobroken is common; as 'Al is to-broken thilke region'; Chaucer, C. T. A 2757 (Harl. MS.). β. There was a large number of similar verbs, such as tobresten, to burst in twain, toclossen, to cleave in twain, todelen, to divide in twain, &c.; see Stratmann's OE. Dict. pp. 611-616. γ. Again, al was used before other prefixes besides to; as 'he was al awondred.' Will. of Palerne, 1.87; and again 'al biweped for wo.' id. 661. δ. But about A.D. 1500, this idiom became misunderstood, so that the to was often joined to al (misspelt all), producing a form all-to, which was used as an intensive prefix to verbs, yet written apart from them, as in 'we be fallen into the dirt, and be all-to dirtied.' Latimer, Remains, p. 297. See the article on all to in Eastwood and Wright's Bible Wordbook. ε. The gen. pl. of AS. eal was ealra, in later English written all, and sometimes alder, with an inserted excrement d. Hence Shakespeare's allertiest is for allertiest, i.e. dearest of all; 2 Hen. VI. i. 1. 28. See Almighty, Almost, Alone, Already, Also, Although, Altogether, Always, As, Withal; also Hallowmass.

ALLAY, to assuage. (E.) The history of this word proves that the orig. F. verb has been confused with four other verbs of Romance origin; for the full history, see N. E. D. The orig. source is seen in ME. alegen, alaian, to put down; as in 'unbilene, bat is aiware alaid,' unbelieve, that is everywhere put down; OE. Homilies, ii. 11. The stem of ME. alegen is due to AS. alg-, stem of the 2nd and 3rd persons sing. pres. of AS. alegan, to put down, which also produced ME. alegen, to lay aside. = AS. ā-, prefix; and legan, to lay; see ā- (4) and Lay (1). ¶ But confused with ME. alegen, to alleviate, which is really no more than a (French) doublet of (the Latin) alleviare, q. v. Cf. 'Allegory, to soothe, or release peyne, allevio.' Prompt. Parv. p. 9. And further confused with an obs. v. aleye, to allege, and with old forms of F. alloy.

ALLEGATE, to affirm. (F.-L.) ME. alegen, alegen, to affirm. 'Alleggen awtowa, allego.' Prompt. Parv. p. 9. 'Thei wol alegen also, and by the gospel preuen;' P. Plowman, B. xi. 88. In form, the ME. alegen answers to AF. allegier, allegier = OF. allegier, 'to clear' at law (see Godefroy); from AF. a- = OF. ex- (L. ex-), and ligier, to contend, from L. litigare, to contend, to litigate; see Litigate. β. This AF. alegier was Latinised (wrongly) as allegiare (Ducauge), and was treated as if allied to MF. alleguer, 'to allende, to urge, or produce reasons;' Cot.; from L. allegare, to send, despatch; also to bring forward, mention. = L. al-, for ad; and ligere, to send, appoint; from leg-, stem of lex, law. See Legal. ¶ The MF. alleguer (if influenced by the AF. alegier) would have produced an F. form allengue. Der. alleg-at-ion, from F. allegation, L. acc. allegatiōnem (correctly).

ALLEGIANCE, the duty of a subject to his lord. (F.-OHG.) Fabyan has alleguence, cap. 207. § 5. The older form is with one l. 'Of alegeance now lerneth a lesson other tweyne;' Richard the Redeles, i. 9. Spelt alegeuans in Wyntoun, vii. 8. 14. Formed by prefixing a- (= F. a-, L. ad-) to the word legeance, borrowed from the OF. ligeance, ligeance, homage. Of these forms, ligeance was due to an imaginary connexion with L. ligare, to bind; but ligeance was derived from OF. lige, lige; with suffix -ance (= L. -antia). Of Germanic origin; see Liege.

ALLEGORY, a kind of parable. (L.-Gk.) The pl. allegories occurs in Tyndal's Prolog. to Leviticus, and Sir T. More's Works, p. 1041 n. ME. allegorie, Wyclif, Gal. iv. 24 (earlier version). [Cf. MF. allegorie, an allegory; Cot.] = L. allegoria, borrowed from Greek, in the Vulgate version of Galat. iv. 24. = Gk. ἀλληγορία, a description of one thing under the image of another; cf. ἀλληγορεῖν, to speak so as to imply something else. = Gk. ἀλλο-, stem of ἄλλος, another; and ᾠον, as in ᾠονεῖν, to speak, ᾠονά, a public assembly, allied to ᾠονεῖν, to assemble. The prefix ἀ- appears to answer to Skt. sa, together, and -ᾠονεῖν implies a base ᾠ-, with which L. gras, a flock, is connected; Brugmann, i. § 633. Der. allegor-ic, allegor-ic-al, allegor-ic-al-ly, allegor-ise, allegor-ist.

ALLEGRO, lively, brisk. (Ital.-L.) In Milton's L'Allegro, l. = lo, the Ital. def. article, from L. ille, he (acc. illum). The Ital. allegro, brisk, is from L. alacrum*, substituted for alacrem, acc. of alacer, brisk. See Alacrity. Der. allegro-eto.

ALLELUIA, ALLELUIAH, an expression of praise. (L.-Gk.-Heb.) L. alleluia; Rev. xix. 6. = Gk. ἀλληλουία; Rev. xix. 6. Better hallelujah. = Heb. hallelū jäh, praise ye Jehovah. = Heb. hallelū, praise ye, from hālal, to shine, which in one 'voice' signifies 'praise'; and jäh, Jah, Jehovah.

ALLEViate, to lighten. (L.) Used by Bp. Hall, Balm of Gilead, c. 1. § 2. Formed as if from alleviatus, pp. of Late L. alleviare, to alleviate; see note on Abbreviate. = L. alleviare, to lighten, which passed into the occasional form alleviare, as in Isaias, ix. 1 (Vulgate). = L. al-, for ad; and leviare, to lift up, to lighten, from levis, light, cognate with Gk. λαγνός, small. Der. allevial-ion.

ALLEY, a walk. (F.-L.) ME. aley, alley. 'So longe aboute the aleys is he goon.' Chaucer, C. T. 10198 (E 2344). = OF. ale, a gallery; a participial substantive. = OF. ale, pp. cm. of aler, to go; mod. F. aller. ¶ The etymology of F. aller, much and long discussed, remains unknown. The Prov. equivalent is enar, allied to Ital. andare, to go.

ALLIANCE, ALLIES. See Ally.

ALLIGATION, a rule in arithmetic. (L.) Phillips (ed. 1658) has 'Alligation, a binding unto.' The verb alligare, to bind together, is hardly in use; Rich. shows that it occurs in Hale's Origin of Man-kind (1677), pp. 305, 334. The sb. is formed, with suffix -tion (F.-tion, L. acc. -tionem) from L. alligare, to bind together.—L. al-, for ad; and ligare, to bind. See Ligament.

ALLIGATOR, a crocodile. (Span.—L.) Properly it merely means 'the lizard.' In Shak. Romeo, v. i. 43. A mere corruption from the Spanish. Called 'a monstrous legarto or crocodile' by J. Hortop in 1591; Eng. Garner, ed. Arber, v. 314. [The F. alligator is borrowed from English.]—Span. el lagarto, the lizard, a name esp. given to the American crocodile, or cayman. 'In Hawkins's Voyage, he speaks of these under the name of alagarticos;' Wedgwood.—L. ille, he (whence Ital. il, Span. el, the); and laceratus (more commonly lacerata), a lizard. See Lizard.

ALLITERATION, repetition of initial letters. (L.) The well-known line 'For apt alliteration's artful aid' occurs in Churchill's Prophecy of Famine; i. 86. The stem alliterat- is formed as if from the pp. of a L. verb alliterare*, which, however, did not exist. This verb is put together as if from L. ad litteram, i.e. according to the letter. Thus the word is a mere modern invention. See Letter. Der. A verb, to alliterate (found in 1816), and an adj., alliterative (found in 1764), have been invented to match the sb.

ALLOCATE, to place or set aside. (L.) Burke, On the Popery Laws, uses allocate in the sense of 'to set aside; by way of maintenance for children. [On the suffix -ate, see Abbreviate.]—Late L. allocutus, pp. of allocuere, to allot; see Dugange.—L. al-, for ad; and locuere, to place, from locus, a place. See Locus. Der. allocution. Allocate is a doublet of allow, to assign. See Allow (1).

ALLOUTION, an address. (L.) Spelt alocation by Sir G. Wheler in 1689 (K.). Borrowed from Latin; with F. suffix -ion < L. acc. ending -iōnem.—L. allocutio, allocutio, an address.—L. ad, to; and locutio, a speaking, allied to locutus, pp. of loqui, to speak; see Locution.

ALLODIAL, not held of a superior; used of land. (L.—Teut.) Englished from Late L. allodialis, an adj. connected with the sb. allodium. 'The writers on this subject define allodium to be every man's own land, which he possesseth merely in his own right, without owing any rent or service to any superior;' Blackstone, Comment. b. ii. c. 7. a. The word allodium is 'Merovingian Latin; Brachet (s. v. allod). It is also spelt aloudum, alaudium, alodium, alodum, alodis (Lex Salica), and means a free inheritance, as distinguished from beneficium, a grant for the owner's life-time only. b. The word appears as allue in French, which Brachet derives from O. Frankish alūd (see Schade), meaning 'entire property,' or 'entirely one's property;' where al- is related to E. all, and ūd signifies 'property' or 'wealth.' This O. Frank. ūd is cognate with OHG. ūd, AS. ēad, Icel. auðr, wealth; originally 'a thing granted,' as it is derived from a strong verb of which the Teut. type is audan-*, to grant, represented by AS. ēadan (pt. t. ēod), to grant. Cf. Goth. auða-hafis, blessed.

ALLOPATHY, an employment of medicines to produce an effect different to those produced by disease; as opposed to homœopathy, q. v. (Gk.) Modern. Formed from Gk. ἄλλο-, for ἄλλος, another; and -πάθεια, allied to πάθος, suffering, from παθεῖν, πάσχειν, to suffer. See Pathos. Der. allopathic, allopathist.

ALLOT, to assign a portion or lot to. (Hybrid; AF.—L. and F.) A hybrid compound; formed by prefixing the AF. or OF. a- (for L. ad) to the English word lot. AF. allot, Year-book of Edw. I. (1304–5), p. 337. Cotgrave gives MF. Allotir, to divide or part, to allot; also 'Allotement, a parting, dividing; an allotting, or laying out, unto every one his part.' [It is likely that the F. word was borrowed from the English in this case.] Shak. not only has allot, but even allottery, As You Like It, i. i. 77; and allotted occurs much earlier, viz. in Lord Surrey's translation of the 2nd bk. of the Æneid, i. 554 (or l. 722 of the E. version). See Lot. Der. allotment, allottery.

ALLOW (1), to assign, grant as a portion or allowance. (F.—L.) 1. Properly distinct from allow in the sense of 'to approve of,' to praise, which is the common sense in old writers; see Luke, xi. 48. Shakespeare has both verbs, and the senses run into one another so that it is not always easy to distinguish between them in every case; indeed, they were often confused, which produced new senses; see N. E. D. Perhaps a good instance is in the Merch. of Ven. iv. i. 303, 'the law allows it,' i.e. assigns it to you. 2. This verb is rare in early use, and Shakespeare is an early authority for it when it was becoming very common.—F. allowier, formerly alouer, 'to let out to hire, to appoint or set down a proportion for expence, or for any other employment;' Cot.—Law L. allocaere, to admit a thing as proved, to place, to use, expend, consume; see Dugange. [Blount, in his Law

Dict., gives allocation as a term used in the exchequer to signify 'an allowance made upon an account.'] See Allocate. Der. allow-able, allow-able-ness, allow-ably, allow-ance. Doublet, allocate.

ALLOW (2), to praise, highly approve of. (F.—L.) Sometimes confused with the preceding; now nearly obsolete, though common in early authors, and in earlier use than the former. See Luke, xi. 48. ME. aloun. Chaucer rhymes 'I allow the' I praise thee, with the sb. youthe, youth; C. T. 10988 (F 676).—OF. alouer, later alouer, 'to allow, advow [i.e. advocate], to approve, like well of;' Cot.—L. allaudare, allaudare, to applaud.—L. ad, to; and laudare, to praise. See Laud.

ALLOY, a due proportion in mixing metals. (F.—L.) [The verb to alloy is made from the substantive, which was formerly spelt alay or allay, though wholly unconnected with the verb allay, to assuage.] ME. sb. alay; Chaucer has the pl. alays, C. T. 9043 (E 1167). The sing. alay is in P. Plowman, R. xv. 342; the pp. alayed, alloyed, is in P. Plowman, C. xviii. 79.—AF. and OF. alai, alai, admixture or combination (of metals); a sb. due to the v. valeir, to combine.—L. alligare, to combine or join together.—L. al-, for ad, to; and ligare, to bind. See Ligament. In later Central F., the forms alei, alier, became aloi, aloier, and were then confused with the phrase à loi, from L. ad legem, according to law; and this false etymology was commonly accepted. The form alay, sb., occurs in the Statutes of the Realm, i. 140 (A. D. 1300). Cf. Span. and Port. ligar, to tie, bind, to alloy or alloy; from L. ligare.

ALLUDE, to hint at. (L.) Used by Sir T. More, Works, p. 860 a.—L. alludere, to laugh at, allude to.—L. al-, for ad; and ludere, to play, pp. lūsus. See Ludicrous. Der. allusion, allusive, allusively; from pp. allūsus.

ALLURE, to tempt by a bait. (F.—L. and G.) Sir T. More has aleure, Works, p. 1276 c [marked 1274].—AF. alurer (Wright's Vocab. i. 151), OF. aleurer, to entice to a lure (Godefrey). From F. à lurre, to the lure or bait; a word of Germanic origin. See Lure. Der. allurement.

ALLUSION, ALLUSIVE. See Allude.

ALLUVIAL, washed down; applied to soil. (L.) Not in early use; the sb. now used in connexion with it is alluvium, prop. the neuter of the L. adj. alluvius, alluvial. In older works the sb. is alluvion, as in Blackstone, Comment. b. ii. c. 16, and in three other quotations in Richardson.—MF. and F. alluvion, a washing up, an inundation; Cot.—L. alluvionem, acc. case of alluvio, a washing up of earth, an alluvial formation.—L. al-, for ad, to, in addition; and luere, to wash. From the same root, ab-lution, di-luvial.

ALLY, to bind together. (F.—L.) ME. alien, with one l. 'Alied to the emperor;' Rob. of Glouc. p. 65, l. 1499. [The sb. alliance, alliance, occurs at p. 89, l. 1985. It is spelt alliance in Gower, C. A. i. 199 (bk. ii. 1184).]—OF. alter, to bind to.—OF. a, to; and lier, to bind.—L. ad; and ligare, to bind. See Ligament. Der. ally, sb., one bound, pl. allies; alliance. From the same root, alligation, q. v. ALMANAC, ALMANACK, a calendar. (F.—Late L.) Spelt almanac by Blackstone, Comment. b. iii. c. 22; almenak in Chaucer. On the Astrolabe, prol. f. 67.—F. almanach, 'an almanack; or prognostication;' Cot.—Late L. almanach, almanac. The form almanac occurs in Roger Bacon, Opus Majus, xv (A. D. 1267). The origin of the word is wholly unknown; Dozy decides that it is not Arabic, as is often said; and the Gk. and L. origins sometimes assigned to it have to be manipulated and misspelt in order to suit the case; see N. E. D. ALMIGHTY, all-powerful. (E.) In very early use. O. Merc. almæhtig; AS. almihtig, Græc. i. 244; almihtig, id. 57. See Might. On the spelling with one l, see All. Der. almightiness.

ALMOND, a kind of fruit. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'As for almonds, they are of the nature of nuts;' Holland's Pliny, bk. xv. c. 22. Wyclif has almaundis, almonds, Gen. xliii. 11; almaunder, an almond-tree, Eccles. xii. 5 (where the Vulgate has amygdalus). [The l is an inserted letter, owing to confusion of initial a with the Arab. def. art. al in the Span. forms.]—OF. almendre, almande; also amandele, amendele (nearer to the Latin). Cf. Span. almendra. Cotgrave has 'Amande, an almond.'—L. amygdala, amygdalum, an almond; whence (as traced by Brachet) the forms amygdala*, amygdala*, amygdala* (with excrement n before d), and next OF. amendele, amende, later amande.—Gk. ἀμυγδαλή, ἀμυγδαλον, an almond. Origin unknown.

ALMONER, a distributor of alms. (F.—L.—Gk.) Spelt almogners by Sir T. More, Works, p. 235 h. ME. almoner, Cursor Mundi, 15219.—OF. almoisier, almoisier, a distributor of alms; forms in which the s was soon dropped, as in F. almoine from OF. almoine, alms.—OF. almoine, alms; with the suffix -ier of the agent.—Folk-L. almoisna*, for L. eleimogyna; see Alms.

ALMOST, nearly. (E.) Chaucer has almost, C. T. 9275 (E 1401). Also ME. almost, almest; the latter is especially common. 'He is almost dead;' Layamon, ii. 387 (later text). AS. almæst, almæst; thus in the AS. Chron. an. 1091, we have 'seo scipfyrd . . . almæst earnice forfor' = the fleet for the most part (or nearly all of it) miserably perished. = AS. eal, prefix, completely; and mōst, the most. ¶ The sense is, accordingly, 'quite the greatest part,' or in other words 'nearly all.' Hence it came to mean 'nearly,' in a more general use and sense. For the spelling with one l, see ALL.

ALMS, relief given to the poor. (L.—Gk.) ME. almesse, later almes. Wyclif has almes, Luke, xl. 41. For almesse, see OE. Homilies, ii. 20, l. 35. Still earlier, we have the AS. forms almæse and almesse, a word of three syllables. [Thence almæse first became almes-se; and then, dropping the final syllable (-se), appeared as almes, in two syllables; still later, it became alm. The AS. almæse is from the Folk-L. almsosina (whence OF. almoine, Ital. limosina); for the eccles. Latin elemosyna, borrowed from Greek; the result being that the word has been reduced from six syllables to one.] —Gk. ἡλεησύνη, compassion, and hence, almes = Gk. ἡλεῖν, pitiful. —Gk. ἡλεῖν, to pity; from ἡλεος, pity. Der. alm-house. From the same root, almower, q.v. ¶ The word alm is properly singular; hence the expression 'asked an alm.' Acts, iii. 3.

ALMUG, the name of a tree; see Algum.
ALOE, the name of a plant. (L.—Gk.) Aloe is an herb which hath the resemblance of the sea onion; &c.; Holland's Pliny, bk. xxvii. c. 4. Cotgrave has Aloer, the herb aloes, sea-houseleek, sea-aigreen; also, the bitter juice thereof congealed, and used in purgations. In like manner we still speak of 'bitter aloes'; and Wyclif has aloes, John, xix. 39, where the Vulgate has aloes, really the gen. case of the L. aloe, used by Pliny, and borrowed from the Gk. ἀλὸν, the name of the plant, used by Plutarch, and in John, xix. 39; where the AS. version has almes. ¶ Der. aloe-wood; a name given to a totally different plant, the agallochum, because one kind (the Aquilaria Agallocha, natural order of Thymelæaceæ) yields a bitter secretion. The word agallochum is of Skt. origin; cf. Skt. aguru, aloes-wood; whence also Heb. masc. pl. aholim, ahilitik, aloes-wood or 'lign-aloes'; Numb. xiv. 6. See Aloes and Eaglewood in Yule.

ALOFT, in the air. (Scand.) 1. For on lofte. In P. Plowman, l. i. 90, we find 'agrounde and aloft'; but in the same poem, l. i. 88, the reading is 'on grounde and on lofte'. 2. On lofte signifies 'in the air,' i.e. on high. The AS. prep. on frequently means 'in,' and is here used to translate the Icel. á, which is really the same word. 3. The phrase is, strictly, Scandinavian, viz. Icel. á loft, aloft, in the air (the Icel. -ft being sounded like the E. -ft, to which it answers). The Icel. loft = AS. loft, the air; whence ME. loft, the air, still preserved in prov. E. and used by Burns in his Winter Night, l. 4. Cf. G. loft, the air; Goth. luftus, the air. See Loft, Lift.

ALONE, quite by oneself. (E.) ME. al one, written apart, and even with a word intervening between them. Ex. 'al himself one' = himself alone; Will. of Palerne, 3316. [The al is also frequently omitted. Ex. 'left was he one,' he was left alone, i. 211.] The ME. al is mod. E. all; but the spelling with one l is correct. See ALL and ONE. Cf. Du. all-zen, G. all-in, alone. ¶ The word one was (in late ME.) pronounced oun, rhyming with bone; and was frequently spelt oun. The ME. one was dissyllabic (pron. oun-y, later oun), the e representing AS. a in the word ana, a secondary form from AS. an, one; see examples of ana in the sense of 'alone' in Grein, i. 31, 32. The pronunciation as oun is retained in al-one, at-one, on-ly. Der. lone (with loss of a); lonely.

ALONG (1), lengthwise of. (E.) [The prefix here is very unusual, as the a in this case arose from the AS. and; see A-(3), prefix; and see Answer.] ME. along, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, ll. 769; earlier along, Layamon, l. 7. AS. andlang, along, prep. governing a genitive; 'andlang þæs westenes' = along the waste, Joshua, viii. 16. + O. Fries. andlanga, prep. with gen. case; as in 'andlanga thes reggis' = along the back (Richtofen); G. entlang, prep. with gen. or dat. when preceding its substantive. B. The AS. prefix and is cognate with O. Fries. and, O. IIG. ant (G. ent), Goth. and, and, I. ante, Gk. ἀντι, Skt. anti, over against, close to. The 2nd syllable is the AS. adj. lang, long. The sense is 'over against in length.' See Anti and Long.

ALONG (2), in the phr. along of or along on. (E.) This is not quite the same word as along (1), but differs in the prefix. We find 'It's all young on you,' Prol. to the Return to Parnassus (1606). Chaucer has: 'wheroun it was long.' C. T. 16308 (G. 930); and again: 'Som seide it was long on the fyr-making,' id. 16390. Gower has: 'How al is on myself along.' C. A. ii. 22 (bk. iv. 624). Here along is a corruption of along, and long is along without the initial i. This prefix i is the usual ME. form of the AS. prefix ge, and along answers, accordingly, to AS. gelang, as pointed out by Todd in his ed. of Johnson's Dict. Moreover, the very form along (used with on) occurs in Layamon, 15502. = AS. gelang, gelong, as in on þim ge-long, along of that, because of that, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, bk. iv. c. 10, § 9. = AS. ge, prefix; and lang, long. ¶ Precisely the same corruption of the prefix occurs in Aware, q.v.

ALOOF, away, at a distance. (E. and Du.) 1. Spelt aloofe in Surrey's Virgil, bk. iv. l. 90 of E. version; aloofe in Sir T. More's Works, p. 759 g. The latter says, 'But surely this anker lyeth too farre aloofe fro this shyppes, and hath neuer a cable to fasten her to it.' This suggests a nautical origin for the phrase. 2. The diphthong ou signifies the ou in soop, pronounced like the Du. oe, so that loof at once suggests Du. loef, and as many nautical terms are borrowed from that language, we may the more readily accept this. Cf. E. sloop from Du. sloep. 3. The prefix a stands for on, by analogy with a large number of other words, such as abad, afloat, asleep, aground; so that aloof is for on loof, and had originally the same sense as the equivalent Du. phrase te loef, i.e. to windward. Compare also loef honden, to keep the luff or weather-gage; de loef afwinnen, to gain the luff, &c. So too, Danish holde luffen, to keep the luff or the wind; have luffen, to have the weather-gage; tage luffen fra en, to take the luff from one, to get to windward of one. Our phrase 'to hold aloof' is equivalent to the Du. loef houden (Dan. holde luffen), and signifies lit. 'to keep to the windward.' ¶ The tendency of the ship being to drift on to the leeward vessel or rock, the steersman can only hold aloof (i.e. keep or remain so) by keeping the head of the ship away. Hence to hold aloof came to signify, generally, to keep away from, or not to approach. The quotation from Sir T. More furnishes a good example. He is speaking of a ship which has drifted to leeward of its anchorage, so that the said place of anchorage lies 'too farre aloofe,' i.e. too much to windward; so that the ship cannot easily return to it. Similar phrases occur in Swedish; so that the term is of Scandinavian as well as of Dutch use; but it came to us from the Dutch more immediately. See further under Luff.

ALLOUD, loudly. (E.) Chiefly in the phrase 'to cry aloud.' ME. aloud, P. Plowm. C. vii. 23. By analogy with abad, asleep, afloat, &c., the prefix must be on; and loud is the adj. loud, used as a sh.; cf. alou, aligh. See Loud.

ALP, a high mountain. (L.) Milton has alp, P. L. ii. 620; Samson, 628. ME. Alpes, Trevisa, tr. of Higden, i. 173. We generally say 'the Alps.' Milton merely borrowed from Latin. —L. Alpes, pl. the Alps; said to be of Celtic origin. 'Gallorum lingua alti montes Alpes uocantur'; Servius, ad Verg. Georg. iii. 474; cited by Curtius, i. 364. B. Even granting it to be Celtic, it may still be true that l. Alpes is connected with L. albus, white, spelt alpus in the Salline form, with reference to the snowy tops of such mountains. See Stokes-Fick, p. 21. Der. alp-ine.

ALPACA, the Peruvian sheep. (Span. — Peruvian.) Borrowed by us from Span. alpaca, a Span. rendering of the Peruvian name; made by prefixing al (for Arab. al, def. article) to the native Peruvian name paca.

ALPHABET, the letters of a language. (Late L. — Gk. — Phœnician.) Used by Shak. Titus And. iii. 2. 44. —Late L. alphabetum. —Gk. ἄλφα, βῆτα, the names of a and b (and a and b), the first two letters of the Gk. alphabet. From Phœnician names represented by Heb. aleph, an ox, also the name of the first letter of the Hebrew alphabet; and beth, a house, also the name of the second letter of the same. Der. alphabet-ic, alphabet-ic-al, alphabet-ic-al-ly.

ALREADY, quite ready; i.e. ready, sooner than expected. (E.) Rich. shows that Udal (on Luke, c. i. v. 13) uses 'already looked for' in the modern sense; but (Gower, Prol. to C. A. i. 18 (l. 424)) has al redy [badly spelt all ready in Richardson] as separate words. Al as an adverb, with the sense of 'quite,' is common in Mid. English. [So al cleue = quite entirely, wholly, Rob. of Glouc. p. 407 (l. 8419); see Mätzner's Altengl. Wörterbuch, p. 57.] The spelling with one l is correct; see ALL. And see Ready.

ALSO, in like manner. (E.) Formerly frequently written all so, separately; where al is an adverb, meaning 'entirely'; see Already, and ALL. — O. Merc. al swi, AS. al swi, ealswa, just so, likewise, Matt. xxi. 30, where the later Hattion MS. has alswa. See So. ¶ As is a contracted form of also; see As.

ALTAR, a place for sacrifices. (L.) [Frequently written auter in Mid. Eng., from the O. French auter; so spelt in Wyclif, Acts, xvii. 23, Gen. vii. 20.] Rob. of Brunne, p. 79, has the spelling altare; it occurs much earlier, in the Ormulum, l. 1061. AS. altar; dat. altare, Matt. v. 24. —L. altäre, an altar, a high place. —L. altus, high. See Altitude.

ALTER, to make otherwise. (L.) Altered occurs in Tyndall's Works, ed. 1572, p. 456, col. 1; and in Chaucer, Troil. iii. 1778. [Perhaps through the F. alterer, given by Cotgrave, and explained by 'to alter, change, vary'; but it may have been taken directly from Late L.] —Late L. alterare, to make otherwise, to change; DuCange, —L. alter, other. —L. al, of the same source with alms, another, and Gk. ἄλλος, other; with suffix -ter (as in u-ter, neu-ter), an old comparative ending answering to E. -ther, Gk. -τερος, al-tera, lāg-tero. See Alien. Der. alter-able, alter-a-tion, alter-a-tive.

ALTERCATION, a dispute. (F. — L.) ME. altercacion; Chaucer, C. T. 9347 (E 1473). —OF. altercation, for which see Littre.

It is also given by Cotgrave, and explained by alteration, brabbling, bawling, &c. = L. altercātōnem, acc. of altercātio, a dispute. = L. altercārī, to dispute. = L. alter, another; from the notion of speaking alternately. See above, and see below.

ALTERNATE, adj. by turns. (L.) Milton has alternate, P. L. v. 657; and even coins altern, P. L. vii. 348. = L. alternātus, pp. of alternāre, to do by turns. = L. alternus, alternate, reciprocal. = L. alter, another; with suffix -no (Brugm. ii. § 66). See ALTER. Der. alternat-ius, alternat-ive; also the vb. to alternate (Levins).

ALTHOUGH, however. (E.) ME. al thogh, al thah, al thogh; Mandeville's Travels, p. 266; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 878. From al, adverb, in the sense of 'even'; and though. β. We even find al used alone with the sense 'although', as in 'Al telle I noight as now his observances'; Chaucer, C. T. 2266 (A 2264). γ. On the spelling with one l. see ALL. And see THOUGH.

ALTITUDE, height. (F.—L.) It occurs frequently near the end of Chaucer's Treatise on the Astrolabe, to translate l. altitudo. = OF. (and F.) altitude. = L. altitudo, height. = L. altus, high. Altus was originally the pp. of al-ere, to nourish, and meant 'well nourished'; hence, grown up, tall, high.

ALTO, a high voice. (Ital.—L.) Modern. = Ital. alto, high. = L. altus, high. Der. alto-relievo, high relief; Ital. alto rilievo; see RELIEF.

ALTOGETHER, completely. (E.) Used by Sir T. More, Works, p. 914 h. ME. al togedere, Ancren Riwle, p. 320. Formed by prefixing ME. al, adv. 'wholly', to together. See ALL and TOGETHER.

ALTRUISM, regard for others. (F.—Ital.—L.; with Gk. suffix.) F. altruisme, a word due to A. Comte (d. 1857). Coined (with the Greek suffix -ism) from Ital. altrui, another, others. = Ital. altrui; from altro, nom. sing. masc.; altri, nom. sing. fem.; altri, nom. pl.; which, when preceded by any preposition, is changed into altrui for both genders and numbers (Meadows). = L. alteri hinc, to this other; where alteri is the dat. of alter, another. See ALTER. Der. altru-ist-ic, adj.

ALUM, a mineral salt. (F.—L.) ME. alum, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1035; alum, Mandeville's Travels, p. 99; and used by Chaucer, C. T. 16281 (G 813). = OF. alum (mod. F. alun), alum; Roquefort. = L. alūmen, alum, used by Vitruvius and others; of unknown origin. Der. alumin-a, alumin-ous, alumin-ium; all directly from L. alūmin-, the stem of alumen.

ALWAYS, ALWAYS, for ever. (E.) Chaucer has always, always, Prol. 275; sometimes written al way. 1. In O. Eng. Misc., ed. Morris, p. 148 l. 54, we find alne way, where alne is, as the case masc. AS. ealne. The usual AS. form is ealne weg, where both words are in the acc. sing.; Grein, ii. 655. This form became successively alne way, al way, and always. 2. In Itali Meidenhad, p. 27 l. 22, we find al alle weis, where both words are in the gen. sing. This occasional use of the gen. sing., and the common habit of using the gen. sing. suffix -e as an adverbial suffix, have produced the second form always. Both forms are thus accounted for. See ALL and WAY.

AM, the first pers. sing. pres. of the verb to be. (E.) O. Northumbrian am, O. Merc. eam, AS. eom, I am. The full form of the word is shown by the ldg. type es-mi*, whence also Skt. a-smi, Gk. eimi, Goth. im, Icel. em, I am; compounded of the √ es, to be, and the suffix -mi, perhaps related to E. me. See further under ARE.

AMADOU, a tinder prepared from a fungus. (F.—Prov.—L.) Modern. = F. amadou, = Prov. amadou, O. Prov. amador, lit. 'a lover'; also tinder, from its catching fire quickly. = L. amātorē, acc. of amātor, a lover; from amare, to love (Hatzfeld; Mistral).

AMAIN, with full power. (E.) Used by Turlivier, To his Absent Friend, st. 7. As in other words, such as abed, afoot, aground, asleep, the prefix is the AS. on, later an, latest a, signifying 'in' or 'with', prefixed to the dat. case of the sb. The usual AS. phrase is, however, not on mægene, but ealle mægene, with all strength; Grein, ii. 217. See ON, and MAIN, sb. strength.

AMALGAM, a compound of mercury with another metal, a mixture. (F.—Gk.) [The restriction in sense to a mixture containing mercury is perhaps unoriginal; it is probable that the word properly meant 'a pasty mixture', and at last 'a mixture of a metal with mercury.'] Chaucer has amalgaming, C. T. G 777. = F. amalgame, which Cotgrave explains by 'a mixture, or incorporation of quicksilver with other metals'; Late L. amalgama. β. Generally taken to be a perversion (perhaps with prefixed a-, for Arab. al, def. art.) of L. malagma, a mollifying poultice or plaster. = Gk. μάλαγμα, an emollient; also a poultice, plaster, or any soft material. = Gk. μάλασσειν, to soften (for μαλάειν*). = Gk. μαλακός, soft; cf. MALLOW. Der. amalgam-ate, amalgam-at-ion.

AMANUENSIS, one who writes to dictation. (L.) In Burton's Anat. of Melancholy; Decm. to the Reader; ed. 1827, i. 17. Borrowed from L. amanuensis, a scribe who writes to dictation, used by

AMARANTH, an everlasting flower. (L.—Gk.) An error for amarant; perhaps by confusion with anthus, Gk. άνθος, a flower. Milton has amarant, P. L. iii. 352; and amarantine, P. L. xi. 78. The pl. amarantus (with z = ts) is in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1470, in which case it is not from the Gk. directly, but from L. amarantus. = Gk. άμαραντος, unfading; or, as sb., the unfading flower, amaranth. [Cf. Gk. άμαραντινος, made of amaranth.] = Gk. ά-, privative; and μαραίνειν (for μαράν-ειν*), to wither. = √MER, to grind down. Der. amaranth-in-ia. Perhaps allied to MAR.

AMASS, to heap up. (F.—L.—Gk.) Used by Surrey, on Eccles. c. 3; 1. 3 from end. = F. amasser, 'to pile, heap, gather'; Cot. = F. à masse, to a mass; so that amasser is 'to put into a mass'. = L. ad, to; and mas-am, acc. of masa, a mass. [Curtius remarks concerning this word (ii. 326) that the Latin as in the middle of a word answers for Gk. ά-] = Gk. μάα, μάα, a barley-cake; lit. a kneaded lump. = Gk. μάσσειν (hence μας), to knead. Cf. μας-is, a cake. See MASS (r).

AMATORY, loving. (L.) Milton has amatorious, Answer to Elkon Basilike; amatory is used by Sp. Bramhall (died 1663) in a work against Hobbes (Todd). = L. amātorius, loving. = L. amātor, a lover (acc. amātorē, whence the F. amateur, now used in English). = L. amāre, to love, with suffix -tor denoting the agent. Der. from the same L. verb, ama-teur (above), amat-ive, amat-ive-ness. Amatory is practically a doublet of Amorous, q.v.

AMAZE, to astound. (E.) Formerly written amase. The word amazed, meaning 'bewildered, infatuated,' occurs three times in the Ancren Riwle, pp. 270, 284, 288. AS. amasian, pp. amasad; Wulfstan's Hom. p. 137 l. 23. The prefix is the intensive AS. ā; thus to amase is 'to confound utterly.' We also find the compound form bimased, Ancren Riwle, p. 270. See MAZE. Der. amaz-ed, amaz-ed-ness, amaz-ing, amaz-ing-ly, amazement.

AMAZON, a female warrior. (Gk.) They were said to cut off the right breast in order to use the bow more efficiently; a story due to a popular etymology of a foreign word. Shak. has Amazon, Mids. N. D. ii. 1. 70; and Amazonian, Cor. ii. 2. 95. = Gk. άμαζών, pl. άμαζώνες, one of a warlike nation of women in Scythia. Explained as if from Gk. ά-, privative; and μαζός, the breast. Der. Amazon-ian.

AMBASSADOR, a messenger. (F.—Ital.—Late Lat.—C.) Udal, on Math. c. 28 v. 19, has ambassador. Also written embassador; Chaucer, Troil. iv. 145. Chaucer has embassadrye, an embassy, C. T. 4653 (B 233). = F. ambassadeur, 'ambassador'; Cot. = F. ambassade, an embassy. α. Of this word l'archet says: 'not found in French before the 14th century, and shown to be foreign by its ending -ade (unknown in OF., which has -te for -ade)'. Hatzfeld derives it from Ital. ambasciata; cf. Late L. ambasciata (Ducange). From Late L. ambasciare, ambasciare [to relate, announce], formed from ambascia, a very common term in the Salic Law, meaning 'a mission, embassy.' = Late L. ambactus, a servant, especially one who is sent on a message; used once by Caesar, de Bello Gallico, vi. 15. β. This is expressly said, by Festus, to be a word of Gaulish origin; and it is now accepted as Celtic, with the lit. sense of 'one driven about,' a slave; a pp. formation from the prefix ambi, or ambō, about; and the Celtic root ag-, to drive, cognate with L. agere, to drive. The verb appears in O. Irish as imm-agim, I drive about, I send about; and the derived sb. is represented in Welsh by amaeth, a husbandman. See Brugmann, ii. § 79; Stokes-Fick, p. 34. ¶ The OHG. ambakti, a servant, whence G. amt, is merely borrowed from Celtic (Kluge). Der. ambassador-ess. See EMBASSY.

AMBER, a fossil resin; ambergris. (F.—Span.—Arab.) The resin is named from its resemblance to ambergris, a waxlike substance due to the sperm-whale, also called amber in early writers. = ME. ambrre, Prompt. Parv. 1. In Holland's Pliny, b. xxxvii. c. 3, the word means the fossil amber. 2. When Beaumont and Fletcher use the word amber'd in the sense of 'scented' (Custom of the Country, iii. 2. 6), they must refer to ambergris. = F. ambre, 'amber'; Cot. = Span. ambar. = Arab. ambar, ambergris, a perfume; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 433; ambar, ambergris, a rich perfume and cordial; Rich. Diet. p. 1031. ¶ Amberris is the same word, with addition of F. gris, signifying 'gray.' In Milton, P. R. ii. 344, it is called gris amber. The F. gris is a word of German origin, from OHG. gris, gray, used of the hair; cf. G. gris, hoary.

AMBI, AMB, prefix. (L.) L. ambi-, about; cf. Gk. άμφι, on both sides, whence E. amphi-, prefix. Related to L. ambō, Gk. άμφο, both. Cf. AS. ymb, Irish im, about; Skt. abhi, towards.

AMBIDEXTROUS, using both hands. (L.) Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 5, § 10, has 'ambidexterous, or right-handed on both sides.' He also uses ambidexters as a plural sb. = L. ambidexter, using both hands equally; not used in classical Latin, and only given drunkenness; an amethyst, from its supposed virtue in that way. — Gk. amethystos, adj. not drunken. — Gk. am-, privative; and metheos, to be drunken, from methe, strong drink, wine, cognate with E. mead. See Mead (1). Der. amethystine.

AMIALE, friendly; worthy of love. (F. — L.) 'She was so amiable and free.' Rom. Rose, 1226. 'The amiable tongue is the tree of life.' Chaucer, Pere. Tale, De Ira (I 629). — OF. amiable, friendly; also lovable, by confusion with amiable (L. amabilis). — L. amicabilis, friendly, amicable. — L. amicus, to make friendly; with suffix -ilis, used in forming adjectives from verbs. — L. amicus, a friend; prop. an adj., friendly, loving. — L. amare, to love. See Amorous. Der. amicable, amicably; amicability, amicableness; amicably, amicableness, formed by analogy with amicability, &c. Amiability and amiability are doublets.

AMICABLE, friendly. (L.) In Lewis, ed. 1570. Used by Bp. Taylor, Peacemaker (R.), he uses amicableness in the same work. [Formed with suffix -ile as if French, but really from Latin.] — L. amicabilis, friendly; whence the OF. amiable. Thus amicable and amicable are doublets. See Amiable. Der. amicably, amicableness.

AMICE (1), a rectangular piece of white linen, variously worn by priests. (F. — L.) ME. amysse, Wyclif, Isa. xlii. 17 (where the Latin has amictum); also amysse, Wyclif, Heb. i. 12 (earlier version). — OF. amice, amist (Burguy). — L. amictus, a covering (amit being from the acc. amictum). — L. amictus, pp. of amictare, to throw round. — L. am- (amb-), around; and icere, to cast. Cf. MF. amiet, 'an amiet, or amice'; part of a massing priest's habit; Cot.

AMICE (2), a hood for pilgrims, &c. (F. — Span. — Teut.) 'Came forth with pilgrim steps, in amice gray.' Milton, P. R. iv. 427. Confused with amice (1), but really from OF. amice (F. amisse). 'an ornament of fur worn by canons,' Cot.; also 'a furled hood'; see Fairholt's Glossary, s.v. almuce. — Span. almuco, 'an ornament of fur, worn by canons,' Pineda; where al is the Arab. def. article. — G. mütze, a cap (cf. Lowl. Sc. mütche). 'But some think that G. mütze is from Late L. almucia. Cf. Ital. mazzetta, a rochet (Torriano); Port. murga, 'a garment lined with fur worn by canons.'

AMID, AMIDST, in the middle of. (E.) Amidst is common in Milton, P. L. i. 791; &c. He also uses amid. Shak. also has both forms. a. Amidst is not found in earlier English, and the final s is merely extraneous (as often after s), as in whilst, amongst, from the older forms whiles, amonges. b. The ME. forms are amidde, P. Plowman, B. xii. 81; in midde, Pricke of Conscience, 2938; amidde, Aenylthe of Inwyrt, p. 143; in midde, OF. Homilies, i. 87. y. Of these, the correct type is the earliest, viz. on midde; whence on midde, a-midde were formed by the usual loss of final w, and the change of on to a, as in abed, afoot, asleep. 8. The form amidde was produced by adding the adverbial suffix -a, properly the sign of a gen. case, but commonly used to form adverbs. — AS. on middan, in the middle; see examples in Grein, ii. 249, s.v. midde. Here on is the prep. (mod. E. on), used, as often elsewhere, with the sense of 'in'; and midde is the dat. case of midde, sb. the middle, orig. the nom. fem. of the adj. mid or midd, middle, cognate with L. medius. See Middle.

AMISS, adv. wrongly. (Scand.) a. In later authors awkwardly used as a sb.; thus 'urge not my amiss.' Shak. Son. 151. But properly an adverb, as in 'That he ne dooth or seith somtyme amiss.' Chaucer, C. T. 11092 (F 780). The mistake was due to the fact that amiss, without er, meant 'an error' in early times, as will appear. b. Amis stands for ME. on misse, lit. in error, where on (from AS. on) has the usual sense of 'in', and passes into the form er, as in so many other cases; cf. abed, afoot, asleep. y. ME. amis or on misse may have been taken immediately from the Icel. phrase á mis, amiss; from Icel. á (— AS. on) and mis, adv. wrongly. Or we may explain mis as the dat. case from nom. missa, a dissyllabic word, not used as a sb. in AS., but borrowed from the Icel. missa, a loss; also used with the notion of 'error' in composition, as in Icel. miss-taka, to take in error, whence E. mis-take. The ME. mis hence acquired the sense of 'guilt,' 'offence,' as in 'to mende my misse,' to repair my error; Will. of Palerne, 532. See Mis.

AMITY, friendship. (F. — L.) Udal, Pref. to St. Mark (near the end), has amitie. Skelton has amity. Why Come Ye Nat to Court, 371. — F. amitié, explained by Cotgrave to mean 'italy, friendship,' &c.; OF. amiste, amended, amistade (— Span. amistad, italy, amista (for amistade)). — Late L. amicitialem, acc. of amicitia, friendship, a vulgar form, not recorded by Antiquities, but formed by analogy with mendicitia from mendicus, antiquitas from antiquus. — L. amicus, friendly. — L. amare, to love. See Amable, Amorous. 'It is impossible to derive the old Romance forms from L. amicitia.'

AMMONIA, an alkali. (L. — Gk. — Egypt.) A modern word, adopted as a contraction of sal ammoniac, L. sal ammoniacum, rock-salt; common in older chemical treatises, and still more so in treatises on alchemy. [Chaucer speaks of sal armoniac, C. T., G 798, 824; but this is a false form.] — Gk. ammoniacus, sal ammoniac, rock-salt; Dioscorides. — Gk. ammonias, Libyan. — Gk. ammon, the Libyan Zeus-

Ammon; known to be an Egyptian word; Herodotus, ii. 42; and Smith, Dict. of the Bible, s.v. Ammon. It is said that sal ammoniac was first obtained near the temple of Jupiter Ammon.

AMMONITE, a kind of fossil shell. (Gk. — Egypt.) Modern; first in 1758. Formed by adding the suffix -ite to the name Ammon. The fossil is sometimes called by the L. name of corvus Ammonia, the horn of Ammon, because it much resembles a closely twisted ram's horn, and was fancifully likened to the horns of Jupiter Ammon, who was represented as a man with the horns of a ram. See above.

AMMUNITION, store for defence. (F. — L.) Used by Bacon, Advice to Sir G. Villiers (R.); and by Milton, Samson, 1277. From MF. ammunitio, a soldiers' corruption of munition, 'victuals for an army,' Cot.; due to substituting ammunitio for la munition (Littre). — L. acc. munitionem, from munio, a defence, a defending. — L. munire, to defend. See Munition.

AMNESTY, a pardon of offenders; lit. a forgetting of offences. (F. — L. — Gk.) Used in the L. form amnesia by Iliwell, b. iii. letter 6 (1647). Barrow has amnesty, vol. iii. serm. 41. — F. amnestie, which Cotgrave explains by 'forgetfulness of things past.' — L. amnesia, a Latinised form of the Gk. word. [Ducange gives amnesia, but this is an error; for t is constantly mistaken for c in MSS., and frequently so printed.] — Gk. amnesia, a forgetfulness, esp. of wrong; hence, an amnesty. — Gk. amnesia, forgotten, unremembered. — Gk. am-, privative; and mnas, I remember; from a stem mnā, by gradation from a root men; cf. L. me-min-, I remember. — men, to think; cf. Skt. man, to think.

AMONG, AMONGST, amidst. (E.) a. The form amongst, like amidst, is not very old, and has assumed an additional final t, such as is often added after s; cf. whilst, amidst, from the older forms whiles, amidde. Amongst occurs in Torrent of Portugal, l. 2027 [2127]; but I suppose it does not occur earlier than the fifteenth century. b. The usual form is among, as in P. Plowman, B. v. 129; among is also common, id. v. 169. Earlier, the commonest form is among, Ancrer Riwle, p. 158. y. Amonges is formed by adding the usual adverbial suffix -es, properly a genitive form, and among by adding the adverbial suffix -a, also common, properly a dative form. — AS. onmang, prep. among, Levit. xxiv. 10; the forms on gemang (John, iv. 31) and gemang (Mark, iii. 3) also occur, the last of the three being commonest. b. Thus the prefix is AS. on, and the full form onmang, used as a preposition. Like most prepositions, it originated with a substantive, viz. AS. (gē) mang, a crowd, assembly, lit. a mixture; so that on mang (or on gemang) meant 'in a crowd.' Allied to AS. mengan, mangan, to mix; Grein, ii. 231. See Mingle.

AMOROUS, full of love. (F. — L.) Gower has amorous, C. A. i. 89 (bk. i. 1414); it also occurs in the Romance of the Rose, 83. — OF. amorous, mod. F. amoureux. — Late L. amōreus, full of love; Ducange. Formed with the common L. suffix -us from amōr, stem of amor, love. — L. amāre, to love. Der. amorously, amorousness. Also F. amour, love (now used in Eng.). From L. amorem, acc. case of amor, love.

AMORPHOUS, formless. (Gk.) In Bailey (1731). Formed from Gk. am-, privative; and Gk. morphē, shape, form.

AMORT, inanimate, spiritless. (F. — L.) 'What, all amori?' Shak. I Hen. VI. iii. 2, 124. From F. à la mort, to the death; turned into E. all amori, as if amort were the F. à mort. — L. ad, to; illam, acc. fem. of ille, he; mortem, acc. of mors, death. See Mortal.

AMOUNT, to mount up to. (F. — L.) ME. amounen, to mount up to, come up to, esp. in reckoning. Chaucer, C. T. 3899, 4989 (A 3901, B 669); Kob. of Glouc. p. 497, l. 10214. Amounet, ascend, Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 28. — OF. amoner, to amount to. — OF. a mont, towards, to a mountain, to a large heap. [The adv. amont is also common, in the sense of 'uphill,' 'upward,' and is formed by joining a with mont.] — L. ad montem, lit. to a mountain; where montem is the acc. case of mons, a mountain. See Mount, Mountain. Der. amount, sb.

AMPERSAND, a corruption of 'and per se, and,' the old way of spelling and naming the character & ; i.e. '& by itself = and.' (Hybrid; L., L., and E.) Common in E. dialects. So, in ME., we have A per se, A by itself; Hemrysoun, Test. of Creside, 78.

AMPHI, prefix. (Gk.) The strict sense is 'on both sides.' — Gk. amphi, on both sides; also, around. — L. ambi, amphi, on both sides, around; see Ambi, where other cognate forms are given. Der. amphi-bious, amphi-brach, amphi-theatre.

AMPHIBIOUS, living both on land and in water. (Gk.) In Sir T. Browne's Vulg. Errors, bk. iii. c. 13, § 8. From amphi-bi, pl., amphibious animals; with suffix -ous. — Gk. amphibios, living a double life, i.e. both on land and water. — Gk. amphi, here used in the sense of 'double,' and bios, life. See Amphi- and Biology.

AMPHIBRACH, a foot in prosody. (Gk.) Puteianus has amphibrachus; Eng. Poesie, bk. ii. c. 13 (14). A name given, in prosody, to a foot composed of a short syllable on each side of a long one (— —). — Gk. amphibrachys, the same. — Gk. amphi, on both sides;

ANCESTOR, a predecessor, forefather. (F.—L.) ME. ancestour, ancestre, ancestra. Chaucer has ancestres, C. T. 6742 (D 1160). Ancestres, Rob. of Brunne's tr. of Langtoft, p. 9; ancestours, id. p. 177; from OF. ancestre, nom. and ancestour, acc., of the same sb. β. Thus OF. ancestre represents L. ancestros, nom.; and OF. ancestour is from ancestros, acc. case of antece or, a fore-goer. — L. ante, before; and cedere, pp. cedere, to go. See Cede. Der. ancestral, ancestry, ancestral-ess.

ANCHOR, a hooked iron instrument for holding a ship in its place. (L.—Gk.) ME. anker, Havelok, 521. AS. ancor, Grein, i. 3.—L. ancora; sometimes illspelt anchora, which is imitated in the mod. E. form.—Gk. ἄγκυρα, an anchor; Max Müller, Lectures, i. 108, note; 8th ed. Orig. a bent hook, and allied to Gk. ἄγκυρα, a bend; also to Skt. āṅka, to bend. From ANCH, to bend, curve; Brugm. i. § 633. See Angle, a hook. Der. anchor, verb, anchor-age.

ANCHORET, ANCHORITE, a recluse, hermit. (F.—Late L.—Gk.) The former is the better spelling. ME. has the form anere, which is rather common, and used by Wyclif, Langland, and others; esp. in the phrase Ancren Riwle, i. e. the rule of (female) anchorites, the title of a work written early in the 13th century. Shak. has anchor, Hamlet, iii. 2. 229. This ME. word is modified from AS. anere, or anear, a hermit. β. The AS. anere, i. e. 'hermit-life', is used to translate the L. vita anachoritis in Bede's Eccl. Hist. i. 8; and the word anere is no native word, but a mere adaptation of Late L. anachoritis, a hermit, recluse.

γ. The more modern form anchoret, which occurs in Burton's Anat. of Melan., pt. i. s. 2. m. 2. subs. 6. § 3, is from the French. — MF. anachoret, m. 'the hermit called an anachore [corruption of anere, a female anere or anchor] or anchorite'; Cot.—Late L. anachoritis, a recluse.—Gk. ἄγκυρα, to retire.—Gk. ἀνὰ, back; and χωρεῖν, χωρεῖν, to withdraw, make room, from χωρεῖν, space, room; related to χωρεῖν, assuile, apart, and to χωρεῖν, hereft. The form of the root is GIE, GHÖ. See Irellwitz.

ANCHOVY, a small fish. (Span.) Formerly written anchove. Shak. has anchovies, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 588 (qu. of 1596). Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, speaks of 'sausages, anchovies, tobacco, canevae'; p. 106, ed. 1827.—Span. (and Port.) anchova. ¶ Remoter origin uncertain. Mahn (in Webster) says 'a word of Iberian origin, lit. a dried or pickled fish, from Biscayan antzuwa, anchun, anchun, dry.' I find the Basque forms anchua, anchua, anchua, signifying 'anchovy,' in the Diet. François-Basque by M. H. J. Kabre. Again, in the Diccionario Trilingüe del padre Manuel de Larramendi, in Spanish, Basque, and Latin, I find: 'Seco, aplicado a los pechos de la muger, antzuwa, antzuwa, L. siccus;' i. e. dry, applied to a woman's breasts; Basque antzuwa, antzuwa, L. siccus. Perhaps Mahn's suggestion is correct.

ANCIENT (r). old. (F.—L.) Skelton has anciently, Works, ed. Dyce, i. 7. The ME. form is auyene, Mandeville, p. 93; thus the final t is excrescent, as in tyrant.—OF. ancien (mod. F. ancien), old; cognate with Ital. anziano, Span. anciano.—Late L. antiquus, old; Dugange. Formed, with L. suffix -inus, from L. ante, before. See Ante.—Der. ancient-ly, ancient-ness.

ANCIENT (s), a banner, standard-bearer. (F.—L.) In Shak. 1 Hen. IV, iv. 2. 34; cf. Oth. i. 1. 33. The form of the word is due to confusion with ancient (t), but it really represents the MF. enseigne, m. 'an ensigne, ancient, standard-bearer,' Cot.; closely related to MF. enseigne, f., an ensign, standard. This explains the twofold sense. See Ensign.

ANCE, see Ankle.
AND, copulative conjunction. (E.) Common from the earliest times. AS. and, also written and; by-form, and. Fries. ande, and, and, and, en; Du. en; Icel. enda, if, even if, moreover (rather differently used, but the same word or closely related); OHG. anti, enti, inti, unit; mod. G. und. Teut. types, anti, conj., anda, prep.; see N.E.D. The latter is the same as the AS. prefix and- (occurring in along and answer) and the Gothic prefix and-, which answer to the Gk. ἀντα, over against, and are clearly related to the L. ante, before, Gk. ἀντι, over against, Skt. anti, a Vedic form, equivalent to Gk. ἀντι, over against; (see antika, vicinity, in Benfey's Skt. Dict. p. 28.) This sense of 'over against' is fairly well preserved in G. entgegen, and in the AS. andswarian, E. answer; and from this sense to its use as a copulative conjunction is an easy step. See Answer. 2. The use of and to mean 'if' arose from a peculiar use of the conjunction, and is prob. independent of Icel. enda, if, but parallel in development. It occurs in Havelok; as: 'And thou wile my counsel tro, Ful wel shal ich with the do;' i. e. if you will my counsel, I will do very well by you; 1. 2862. 3. In order to differentiate the senses, i. e. to mark off the two meanings of and more readily, it became at last usual to drop the final d when the word was used in the sense of 'if';

a use very common in Shakespeare. Thus Shakespeare's an is nothing but another use of the common word and. When the force of an grew misty, it was reduplicated by the addition of 'if'; so that an if, really meaning 'if-if', is of common occurrence. Neither is there anything remarkable in the use of and if as another spelling of an if; and it has been preserved in this form in a well-known passage in the Bible: 'But and if,' Matt. xxiv. 48. 4. If the Skt. anti is allied to anta-, 'end,' there is an etymological connexion with end. See End.

ANDANTE, slow, slowly. (Ital.) A musical term. Borrowed from Ital. andante, adj. going; sb. a moderate movement. It is properly the pres. part. of the verb andare, to go; which is of unknown origin.

ANDIRON, a kitchen fire-dog. (F.—L.—t) The ME. forms are numerous, as anderne, anderne, andirne, andirne, andirne, &c. In the Prompt. Parv. p. 19, we have Anderne, andiryn, andiryn, andena, ipoporium. In Wright's Vocabularies, vol. i. p. 171, we have Andiryn, les chencs; and at p. 107, Andiryn, andena. [It is clear that the ending -iron is a corruption, upon English soil, in order to give the word some sort of sense.] The form andirne comes very near to the original French. —OF. andier (mod. F. andier, i. e. l'andier, the article being prefixed as in herie, ivy, from L. aderer), a fire-dog. ¶ The remoter origin is obscure; but it may be noted that the late L. forms are numerous, viz. andisium, a fire-dog, prop. for supporting the logs, and, with the same sense, andisus, andis (quoted above in the extract from the Prompt. Parv.), andisus. The F. form corresponds with the last of these; with andena cf. OF. andena and the mod. Burgundian andain, an andiron (Mignard). The form andisium corresponds to Span. andas, a frame or bier on which to carry a person; cf. Portuguese andas; a bier, or rather, the two poles belonging to it; Vieyra; also Port. andar, 'a bier to carry images in a procession, a pole, seat of sedan,' id. Possibly related to L. amien, acc. of ames, a pole, esp. a pole for hearing a liar (Lewis). See Körting, § 595. 2. No certain origin of this word has been given. We may, however, easily see that the E. iron formed, originally, no part of it. We can guess, perhaps, how it came to be added, viz. by confusion with the AS. brand-isen, lit. 'a brand-iron,' which had the same meaning, and became, at a later time, not only brandiron but brandyron.

ANECDOTE, a story in private life. (F.—L.—Gk.) Used by Sterne, Serm. 5. § 24. 'Anecdotes, treatises or pieces that never were published.' Glossographia Anglicana Nova, ed. 1719.—F. anecdote, f., not in Cotgrave.—Gk. ἀνέκδοτα, neut. pl. (used as fem. sing.), from ἀνέκδοτος, unpublished; so that our word means properly 'an unpublished story,' 'a piece of gossip among friends.' (Gk. ἀν- (E. un-); and έκδοτος, given out, from έκ, out, and έδομαι, I give; from the same root as E. Donation, q. v. Der. anecdotal, anecdotal-ical.

ANEMONE, the name of a flower. (Gk.) In Thomson, Spring, 536. It means the 'wind-flower,' in Greek ἀνεμώνη, the accent in E. being now placed on e instead of a.—Gk. ἄνεμος, the wind. From the same root as Animae, q. v. Cf. anemo-meter, an instrument for measuring the wind's velocity.

ANENT, regarding, near to, beside. (E.) Nearly obsolete, except in Northern English. ME. anent, anende, anendes, anentis, &c. [The forms anendes, anentis, were made by adding the suffix -is, -is, orig. the sign of a gen. case, but frequently used as an adverbial suffix; for anentes, see Cursor Mundi, l. 26957.] Anent is a contraction of anefent, or anefent, which occurs in the Ancien Kivle, p. 164, as another reading for anonde. In this form, the t is excrescent, as commonly after n (cf. tyrant, ancient), and the true form is anefen or anefen.—AS. on-efen, prep. near; sometimes written on-enn, by contraction; Grein, i. 218, 225.—AS. on, prep. in, efen, even, equal; so that on-efen meant originally 'on an equality with,' or 'even with.' See Even. ¶ The cognate G. neben, beside, is similarly derived from G. in, in, and eben, even; and, to complete the analogy, was sometimes spelt neben. See Mätzner, Wörterbuch; Stratmann, s. v. anefen; Koch, Engl. Gramm. v. ii. p. 389.

ANEROID, dry; without liquid mercury; applied to a barometer. (Gk.) Modern.—Gk. ἀ-, privative; νηρός, wet; and είδ-ος, form. Gk. νηρός is from νέω, to flow.

ANEURISM, ANEURYSM, a morbid dilatation of the coats of an artery. (Gk.) Formed as if from aneurisma, false form of aneurysma, a Latinised form of Gk. ἀνεύρυσμα, a widening.—Gk. ἀν-, for ἀν, up; and εύρυστος, to widen, from εύρος, wide.—Skt. uru-, large, wide. Cf. MF. aneurisme in Cotgrave.

ANEW, newly. (E.) A shortening of ME. of-newe, used by Chaucer, C. T., E 938. Cf. adown for AS. afiduna. Here of is the AS. of, prep., and newe is our mod. E. new; the final -e being an adverbial suffix, as usual.

ANGEL, a divine messenger. (F.—L.—Gk.) [In very early use. AS. angel, engel, an angel; Grein, i. 227; borrowed from L. angelus.] But the modern pronunciation is due to the OF. angle, from L. acc. angelum.—Gk. ἄγγελος, lit. a messenger; hence, an angel. Cf. ἄγγελος, a mounted courier, which is an old Persian word; also Skt.

ahgira-s, a messenger from the gods to men (Macdonell). Der. angelic, angel-ic-al, angel-ic-al-ly; also angelic-a, a plant.

ANGER, hot displeasure due to a sense of injury. (Scand.) In ME. the word is more passive in its use, and denotes 'affliction,' 'trouble,' 'sore vexation.' 'If he thole here anger and wa'—if he suffer here affliction and woe.' Hampole's Tricke of Conscience, 3517. = Icel. angr, grief, sorrow; Dan. anger, compunction, regret; Swed. anger, compunction, regret. † Lat. angere, a strangling, bodily torture; also mental torture, anguish; from angere, to strangle. Cf. AS. ange, oppressed, sad; Gk. ἀγγελος, to strangle; Skt. āṅghas, pain; all from √ANGH, to choke, oppress. See Brugm. i. § 178. Der. angr-y, angr-ly; from the same root, anguish, anxious; also quinsy, q. v.; and L. angina.

ANGINA, severe suffering. (L.) Borrowed from L. angina, quinsy, lit. 'a choking,' from angere, to strangle. See above. ANGLE (1), a bend, a corner. (F.—L.) Chaucer has angles, C. T. F 230; also angle, as a term of astrology (L. angulus), id. 263. —OF. angle (mod. F. angle), an angle. —L. angulus, acc. of angulus, an angle. Cf. Gk. ἀνγύλος, crooked. From the same root as the next word. Der. angul-ar, angul-ar-ly, angul-ar-ity; all from the L. angul-ārus, adj., from angulus.

ANGLE (2), a fishing-hook. (E.) In very early use. AS. angel, a fish-hook, Matt. xvii. 27; spelt angel in the Northumbrian version. † Icel. angull, Dan. angel, a fishing-hook; G. angel, dimin. of OHG. ango, a prickle, fish-hook. Cf. L. uncus, a hook, Gk. ἄγκυρα, a bend; ἀγκύρα, a bent hook, whence E. anchor; Skt. āṅk, to bend. —√ANGQ, to bend, curve; Fick, i. 6. From the same root comes the word above; also Anchor, q. v. Der. angle, vb., angl-ar, angl-ing.

ANGRY, i. e. anger-y; Chaucer, C. T. 12893 (C 959); see ANGER. ANGUISE, oppression; great pain. (F.—L.) ME. anguis, angoise, angise, &c. Spelt anguis in Pricke of Conscience, 2240; angise, Kob. of Glouc. p. 177, l. 3687; angise, Ancren Riwle, p. 178. —OF. anguisse, angoise, mod. F. anguisse, f., anguish. —L. angustia, narrowness, poverty, perplexity. —L. angustus, narrow. —L. angere, to stifle, choke, strangle. † Gk. ἀγγεω, to strangle. —√ANGIL, to choke. See ANGER, from the same root.

AN-HUNGERED, very hungry. (E.) In Matt. xii. 1. It is a variant of a-hungred, and this, of a-hungred; see P. Plowman, B. x. 59. All from AS. of hungered, very hungry, pp. of hungerian, to be very hungry. —AS. of, very; and hungerian, to hunger, from hungor, hunger. See OF, OF, and HUNGER.

ANHYDROUS, waterless. (Gk.) Modern. —Gk. ἀνυδρος, waterless. —Gk. an-, neg. prefix; and ὑδωρ, water; with suffix -ous added. See HYDRA.

ANILE, old-woman-like. (L.) Used by Walpole, Catalogue of Engravers; Sterne, Serm. 21. § 19, has anility. Not in early use. —L. anilla, like an old woman. —L. anus, an old woman. Cf. OHG. ana, a grandmother.

ANILINE, a liquid which furnishes a number of dyes. (F.—Span.—Arab.—Pers.—Skt.) Modern. Formed with suffix -ine (F. -ine, L. -inus) from anil, a shrub from which the W. Indian indigo is made. 'Anil... is a kind of thing to dye blue withal.' Eng. Garner, ed. Arber, vi. 18 (ab. 1586). —F. anil, anil = Span. añil, 'azure, sea colour'; Minshen, p. 25, l. 12. —Arab. an-nīl, for anīl; where anīl is the def. art., and nīl is borrowed from Pers. nīl, the indigo plant. —Skt. nīli, the indigo plant; from nīla-s, blue. See LILAC, Nylghau.

ANIMADVERT, to criticize, censure. (L.) Lat. 'to turn the mind to.' In Glossographia Anglicana Nova, ed. 1719. —L. animadvertere, to turn the mind to, pp. animadversus. —L. anim-us, the mind; ad, to; and vertere, to turn. For roots, see ANIMATE and VERSE. Der. animadvers-ion, in Ben Jonson's Discoveries, sect. 123.

ANIMAL, a living creature. (L.) In Hamlet, ii. 2. 320; used as an adj., Chaucer, C. T. A 2749. —L. animal, a breathing creature. —L. anima, breath. See below. Der. animal-isim, animal-cule.

ANIMATE, to endue with life. (L.) Used by Hall, Edw. IV. an. 8. § 5. —L. animātus, pp. of animāre, to give life to. —L. anima, breath, life. —√AN, to breathe; which appears not only in the Skt. an, to breathe, blow, live; Gk. ἀνεω, wind; but also in Goth. an-anan, to breathe out, expire, Mark xv. 37, 39; and in Icel. and, to breathe, and, breath, whence Lowland Scotch aynd, breath. Der. animat-ed, animat-ion.

ANIMOSITY, vehemence of passion, hostility. (F.—L.) Bp. Hall, Letter of Apology, has the pl. animosities; so in Bacon, Adv. of Learning, ii. xxiii. 48. —F. animosité, 'animosity, stoutness'; Cot. —L. acc. animōsitatem, from nom. animōsūtās, ardour, vehemence. —L. animōsus, full of spirit. —L. animus, mind, courage. † Gk. ἀνεω, breath, wind. —√AN, to breathe. See ANIMATE. ¶ The L. animus is now used as an E. word.

ANISE, a medicinal herb. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Matt. xxiii. 23, the Wycliffite versions have both anese and anete. In Wright's Lyric Poetry, p. 26, we find anys; and in Wright's Vocabularies, i. 227, is: 'Hoc anisum, anys'. —F. anis, anise; see Cotgrave. —L. anisum, also anithum (whence Wyclif's anite). —Gk. ἀνισος, ἀνισος, usually ἀνισος, anise, dill. Perhaps named from its scent; cf. ἀνισος, a breath of air (Pellwitz). Der. anised (for anise-sed).

ANKEB, a liquid measure of 8 to 10 gallons. (Du.—Late L.) Mentioned in Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1735, as in use at Amsterdam. —Du. anker, the same; cf. Swed. ankare; G. anker. Probably from Late L. ancoria, a keag, a small vat.

ANKLE, the joint between leg and foot. (E.) ME. ancla, Chaucer, C. T. 1662 (A 1666). [Also anclow, Ellis's Specimens, i. 279. AS. ancleow, ankle; ēlfric's Gloss., Voc. 160. 21; which is the origin of ME. anclow.] But the mod. E. form answers to OFries. ankel; Dan. and Swed. ankel; Icel. ákkla (for ákkla); Du. ankel; OHG. anchala, anchila, the ankle; mod. G. ankel. [On the other hand, the AS. ancleow answers to OFries. ankel, Du. ankel, ankel. The Du. klauwe means 'claw,' and the AS. ancleow seems to point to the same word, but these endings are probably mere adaptations in the respective languages, to give the words a more obvious etymology.] ¶ The word is clearly a diminutive, formed with suffix -el from a stem ank-. Indeed, the OHG. has the shorter form ancha, meaning leg, ankle. The root is the same as that of Skt. āṅguli-s, a finger, āṅga-m, a limb. Der. ankle-joint, ank-el (ornament for the ankle).

ANNALS, a relation of events year by year. (F.—L.) In Shak. Cor. v. 6. 114. Grafton speaks of 'short notes in manner of annales,' Ep. to Sir W. Cecil. —F. annales, a pl. fem. 'annales, annual chronicles,' Cot. —L. annālēs, pl. adj.; for libri annālēs, yearly books or chronicles; from nom. sing. ann-ālēs, yearly. —L. annus, a year. Prob. allied to Goth. athn, n. a year; Brugm. ii. § 66. Perhaps from √AT, to move on; cf. Skt. at, to go, wander. Der. annal-ist.

ANNATES, first-fruits paid to the pope. (F.—L.) 'These cardinals... have the Annat of Benefices to support their greatness;' Howell, Famil. Letters, 1678, vol. i. lct. 38 (Sept. 1621). —F. annate, 'the first-fruits of a benefice'; the profit of a whole year after the removal, or death, of the incumbent; Cot. —Late L. annāta; Duc. —L. annus, a year.

ANNEAL, to temper by heat. ((1) F.; (2) F.—L.) Two distinct words seem to have been confused. 1. The word was originally applied to metals, in which case it was English, and denoted rather the fusing of metals than the tempering process by gradual cooling. This is the ME. analen, to inflame, kindle, heat, melt, burn. Gower, C. A. iii. 96 (bk. vii. 337), speaks of a meteoric stone, which the fire 'hath analed [melted] rich unto slym, which is congeled.' Wyclif, Isa. xvi. 7 has 'anēlēt tyil' as a translation of L. coque lateris. It also means simply 'to burn' or 'inflame.' Thus, in OE. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 219, the word seraphim is explained to mean 'burninde oder anhelel' [better spelt anēlēt] — burning or kindling; and again, at p. 97, it is said that the Holy Ghost 'anēlēt corthlichen monnan heortan' — inflamed earthly men's hearts. —AS. anēlūn, to burn, kindle, Grein, ii. 339; a compound verb. —AS. an, prefix (answering to mod. E. prep. on); and ēlan, to burn, Grein, i. 55. Cf. Icel. ēldr, Swed. ēld, Dan. ild, fire; corresponding to AS. ēld, fire, a derivative of ēlan, to burn. 2. But in the fifteenth century, a similar word was introduced from the French, having particular reference to the fixing of colours upon glass by means of heat. This is the late ME. analen, to enamel glass. Thus Palsgrave has 'I anel a potte of erthe or suche lyke with a colour, je plomme.' [The word was also applied to the enamelling of metal, and is perhaps meant in the entry in the Prompt. Parv. at p. 11; 'Anelyn or enlyn metalle, or other lyke.'] The initial a- is either the French prefix a- (L. ad), or may have been merely due to the influence of the native word. —OF. analer, to enamel; orig. to paint in black upon gold or silver. —Late L. nigellāre, to blacken. —L. nigellus, blackish; dimin. of niger, black. See DIEZ, s. v. nigello. ¶ There is yet a third word not unlike these two, which appears in 'unaneled,' i. e. not having received extremeunction; Hamlet, i. 5. 77. This is from AS. anetan, to put oil upon; from AS. an, prefix, and ele, oil; see OIL.

ANNEX, to fasten or unite to. (F.—L.) The pp. annexed occurs in the Romant of the Rose, 4811. —F. annexer, to annex, knit, linke, join; Cot. —L. annexus, pp. of annectere, to knit or bind to. —L. ad, to (> an- before n); and nectere, to bind. Der. annex-al-ion.

ANNIHILATE, to reduce to nothing. (L.) Hall, Edw. IV. an. i. has aduhilare; Bacon, Nat. Hist. sect. 100, has annihilatēd. Formed with suffix -ate, on which see ABBRÉVIATE. —L. annihilātus, pp. of annihilāre, to reduce to nothing. —L. ad, to (> an- before n); and nihil, nothing. Der. annihilat-ion.

ANNIVERSARY, the annual commemoration of an event. (L.) Fabyan, an. 1368-9, speaks of 'an anniversary yerely to be kept.' The pl. anniversaries occurs in the Ancren Riwle, p. 22. It is properly an adjective, and so used by Bp. Hall, On the Obser. of Christ's Nativity, where he speaks of an 'anniversary memorial.'—L. anni-, for anno, from annus, a year; and versus, to turn, pp. versus. See Annals and Verse.

ANNOTATE, to make notes upon. (L.) Richardson remarks that the verb is very rare; Foxe uses annotations in his Life of Tyndal, in Tyndal's Works (1572), fol. B.1, last line. Formed with the suffix -ate, on which see Abbreviate.—L. annotatus, pp. of annotare, to make notes.—L. ad, to (> an- before n); and notare, to mark, from nota, a mark. See Note. Der. annotat-or, annotat-ion.

ANNOUNCE, to make known to. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave. Milton has announc't, P. R. iv. 504. [Chaucer has annuncial, C. T. 14021 (B 3205); but this is directly from L. pp. annunciatus.]—F. annoncer, 'to announce'; Cot.—L. annunciare, annuntiare, to announce; pp. annuntiatus.—L. ad (> an- before n); and nuntiare, to report, give a message, from nuntius, a messenger. See Nuncio. Der. announcement; and, directly from L., annunciare; also annunciat-ion.

ANNOY, to hurt, vex, trouble. (F.—L.) ME. anoien, anvien (with one n, correctly), to vex, trouble. See King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, ll. 896, 1287, 4158; Havelok, 1735; Chaucer (Glossary). [The sb. anoi, anoy was in very common use; see Ronsaut of the Rose, 4404; Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 267, &c.; but is now obsolete, and its place to some extent supplied by annoyance and the F. ennui.]—OF. anoier, anvier, to annoy, trouble; from the OF. sb. anoi, anui (mod. F. ennui), annoyance, vexation, chagrin; cognate with mod. Prov. enodi, Span. enojo, OVenetian inodio.—L. in odio, lit. in hatred, which was used in the phrase in odio habui, lit. I had in hatred, i.e. I was sick and tired of, occurring in the Glosses of Cassel, temp. Charles the Great; see Brachet and Diez. Other phrases were L. in odio esse and in odio venire, both meaning to incur hatred, and used by Cicero; see Att. ii. 21. 2. Odio is the abl. of odium, hatred. See the account in Diez. See Odium and Noisome. Der. annoy-ance (Chaucer); from OF. anoiance, a derivative of vb. anoi.

ANNUAL, yearly. (F.—L.) ME. annuel, an anniversary mass for the dead, is a special use of the word; see P. Plowman's Crede, l. 414; Chaucer, C. T. G 1012, on which see my note, or that to Tyrwhitt's Chaucer, C. T. 16480.—F. annuel, annual, yearly; Cot.—L. annuális, yearly; formed with suffix -alis from stem annu-.—L. annus, a year. See Annal. ¶ It will be observed that the spelling was changed from annuel to annual to bring it nearer to the Latin; but the word really came to us through French. Der. annual-ly. From the same source: annu-ity, ME. annuities, Hoccleve, de Regim. Princ. 821, from AF. annuit (unknown in OF.; but see Year-books of Edw. I, 1304-5, p. 179); and the more modern annu-ity-ant.

ANNUL, to nullify, abolish. (F.—L.) The pp. annul occurs in T. Usk, Test. of Love, iii. 2. 81.—AF. annuller, Stat. Realm, i. 367 (1361); OF. annuller, MF. annuller, given by Cotgrave.—L. annulāre, to annul.—L. ad (> an- before n); and L. nullus, none, a contraction from ne ullus, not any. See Null. Der. annul-ment.

ANNUNCIATION, ANNUNCIATE; see Announce.

ANODYNE, a drug to allay pain. (L.—Gk.) Used by Bp. Taylor, Epistle Dedicatory to Sermon to the Irish Parl., 1661 (R.). Also in Pope, Moral Essays, ii. 111. Cotgrave gives 'remedes anodius, medicines which, by procuring sleep, take from a patient all sense of pain.' But the spelling anodyne is Latin.—Late L. anōdīnus, a drug relieving pain; Ducange.—Gk. anōdīnos, adj. free from pain; whence φάρμακον ἀνόδινον, a drug to relieve pain.—Gk. dv-, negative prefix; and ōdōv, pain. Curtius, i. 300, refers ōdōv to the verb ōdōv, to eat, as if it were 'a gnawing'; rightly. See Eat.

ANOINT, to smear with ointment. (F.—L.) Wyclif has anoyntidist, Acts, iv. 27, from ME. verb anointen or anoynten; see Prompt. Parv. p. 12. Chaucer has anoint as a past participle, Prol. 199. It is clear that anoint was orig. a past-participial form, but was afterwards lengthened into anointed, thus suggesting the infin. anointen. Both forms, anoynt and anointed, occur in the Wyclifite Bible, Gen. l. 3; Numb. v. 15. All the forms are also written with initial e, viz. enoit, enointed, enointen.—OF. enoit, enointed, pp. of enoindre, to anoint.—OF. en- (L. in- upon, on); and oindre, to smear, anoint, from L. ungere, to smear, pp. unctus. See Ointment, Unction.

ANOMALY, deviation from rule. (Gk.) Used by Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 15. § 5. Cotgrave's French Dict. gives only the adj. anomal, unequal; so that the sb. was taken from L. anomalía, or directly from the Gk.—Gk. ἀνωμαλία, irregularity, unevenness.—Gk. ἀνώμαλος, uneven.—Gk. dv-, negative prefix, and δωμός, even. The Gk. δωμός is formed with suffix -α- from δω-, base of δωτός, one and the same, joint, common; closely related to E. same. See Same. Der. anomal-ous.

ANON, immediately. (E.) In early use. ME. anon, anoon, onan, anan. Rob. of Glouc. has anon, p. 6; l. 134. The earliest ME. forms are anon, Ancræn Riwle, p. 14; anon, Ormulum, 225. The a is convertible with o in either syllable; but in the latter syllable the vowel was long.—AS. on ān, lit. in one moment (answering to MHG. in ein), but in AS. generally signifying 'once for all'; see examples in Grein, i. 31, sect. 8.—AS. on (mod. E. on), often used with the sense of 'in'; and AS. ān, old form of 'one'. See On and One.

ANONYMOUS, nameless. (Gk.) In Phillips' Dict. (1658). Formed directly from Gk., by substituting -ous for Gk. suffix -os, just as it is often substituted for the L. suffix -us.—Gk. ἀνώνυμος, nameless.—Gk. dv-, neg. prefix; and ὄνομα, ἔστωμα, a name. See Onomatopoeia. Der. anonymous-ly.

ANOTHER, i.e. one another. (F.) Merely the words an and other written together. In Mid. Eng. they were written apart. 'Havelok thouthe al another'; Havelok thought quite another thing; Havelok, 1395. See An and Other.

ANSWER, to reply to. (E.) The verb is from the sb. The lit. sense is 'to make a (sworn) reply in opposition to,' orig. used, no doubt, in trials by law. ME. answeren, Layamon, ii. 518. Cf. L. incūs, an anvil, from in, on, and cadere, to strike; and note the AS. gloss: 'Cudo, percuto, anfilte,' Voc. 217. 5; which authorises the form fildan* (fildan) as postulated above. F. 388: 'And forth she walketh easily a pas.' [It is also to be remarked that the phrase has partly changed its meaning. In Chaucer, both here and in other passages, it means 'at a foot-pace,' and was originally used of men or horses when proceeding at no great speed.] The phrase is composed of a, for on, i. e. at; and the ME. pas, mod. [This is how most of our verbs in -ate were formed; first came the pp. form in -ate, used as an adj., from L. pp. in -atus; also used with the sense of a pp., which at once suggested a verb in -ate.] - L. appropriatus, pp. of appropriare, to make one's own. - L. ad, to (becoming ap-before p); and propius, one's own; whence E. Proper, q.v. Der. appropriate-ly, appropriate-nous, appropriat-ion.

APPROVE, to commend; sometimes, to prove. (F.-L.) ME. approuen, approuen (with u for v). Chaucer has 'approued in counselling'; C. T., B. 3345. - OF. aprover, to approve of (Godefroy); mod. F. approuer. - L. approbare, to commend; pp. approbatus. - L. ad, to (becoming ap-before p); and probare, to test, try; to approve, esteem as good, from probus, good. See PROVE. Der. approve-ly, approve-able, approve-al; also approbat-ion, ME. approbac-ion (Gower, C. A. ii. 86; bk. iv. 2519), from L. approbatio.

APPROXIMATE, adj. near to; v. to bring or come near to. (L.) Sir T. Browne, *Vulg. See APPROACH. Der. approximate-ly, approximat-ion.

APPURTENANCE, in P. Plowman, B. ii. 103 (MS. W.); see APPURTAIN.

APRICOT, a kind of plum. (F.-Port.-Arab.-Gk.-L.) [Formerly spelt apricock, Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 169; Rich. II. iii. 4. 29; from the Port. albricoque, an apricot.] Cotgrave has abricot, of which apricot is a corruption. We also find abricot in Phillips' Dict., 1658. - F. abricot, which Cotgrave explains by 'the abricot, or apricock plum.' - Port. albricoque, an apricot; the F. word having been introduced from Portuguese; see Brachet. Cf. Span. albricoque, Ital. albricoce. β. These words are traced, in Webster and Littré, back to the Arabic al-baryūq (Rich. Dict. p. 263), where al is the Arabic def. article, and the word baryūq is no true Arabic word, but a corruption of the Mid. Gk. βαρυάνθος, Dioscorides, i. 165 (see Sophocles' Lexicon); pl. βαρυάνθος, borrowed from the L. praecoxus, apricots, neut. pl. of praecoxus, another form of praecox, lit. precocious, early-ripe. [They were also called armenia, i.e. Armenian fruit.] They were considered as a kind of peach (peaches were called persica in Latin) which ripened sooner than other peaches; and hence the name. 'Maturescent æstate praecoxia intra triginta annos reperta et primo denariis singulis unumdata'; Pliny, Nat. Hist. xv. 12; which Holland translates: 'the abricots are ready to be eaten in summer; these have not bin known full 30 years, and at their first coming up, were sold for Roman deniers apiece.' 'Villa materni fueramus praecoxus ramis Nunc in adoptiis persica cara sumus'; Martial, 13. 46. The L. praecox, early-ripe, is from prae, beforehand, and coquere, to ripen, to cook. See PRÆCOXIOUS. ¶ The word thus came to us in a very roundabout way, viz. from L. to Gk.; then to Arab.; then to Port.; then to French, whence we borrowed apricot, having previously borrowed the older form apricock from the Portuguese directly.

APRIL, the name of the fourth month. (F.—L.) ME. Aprille, April; Chaucer, C. T. Prol. 1. also Aueril [Aweril], Rob. of Glouc. p. 506; l. 10410. This older form is French; the word was afterwards conformed to Latin spelling, —OF. Avril, —L. Aprilis, April; said to be so called because the earth then opens to produce new fruits. —L. aprire, to open. See APERIENT.

APRON, a cloth worn in front to protect the dress. (F.—L.) In the Bible of 1539, Gen. iii. 7. Formerly spelt napron or naprun, so that an initial n has been lost. F. nappe, a cloth, table-cloth. —L. mappa, a cloth; with change of m to n, as in L. malta, F. matte, L. mespilum, F. nefte. See MAP. ¶ On the loss of n in napron, see remarks prefixed to the letter N.

Mere French; viz. à propos, to the purpose, lit. with reference to what is proposed. —L. ad prapositum, to the purpose. —L. ad, to; and prapositum, a thing proposed, neut. of prapostus, proposed, pp. of prapinere, to propose. See PROPOSE and PURPOSE.

APSE, an arched recess at the E. end of a church. (L.—Gk.) Modern and architectural; a corruption of apsis, which has been longer in use in astronomy, in which it is applied to the turning-points of a planet's orbit, when it is nearest to or farthest from the sun. The astronomical term is also now often written apse. —L. apsis, gen. written abnis, a bow, turn; pl. apsides. —Gk. ἄψις, apsis, a fastening, felloe of a wheel, curve, bow, arch, vault. —Gk. ἄρτεω, to fasten, bind.

Der. apt-ly, apt-ness, apt-i-tude; also ad-apt, q. v., ad-apt, q. v.

APTERYX, a New Zealand bird; the kiwi. (Gk.) Lit. 'wingless'; because it has only rudimentary wings. —Gk. ἀ, neg. prefix; and πτέρυξ, a wing, from πτερόν, weak grade of πτερόν, I fly.

AQUATIC, pertaining to water. (L.) Used by Ray, On the Creation. Spelt aquatyque, Caxton, Eneydos, c. xxiv, p. 90, l. 2. Holland has aquaticall, Plutarch, p. 692 (R.). [Sir T. Browne has aquous, Vulgar Errors, bk. ii. c. 1, § 6. Cotgrave has aqueduct, both as F. and F. —L. aquaticus, pertaining to water. —L. aqua, water. † Goth. uwa, water; OHG. aha, MHC. ah, water (obsolete); AS. ea, a stream; Icel. á, Dan. å, Swed. ä, stream. From L. aqua are also derived aqua-fortis, i. e. strong water, by the addition of fortis, strong; aquarium, Aquarius, aqua-ous; aqueduct, from aqua, gen. of aqua, water, and ductus, a duct.

AQUILINE, pertaining to or like an eagle. (L.; or F.—L.) 'His nose was aquiline'; Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, l. 1350. Perhaps from L. direct; but Cotgrave gives F. aquilin, of an eagle, like an eagle, with the example 'nez aquilin, a hawknose, a nose like an eagle.' —L. aquilinus, belonging to an eagle. —L. aquila, an eagle. See EAGLE.

ARABESQUE, Arabic, applied to designs. (F.—Ital.—Arab.) In Swinburne's Travels through Spain, lett. 31, qu. in Todd's Johnson, we find 'intwoven with the arabesque foliage.' —F. Arabesque, which Cotgrave explains by 'Arabian-like; also sh. f. rebek-work, a small and curious flourishing; where rebesk is a corruption of the very word in question. —Ital. Arabesco, Arabian. —Arab. arab, Arabia; Rich. Dict., p. 1000. The ending -esco in Italian answers to E. -ish. Der. From the name of the same country we have also Arab, Arabian, Arab-ic.

ARBALEST, another form of ARBLAST, q. v.

ARBITER, an umpire, judge of a dispute. (L.) In Milton, P. I. ii. 609. 'As arbiter of war and peace'; Ben Jonson, The Gipsies (Captain). [Some derivatives, borrowed from the French, are in much earlier use, viz. the fcm. form arbitres (i. e. arbitres), Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 154; arbitrou, Wyclif, 3 Esdra, viii. 26; arbitre, arbitree (L. arbitrium, choice), Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. v. p. 3. l. 12; arbitracion, Chaucer's Tale of Melibeus (B 2943); arbitratour, Hall, Henry VI, an. 4; arbitrement, Shak. Tw. Nt. iii. 4. 286.] —L. arbitrator, a witness, judge, umpire; lit. 'one who comes to look on'. β. This curious word is compounded of ar- and biter. Here ar- is a dialectal variation of L. ad, to, as in ar-essere (Corssen, Ausspr. i. 2. 399); and -biter means 'a comer', from the weak grade of biter (also baster and biter), to come, used by Pacuvius and Plautus. The root of biter is perhaps gw-* (cf. Lettish gai-ta, a going); see Brugm. i. §§ 587 (7). 663. Der. arbitr-ess; see also below.

ARBITRARY, depending on the will; despotic. (L.) In Milton, P. I. ii. 334. —L. arbitrarius, arbitrary, uncertain; lit. 'what is done by arbitration', with reference to the discretion of the umpire. —L. arbitrarius, to act as umpire. —L. arbitro, stem of arbitrator, an umpire. See further under ARBITER. Der. arbitrari-ly, arbitrari-ness; and see below.

ARBITRATE, to act as umpire. (L.) Shak. Macb. v. 4. 20. He also has arbitrator, Troilus, iv. 5. 225; which appears as arbitratour (F. arbitrateur, Cotgrave) in Hall, Henry VI, an. 4; Chaucer has arbitracious (F. arbitration), Tale of Melibeus, C. T. B 2943. Formed with suffix -ate (see APPROPRIATE) from L. arbitrator, to act as arbiter, to be umpire (above). Der. arbitrat-er, arbitrat-ion; also arbitra-ment (F., from L. arbitratus). And see above.

ARBLAST, ARBALEST, a steel cross-bow. (F.—L. and Gk.) Obsolete. ME. arblast, dat., Rob. of Glouc. p. 377, l. 7735; AS. Chron. (MS. D), an. 1079. —AF. arblast, (OF. arbaliste (F. arbalète)). —L. arcuballista, a 'ballista' furnished with a bow. —L. arcu-, for arcus, a bow; and ballista, a machine for throwing stones, from Gk. βάλλειν, to throw, with suffix -ista, Gk. -ιστής.

ARBOREOUS, belonging to trees. (L.) Used by Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 6, § 20. [Milton has arbores, i. e. groves (L. arborētum, a place planted with trees), P. I. ix. 437; and the same word occurs in Spenser, F. Q. ii. 6. 12; but we now use the L. arborētum in full.] —L. arborēus, of or belonging to trees, with the change of -us into -ous, as in pions, strenuous. —L. arbor, a tree. Der. (from the same source) arbor-el, arbor-entum, arbor-escant; also arboriculture, arbor-cultur-ist.

ARBOUR, a bower made of branches of trees. (F.—L.; but altered.) Milton has arbour, P. L. v. 378, ix. 216; arbours, iv. 626. Shak. refers to an arbour within an orchard; 2 Hen. IV, v. 3. 2. In Sidney's Arcadia, bk. i, is described 'a fine close arbor, [made] of trees whose branches so lovingly interbraced one the other.' In Sir T. More's Works, p. 177 e, we read of 'sitting in an arbor', which was in 'the garden'. α. There is no doubt that this word is, however, a later form of herber, or erber, a small lawn or herb-garden, which lost its initial h quite regularly; it is the ME. herber, erbere, a garden of herbs or flowers, OF. herbier, L. herbārium. β. This latter word, being of F. origin, had the initial h weak, and sometimes silent, so that it was also spelt erbare, as in the Prompt. Parv. p. 140, where we find 'Erbare, herbarium, viridarium, viridale.' Cf. 'Herbes he tok in an herber'; K. Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 331. 'I entred in that erber grene'; Allit. Poems, A. 38. And see P. I. prompt. b. xvi. 13–15. γ. This occasioned a loss of h in herbere, and at the same time suggested a connexion with L. arbor, a tree; the result being further forced on by the fact that the ME. herbere was used not only to signify 'a garden of herbs', but also 'a garden of fruit-trees' or orchard. δ. The L. herbārium is from herba, a herb. See HERB. ¶ See this explained in the Romance of Thomas of Ercecloude, ed. J. A. H. Murray, note to l. 177; and see N. E. D. Mr. Way, in his note to the Prompt. Parv., p. 140, is incorrect as to the certainty of arbour being a corruption of herbar, with which it has no connexion.

ARC, a segment of a circle. (F.—L.) Chaucer has ark, Man of Law's Prologue, l. 2; and frequently in his Treatise on the Astrolabe. In the latter, pt. ii. sect. 9, l. 2, it is also spelt arch, with ch for k; see ARCH (1); cf. ditch, dyke. —OF. arc, an arc. —L. arcum, acc. of arcus, an arc, a bow. See ARROW. Der. arc-ade, q. v.; and see ARCH, ARCHER.

ARCADE, a walk arched over. (F.—Ital.—L.) Pope has arcades, Moral Essays, Ep. iv. 35. —F. arcade, which Cotgrave explains by 'an arch, an half circle.' —Ital. arcata, lit. arched; fcm. of pp. of arcare, to bend, arch. —Ital. arco, a bow. —L. arcum, acc. of arcus, a bow. See ARO. (See Hatzfeld, Etym. Dict. pref. p. 22.)

ARCANA, see ARK.

ARCH (1), a construction of stone or wood, &c., in a curved or vaulted form. (F.—L.) 'Arch yn a walle, archen'; Prompt. Parv. p. 14. 'An arche of marbel'; Trevisa, tr. of Higden, i. 215. —OF. arche, fcm. sh. an arch, arcade (Godefroy). —Late L. arca, an ark, chest; but also improperly used with the sense of 'arch', by confusion with L. arcus, a bow (Iluange). See ARO. ¶ Hence the Court of Arches, 'originally held in the arches of Bow Church—St. Mary de Arcubus—the crypt of which was used by Wren to support the present superstructure'; I. Taylor, Words and Places. And see Todd's Johnson. Der. arch-ing, arch-ed.

ARCH (2), chief; in later use, clever, cunning, roguish, waggish, sly. (L.—Gk.) 'Dogget . . . spoke his request with so arch a leer'; Tatler, no. 193 (1700). 'The most arch act of piteous massacre'; Rich. III, iv. 3. 2. 'An heretic, an arch one'; i. e. an arch-heretic;

Hen. VIII. iii. 2. 102. 'Bygress . . . a very arch fellow, a downright hypocrite;' Bunyan, Pilg. Progress (Greatheart, in part ii). This curious adj. arose solely out of the use of the prefix archi-, which came to be used as a separate word. See AROH-. Der. arch-ly, arch-ness.

ARCH-, chief; almost solely used as a prefix. (L.—Gk.) Shak. has 'my worthy arch and patron,' Lear, ii. 1. 61; (whence the use of arch, adj., as above. In arch-bishop, we have a word in very early use; AS. arce-biscop, arce-biscop (Bosworth). β. Thus arch is to be rightly regarded as descended from AS. arce-, arce-, arce-, which was borrowed from L. archi- (in archi-episcopus), and this again from Gk. ἀρχι- in ἀρχιεπίσκοπος, an archbishop. — Gk. ἀρχός, chief; ἀρχε, to be first; cf. ἀρχή, beginning. ¶ The form of the prefix being once fixed, it was used for other words; it occurs also in OF., as in OF. arche-diacon, archdeacon. Der. arch-bishop, arch-deacon, arch-duke, arch-duchy, &c. ¶ In the word arch-angel, the ch remained hard (as k) in the Romance languages, on account of the a following; cf. Ital. arcangelo, Span. arcangel.

ARCHÆOLOGY, the science of antiquities. (Gk.) See archæology in Todd's Johnson. Made up from Gk. ἀρχαῖος, ancient, and suffix -logy (Gk. -λογία), from Gk. λόγος, discourse; cf. λογ-, second grade of λέγω, to speak. See AROHALO. Der. archæologist.

ARCHAIC, old, antique, primitive. (Gk.) Spelt archaick; added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. (1827). From Gk. ἀρχαῖος, primitive, antique. — Gk. ἀρχαῖος, old, ancient, lit. 'from the beginning.' — Gk. ἀρχή, beginning.

ARCHER, a Bowman. (F.—L.) In early use. Used by Rob. of Glouc., p. 199 (l. 4096), and still earlier, in King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, l. 6344. — AF. archer, Gaimar, 2814; OF. archier, an archer. — Lat. L. arciarius. Formed with L. suffix -arius from L. arc-us, a bow. See ARO. Der. arch-er-y.

ARCHE-, chief; used as a prefix. (L.—Gk.) The older E. form is arch-, which (as explained under AROH-) was a modification of AS. arce-, from L. archi-. The form archi- is of later use, and borrowed from the L. directly. — Gk. ἀρχι-, prefix. See AROH-. Der. archi-episcopal, archi-epi-cop, archi-diaconal. ¶ In the word arch-angel, the final i of the prefix is dropped before the vowel following. In the word arche-type, the prefix takes the form arche-; see AROHETYP. The same prefix also forms part of the words archi-mandrite, archi-pelago, archi-rect, archi-trave, which see below.

ARCHIMANDRITE, the superior of a monastery or convent, in the Greek Church. (L.—Gk.) 'Archimandrite, an abbot, prior, or chief of an hermitage;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Late L. archi-mandrita, a chief or principal of monks, an abbot; Apollinaris Sidonius, Ep. 8. 14 (Lewis). — Late Gk. ἀρχιμανδριτης, the same. — Gk. ἀρχι-, chief (see AROH-); μάνδρα, an enclosed space, fold, (in late Gk.) a monastery; see Madrigal.

ARCIPELAGO, chief sea, i.e. Aegean Sea. (Ital.—Gk.) 'Archiipelago, or Archipelago;' Phillips (1706). — Ital. arcipelago, modified to archipelago by the substitution of the more familiar Gk. prefix archi- (see AROH-) for the Ital. form arcei-. — Gk. ἀρχι-, prefix, signifying 'chief'; and πέλαγος, a sea. ¶ The Ital. arcipelago occurs as early as 1268; see N. See Technical, Texture. Der. architect-ure, architect-ural.

ARCHITRAVE, the part of an entablature resting immediately on the column. (F.—Ital.—Hybrid of Gk. and L.) Used by Milton, P. L. i. 715; and by Ben Jonson, The New Inn, iii. 2 (Love). Evelyn, On Architecture, remarks: 'the Greeks named that epistilium which we from a mungril compound of two languages (ἀρχι-τράβε, or rather from arcus and trabs) called architrave. His second derivation is wrong; the first is nearly right. His observation that it is 'a mungril compound' is just. Lit. it means 'chief beam.' — F. Architrave, 'the architrave (of pillars, or stonework); the reason-peece or master-beam (in buildings of timber);' Cot. — Ital. architrave (Torriano); arcotrave (Florio), chief beam. — Gk. ἀρχι-, prefix, chief, adopted into L. as archi-; and L. arc-trabem, a beam, from the nom. trabs, a beam. Cf. Gk. τράπεζα, a spear-shaft, a beam.

ARE, the pres. pl. of the verb substantive. (Northern E.) The whole of the present tense of the verb substantive is from the same root, viz. ES, to be. I here discuss each person separately. The singular is I am, thou art, he is; pl. we, ye, they are.

AM is found in the Northumbrian glosses of the Gospels, Luke, xxii. 33, and frequently elsewhere. The Wessex form is esom. These stand for es-m, the s having been assimilated to m, and then dropped. Here es is the root, and -m is short for -mi; the Idg. type being es-mi*. [The Northumbrian retains this -m in other instances, as in geseo-m, I see, Mark, viii. 24; dūa-m, I do, Mark, xii. 33; būa-m, I be, Mark, ix. 19.] β. The original Idg. type esmi* is further represented by the Skt. as-mi, Zend ah-mi, Gk. ἐσ-μι, L. s-u-m (for es-(u)-mi*), Lithuan. es-mi, Goth. i-m, Icel. e-m, Swed. är (for es, dropping the suffix), Dan. er, Olrish a-m. It is the only word in English in which the old suffix -mi appears. See Brugm. ii. § 976.

ART. This is the OMer. earð, erð; cf. ONorthumbrian arð (Luke, iv. 34), and the AS. (Wessex) earl (with t due to the -t in seant-t, shant, &c.). The Icel. form is er-t, Olcel. er-t; and F. and Icel. are the only languages which have this -t. β. The orig. Idg. types were es-i*, es-si*; cf. Skt. as-i, Zend ah-i, Doric Gk. ἐσ-σι (Attic ἐσσι), L. es, Lithuan. es-si, Goth. i-s (or is), Swed. är, Dan. er. See Brugm. ii. § 984. IS. This is the same in Northumbrian and Wessex, viz. is, as at present. β. The orig. Idg. type was es-ti*; cf. Skt. as-ti, Zend ah-ti, Gk. ἐσ-τι, L. es-t, Lith. es-ti, Goth. is-t, Swed. är, Dan. er, G. ist. The English form has lost the suffix, preserving only is, as a weakened form of ES*. So also (Irish is).

ARE. This is the OMer. earun, ONorthumbrian aron (Matt. v. 14) as distinguished from AS. (Wessex) sindon; but the forms sindon and sint are also found in Northumbrian. All three persons are alike in Old English; but the Icel. has er-um, er-ur, er-u. β. The gen. Idg. type of the 3rd pers. pl. was es-enti*; whence Skt. as-anti, Gk. ἐσ-αντι, L. s-unt, Goth. s-ind, G. s-ind, Icel. er-u (for es-u*), Swed. är-e (for ä-s-e*), Dan. er-e (for es-e*), ONorthumb. ar-on (for as-on*), ME. ar-en, later are, AS. s-ind (on). In the AS. s-indon, the -on is a later suffix, peculiar to English. γ. Thus E are is short for aren, and stands for the es-en* of the primitive es-enti*, whilst the AS. sind stands for the s-ent* of the same primitive form. See Brugm. ii. § 1017.

The ES*, to be, appears in Skt. as, to be, Gk. ἐσ- of Doric ἐσ-σι, L. es-se, to be, G. s-ein, to be, and in various parts of the verb in various languages, but chiefly in the present tense. ¶ For other parts of the verb, see Be, Was.

ARECA, a genus of palms, of which one species produces the areca-nut, which the natives roll up with a little lime in the leaves of the betel, and chew. (Port.—Canarese.) Port. areca. From the Karnāta (Canarese) adika, areca-nut; Wilson, Indian Terms, p. 7. Cf. Malayālam adikka, Tamil adikka; from adai, denoting close arrangement of the cluster, and kāy, nut, fruit. The accent is on the initial a in all the languages; see N. E. D. The cerebral d has been replaced by r.

AREFACTION, a drying, making dry. (L.) Used by Bacon,

Adv. of Learning, b. ii. 8. 3; ed. Wright, p. 124, l. 14. A coined word, from L. arġāra, to make dry. = L. arġere, to be dry (cf. arġidus, dry); and facere, to make. See ARĠD. Der. By adding -fy (F. -fieri) to make, to the stem arġ-, the verb arġify has also been made; it is used by Bacon, Nat. Hist. sect. 394.

ARENA, a space for disputants or combatants. (L.) It occurs in Hakewill, Apologie (1630), p. 396. 'The arena or pit'; Gibbon, Hist. c. lxxi. § 10. = L. arena, sand; hence, a sanded space for gladiators in the amphitheatre. Older form harina; cf. Sabine jařena, sand. Der. arena-ce-ous, i.e. sandy.

AREOPAGUS, Mars' hill; the supreme court at Athens. (L. = Gk.) From L. arġopagus, which occurs in the Vulgate version of Acts, xvii. 22, where the A. V. has 'Mars' hill.' = Gk. Ἀρειοπαγος, a form which occurs in no good author (Liddell and Scott); more commonly Ἀρειος πάγος, which is the form used in Acts, xvii. 22. = Gk. Ἀρειος, of or belonging to Ἀρης, the Gk. god of war; and πάγος, a rock, mountain peak, hill. Der. Areopag-ite, Areopag-it-ic-a (Milton's treatise).

ARETE, a sharp ascending ridge of a rock. (F. = L.) Chiefly with reference to French Switzerland. = F. arġte; (OF. areste = L. arista, an ear of corn, fishbone or spine; hence (in F.) a ridge, sharp edge. See ARRIS.

ARGENT, white, in heraldry; silvery. (F. = L.) In Marlowe, Massacre at Paris, i. 6. 2; as an heraldic term, much earlier. = F. argent, silver; also, 'argent in blason'; Cot. = L. argentum, silver; of which the old Ocean form was argemet; connected with argilla, white clay. Cf. Gk. ἀργυρος, silver; connected with ἀργός, white; Skt. arjuna-s, white; Orlah argat, V. ariant, silver. = ARG, to shine. Brugm. i. § 539, 604. Der. argent-ine (F. argentin, Cotgrave; Late L. argentinus).

ARGONAUT, one who sailed in the ship Argo. (L. = Gk.) In Spenser, F. Q. iv. i. 23; and see Trevisa, tr. of Higden, ii. 405. L. argonauta, one who sailed in the Argo. = Gk. Ἀργοναύτης, an Argonaut. = Gk. Ἀργός, the name of Jason's ship (meaning 'the swift'; from ἀργός, swift); and ναύτης, a ship-man, sailor, from ναῦς, a ship. Der. Argonaut-ic.

ARGOSY, a merchant-vessel. (Dalmatian.) In Shak. Mer. of Ven. i. 1. 9; on which Clark and Wright note: 'Argosy denotes a large vessel, gen. a merchant-ship, more rarely a ship of war. The word has been supposed to be a corruption of Ragose, "a ship of Ragusa;" and this is correct. β. The etymology of this word has been set at rest by Mr. Tancock, in N. and Q. 6. S. iv. 490. See The Present State of the Ottoman Empire, by Sir Paul Ricaut, 1675, c. 14, p. 119; Lewis Roberts's Merchants Map of Commerce, 1638, c. 237, where he speaks of the great ships 'vulgarly called Argoses, properly Rhaguses'; and especially the earlier quotation about 'Raguses, hulks, Caravels, and other foreign rich laden ships,' in The Petty Navy Royal, by Dr. John Dee, 1577, pr. in Arber's English Garner, ii. 67. See also Wedgwood (Contested Etymologies); Palmer (Folk-Etymology). [The OF. argousin is unrelated; see Palmer, Brachet.] Ragusa is a port in Dalmatia, on the E. coast of the Gulf of Venice.

ARGUE, to make clear, prove by argument. (F. = L.) 'Aristotle and other moo to argue I taught;' P. Plowman, B. x. 174. = OF. arguer. = Late L. argūtūre (L. argūtūri), frequentative of arguere, to prove, make clear; cf. argūtus, clear. Perhaps allied to Gk. ἀργός, white, bright. See ARGENT. Der. argu-ment, Chaucer, C. T. 11198 (F. 886); argument-al-ious, argument-al-ive, argument-al-ive-ness.

ARID, dry, parched. (L.) Not in early use; Rich. quotes from Swift's Battle of the Books, and Cowper's Homer's Iliad, bk. xii. Aridity is in Phillips (1658). It was probably taken immediately from L. arġdus, dry. = L. arġere, to be dry. Cf. Skt. āra-s, dust. Der. arid-it-y, arid-ness; and see AREFACTION, ASHES.

ARIGHT, in the right way. (E.) We find in Layamon, i. 17631, 'ar he mihte fusen a riht,' i.e. ere he might proceed aright. The a is (as usual) for an, ME. form of AS. an, often used in the sense of 'in.' Thus aright is for 'on right,' i.e. in right; right being a substantive. Cf. abed, asleep, afoot, &c. See RIGHT.

ARISE, to rise up. (E.) ME. arisen, Old Eng. Homilies, i. 49; very common. AS. arisan, to arise; Grein, i. 38. = AS. ā-, and risan, to rise. Cf. Goth. ur-risan, to arise, Matt. viii. 15, where ur- is the prefix which commonly appears in Gothic as us-, but becomes ur- before a following r. But we cannot equate the AS. prefix ā- to Goth. us-, which is related to G. ur-, ar-, AS. or-. See RISE.

ARISTOCRACY, a government of the best men; a government by a privileged order; the nobility. (Gk.) In Ben Jonson, The Fox, iv. 1 (Lady P.). Holland speaks of 'an aristocracy, or regiment [i.e. government] of wise and noble senate;' Plutarch, p. 276 (R.). Cf.

F. aristocratie, 'an aristocracy; the government of nobles, or of some few of the greatest men in a state'; Cot. [But the word may have been taken directly from Gk.] = Gk. ἀριστοκρατία, the rule of the best-born or nobles. = Gk. ἀριστος, for ἀριστος, best; and κράτος, to be strong, to rule, government. β. The Gk. ἀριστος, best, is a superlative from a form ἀρ-, proper, good, which appears in ἀρ-ετή, excellence. The Gk. κράτος, to be strong, is from κράω, strong, cognate with F. hard. See ARM (1) and HARD. Der. aristocrat-ic, aristocrat-ic-al, aristocrat-ic-al-ly, and even aristocrat (not a very good form); all from the Gk. stem ἀριστοκρατ-.

ARITHMETIC, the science of numbers. (F. = L. = Gk.) [In ME. we find the OF. form arismetike, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 792; further altered to arismetrik, Chaucer, C. T. 1900 (A. 1898); these are from OF. arismetike (see Hatzfeld); adapted from Prov. arismetica, from L. arithmētica. At a later period the word was conformed to the Gk.] We find arithmetick in Holland's Pliny (concerning Pamphilus), b. xxxv. c. 10 (ii. 537); and in Shak. Troil. i. 2. 123. = F. arithmétique, explained as 'arithmetick' by Cotgrave. = L. arithmētica. = Gk. ἀριθμητική, the science of numbers, fem. of ἀριθμητικός, belonging to numbers. = Gk. ἀριθμ-εω, to number. = Gk. ἀριθμός, number, reckoning. See Prellwitz. ¶ The ME. arismetrik was popularly supposed to represent L. ars metrika, metrical art! Der. arithmetical, arithmetical-ly, arithmetician.

ARK, a chest, or box; a large floating vessel. (L.) In very early use as a Bible word. In the AS. version of Gen. vi. 15, it is spelt arc. cf. Goth. arka, Icel. örk (from Latin). = L. arca, Gen. vi. 15 (Vulgate); cf. L. arcere, to keep. + Gk. ἀρκέω, to keep off, suffice; ἀρκος, safe, certain. Der. arcana, L. neut. pl., things kept secret, secrets; from L. arcānus, hidden, from arcere, to keep, enclose.

ARM (2), vb., to furnish with weapons. (F. = L.) ME. armen, to arm; Rob. of Glouc. p. 63 (l. 1446); Layamon, i. 15313. = OF. armer, to arm. = L. armāre, to furnish with weapons. = L. arma, weapons. See ARMS. Der. arma-da, arma-dillo, arma-ment, armour, army; all from L. armā-re; see these words. Armistice is from L. arma, s. pl.; see below.

ARMADA, an 'armed' fleet; a large fleet. (Span. = L.) Well known in the time of Elizabeth. Camden speaks of the 'great armada;' Elizabeth, an. 1588. Often ill written armada, as in Shak. K. AROUND THEE! begone! (E.) 'Aroint thee, witch!' Macbeth, i. 3. 6. Usually explained by 'avaunt!' The lit. sense seems to be 'make room,' or 'get out of the way.' AROMA, a sweet smell. (L.—Gk.) The sb. is modern in the sense of 'scent'; but ME. aromat (from OF. aromat, F. aromate) was in early use, meaning 'spice'; see Ancien Riwle, p. 376, where the pl. is aromaz (= aromats). The adj. aromatic is found rather early. Maundeville has 'aromatyk thinges'; c. xvi. p. 174. — Late L. arōma, borrowed from Gk. — Gk. ἀρώμα, a spice, a sweet herb. The prefix is the E. a-, in its commonest use as short for an, the ME. form of an, prep. on; so that a-round is for on round, i. e. in a round or circle. Round is from OF. roond, ron, L. rotundus. Cf. abed, asleep. See Bound.

AROUND, to rouse up. (Hybrid; F. and Scand.) In Shak. 2 Hen. VI. i. 3. The prefix is a needless addition; no doubt meant to be intensive, and imitated from that in arise, which is from the AS. ā-; see Arise. And see Rouse.

Walloon harkuluse, in Dict. de la langue Wallonne, by Grandgagnage, i. 266, 278, qu. by Diez, who traces the word. [A corrupt form; cf. Ital. archibuso (Torriano), variant of archibugio, 'a harquebuse,' Florio; also written arobugio (id.). The Ital. form is doubtly correct, being due to a popular etymology from arco, a bow, and bugio, a hole (referring to the barrel).] — MDu. hakebusse*, haeckbusse, 'an arquebuse,' Hexham; Du. haeckbusse. — MDu. hake, haeck, Du. haak, a hook, clasp, and MDu. busse, Du. bus, a gun-barrel, gun; exactly parallel to G. hakenbüchse, an arquebuse, from haken, a hook, and büchse, a gun-barrel, gun. β. The word means 'gun with a hook,' alluding to the hook which was cast with the piece, by which it was fastened to the 'carriage'; but the name was afterwards applied to other kinds of portable fire-arms, so that the original kind was renamed arquebuse à croc, arquebus with a hook, as in Cotgrave. Other E. forms were hackbusch and hackbut. See Hackbut; also Hook and Bush (2).

ARRACK, an ardent spirit used in the East. (F.—Arab.) Better spelt arak or arac, as in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, pp. 45, 241, 328. — OF. arack (Supp. to Godefroy); A. F. rang, a rank, file, orig. a ring or circle of people; from OIIG. krinc, mod. G. ring, a ring, esp. a ring or circle of people; cognate with E. ring. See Rank, Ring. Der. arrangement.

ARRANT, knavish, mischievous, notoriously bad. (F.—L.) Arant is a later spelling of errant, and was first used in the phrase theef errant, a roving outlaw or notorious robber, which occurs in Chaucer: 'an outlawe or a theef errant'; C. T. 17173 (II 224). Hence it was extended to other ill-doers, with the sense of 'notorious,' or 'out-and-out.' 'An errant usurer'; P. Plowman, C. vii. 307; 'errant traytours,' Orig. Letters, ed. Ellis, ii. 105 (A. D. 1539); 'errant theues' and 'errant theefe'; Lever, Sermons (1550), ed. Arber, p. 66. In Holinshed's (really Stanhurst's) Desc. of Ireland, repr. 1808, p. 68, we find: '[they] gad and range from house to house like arrant knights of the round table'; where 'arrant knights' = knights errant; cf. 'knight errant' in Malory's Morte Arthur, bk. iv. c. 25, l. 23. Chapman, in Byron's Tragedy, A. v. sc. 1 (Byron) has: 'As this extravagant and errant rogue.' — OF. errant, pres. pt. of errer, erir, to wander. — Late L. iterāre, to travel. — L. iter, a journey. ¶ It sometimes represents the pres. pt. of L. errāre, to wander. AS. rāde, OHG. reiti, ready. See further under Ready. ¶ Note also Scottish graithe, to make ready, grath, ready, graithe, apparatus, words directly borrowed from Icel. greiða, to equip, greiðr, ready, and greiði, arrangement; in which g- (= ge-) is a prefix. Hence to array, to graithe, and to make ready, are three equivalent expressions containing the same root. Der. array, sb.; the same root occurs in curry, vb.; see Curry (1).

ARREARS, debts unpaid and still due. (F.—L.) The ME. arere is mostly an adverb, signifying backward, in the rear; e. g. 'Somme tyme aside, and somme tyme arere' = sometimes on one side, and sometimes backward; P. Plowman, B. v. 354. It is more commonly spelt arere (with one r), or arere (in two words), id. C. vii. 405. — OF. arere, arriere (arriere in Godefroy), backward. — L. ad, towards; and retro, behind. [Similarly OF. deriere (mod. F. dérrière) is from L. dē, from, and retro, backward; and we ourselves use the word rear still.] See Rear; and see arriere in Hatzfeld. ¶ What we now express by arere is expressed in ME. by arrearages or arrearage, a sb. pl. formed from ME. arere by the addition of the F. suffix -age. For examples of arrearages, see N. E. D.; and cf. F. plowman, C. xii. 297. The mod. E. arrear, sb., arose from the ME. phrase in arere, by dropping in.

ARREST, to stop, to seize. (F.—L.) ME. arresten, or commonly arrest; Chaucer, Prolog. 829 (A 827). — OF. arrest, to stay (mod. F. arrêter). — L. ad, to (which becomes a in OF.); and restāre, to stay, remain, stop, compounded of re-, back, and stare, to stand, remain, cognate with E. stand. See Re- and Stand; and see Rest (2).

ARRIS, a ridge, the edge formed by the angular contact of two plane (or curved) surfaces. (F.—L.) 'Burford stone... carries a finer arris than that at Heddington'; Plot's Oxfordsh. (1677). p. 75. — OF. arrest; F. arris. See Arête.

ARRIVE, to come to a place, reach it. (F.—L.) Gen. followed by at in modern E.; but see Milton, P. L. ii. 409; Shak. Jul. Cæs. i. 2. 110. ME. ariven, ariven (u for v); Rob. of Glouc. p. 18, l. 415. — OF. ariver, arriver. — Late L. adripare*, to come to the shore, spelt arripare in a 9th cent. text, and arripare in an 11th cent. chartulary; Brachet. See the note also in Brachet, showing that it was originally a seaman's term. — L. ad ripam, towards the shore. — L. ad, to; and ripa, shore, bank. The orig. sense of L. ripa was 'a rift, a break';

cf. Gk. ἄσπευ, a broken cliff; Gcel. rifa, whence E. rive. See RIVE.
AR arrival, split arrival in Gower, C. A. ii. 4; bk. iv. 94.

ARROGATE, to lay claim to, assume. (L.) Used by Barnes, Works, p. 371, col. 1. The sb. arrogance is much older; Chaucer, C. T. 6694 (D 1112); so is the adj. arrogant, C. T. Persones Tale, De Superbia (I 396). Formed with suff. -ate (see ABBREVIATE) from L. arrogare, to ask of, to adopt, attribute to, add to; pp. arrogatus.
AR, ad, to (> ar before r); and rogare, to ask. See ROGATION.

ARROW, a missile shot from a bow. (L.) ME. arwe, arwe (with one r); Chaucer, Prolog. 107; Ancr. R. 107. AS. arwe, AS. Chron. an. 1083 (Laud MS.); older form arwe, Thorpe's Anc. Laws, ii. 212, § 28. Teut. type arwōn*, weak fem. Another form is arh, Grein, I. 248; Teut. type arhōn*, neut. + Icel. ör, an arrow, pl. örur; Teut. type arhū*, strong fem. Cf. also Goth. arhwazna, I., an arrow, a dart, Eph. vi. 16; allied to L. arceus, a bow; Brugm. I. § 241 (b). Der. arrows, arrows-oot. See AR.

ARROW-ROOT, a farinaceous substance, made from the tubers of the Maranta arundinacea, and other plants. (E.) From arrow and root. The F. name of this preparation is derived from the use to which the Indians of S. America were accustomed to apply the juice extracted from another species of Maranta—the Maranta galanga, which was employed as an antidote to the poison in which the arrows of hostile tribes were dipped; Eng. Cyclopaedia, Arts and Sciences, s. v. Arrow-root. Observe the L. name, 'Maranta arundinacea'. The account in N. E. D. is similar, with a reference to Sir Hans Sloane, Catal. Plant. Jamaica, 122.

ARSE, the buttocks. (E.) ME. ars, ers; P. Plowman, B. v. 175, and footnote. AS. ars, ars; Bosworth. + Du. aars; Icel. ars, Swed. and Dan. ars; MllG. ars; mod. G. arsch. Teut. type arsōz* + Gk. ἄρσος, the rump; Idg. type arsoz* (Pretlitz).

ARSENAL, a magazine for naval stores, &c. (Ital.—Span.—Arab.) Holland speaks of 'that very place where now the arsenal and shipyards are'; Livy, p. 106; and see Ben Jonson, The Fox, iv. 1 (Sir F.); Milton, P. R. iv. 270. [Rather from Ital. than from F. arsenal, which Cotgrave, following the F. spelling, explains by 'an Arsenal'.]—Mltal. arsenale, 'a storehouse for munition' (Florio); cf. Ital. arsena, an arsenal, arsenale, a war dock.—MSpan. alacazana, 'a dock where ships are made or amended; a storehouse for munition'; Minshew; Span. atarazana, atarazanal. [The varying forms are due to the word being foreign, viz. Arabic. The final -a is merely formative, and no part of the original word. The Span. atarazana (with a for Arab. al, the def. art.) and Ital. arsenale are the best forms.]—Arab. dir ar-cinā ah, house of construction.—Arab. dir, house; ar-, for al, the; cinā ah, art, trade, construction. See Devic; and Rich. Dict. 649, 943. The two words together signify 'a house of art or construction,' 'a place for making things.' Mr. Wedgwood says: 'Ibn Khaldoun quotes an order of the Caliph Abdalmelic to build at Tunis a dir-cinā for the construction of everything necessary for the equipment and armament of vessels. Pedro de Alcalá translates atarazana by the Arab. dir ar-cinā; see Engelmann and Dozy.'

ARSENIC, a poisonous mineral. (Gk.—Arab.—Pers.) Chaucer speaks of arsenik, C. T. G. 798. It was one of the four 'spirits' in alchemy.—L. arsenicum.—Gk. ἀρσενικόν, orpiment, yellow arsenic, a name occurring in Dioscorides, 5. 121. [This Gk. word lit. means 'male'; in allusion to the extraordinary alchemical fancy that some metals were of different sexes. Gold, e.g. also called Sol, the sun, was masculine, whilst luna, also called luna, the moon, was feminine. But these fables arose out of popular etymology, the Gk. name being really borrowed.]—Arab. az-zernikk; from az-, for al, the, def. art., and zernikk, orpiment, borrowed from Pers. zarn, orpiment, yellow arsenic, which is from Pers. zar, gold. See Devic; p. 4; Rich. Dict., p. 774. And see GOLD. Der. arsenic-al.

ARSEN, the place of a stressed syllable in English verse. (Gk.) The sense has varied; see N.E.D. 'Arsis, a raising or lifting up'; Phillips (1706).—Gk. ἀρσις, a raising.—Gk. ἀρσις, to raise.

ARSON, the crime of burning houses. (F.—L.) Old Law French; see Blackstone's Comment. b. iv. c. 16.—OF. arson, arson, incendiarism; Late L. acc. type arsin-em*.—L. ardere, to burn; pp. arsus. See ARDENT.

ART (1), 2 p. s. pres. of the verb substantive. (E.) OMer. earð, arð; ONorthumbrian arð, later art; AS. art. The ar- stands for es-, from es*, to be; and the -t, ONorthumb. -ð, is a suffix. See further under ARE.

ARTERY, a tube or pipe conveying blood from the heart. (L.—Gk.) Shak. L. L. iv. 3. 306. ME. arterie, Lanfrank, Chirurgie, ii. 5; p. 162, l. 17.—L. artēria, the windpipe; also, an artery. [The F. form is artère, which is shorter than the E., and consequently the E. word is not from French.]—Gk. ἀρτηρία, an artery; but orig. the windpipe. Perhaps connected with dōrph, the aorta (Pretlitz). See AORTA. Der. arteri-al, arteri-al-ise.

ARTESIAN, adj., applied to a well. (F.—L.—C.) These wells are made by boring till the water is found; and the adj. is properly applied to such as are produced by boring through an impermeable stratum, in such a way that the water, when found, overflows at the outlet. Englished from F. Artésien, of or belonging to Artois, a province in the N. of France, where the wells were in use in the eighteenth century and earlier. Artois is from L. Atrebatensis, acc. of Atrebatensis, adj. formed from L. Atrebat-es; see further under ARRAS. See Eng. Cycl. s. v. Artesian well.

ARTICHOKE, an esculent plant; Cynara Scolymus. (Ital.—Span.—Arab.) 'Artichoke, cynara,' Levins, 159, 5. Holland has the odd spelling artichokke for the plural; Pliny, l. xx. c. 23. [He seems to have been thinking of F. choux, cabbage.] The pl. artichokes occurs in 1537, in the Privy Purse Expenses of the Princess Mary, ed. Madden, p. 32.—Ital. artichocco, an artichoke (Diez); cf. F. artichaut, spelt artichault by Cotgrave, and explained by him as 'an artichoke.' A corrupt form. Florio gives the spellings archicocco, artichicoffo; also carciocco, carcioffo.—MSpan. alacachofa (Minshew); whence Span. alacachofa, Port. alacachofa.—Arab. al-harshaf, an artichoke; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 562. The pretended Arab. ar-dī shanki, cited by Diez, is a mere modern corruption from Italian.

ARTICLE, a small item; a part of speech. (F.—L.) ME. article, Aynbite of Luyt, pp. 11, 12.—F. article, 'an article; a head, principal clause, title or point of a matter'; also, a joint or knuckle; Cot.—L. articulus, acc. of articulus, a joint, knuckle, member of a sentence, an article in grammar; the lit. sense being 'a little joint.' Formed, by help of suffixes -ulo, from L. artus, a joint, a limb.—AR*, to fit; Pretlitz (s. v. ἀρτίζω). See Max Müller, Lect. i. 104 (8th ed.). See ARM. Der. article, verb. And see below.

ARTICULATE, adj., jointed, fitted; also, distinct, clear. (L.) Speech is articulate when distinctly divided into joints, i. e. into words and syllables; not jumbled together.—L. articulatus, distinct, articulate; pp. of articulare, to supply with joints, or divide by joints, chiefly applied to articulate speaking.—L. articulus, a little joint (above). Der. articulate, verb; articulate-ly, articulation.

ARTIFICE, a contrivance. (F.—L.) Gower has artificiers, C. A. iii. 142; bk. vii. 1691. Shak. has artificer, K. John, iv. 2. 201; and artificial, Romeo, i. 1. 146. Artifice is in Milton, P. L. ix. 30.—F. artifice, skill, cunning, workmanship; Cot.—L. artificium, a craft, handicraft.—L. artifex, stem of artifex, a workman.—L. arti-, for ars, art; and facere, to make, the stem fac- being altered to fic- in compounds. See ART and FACT. Der. artifice-al, artifice-ally; also artifice-er.

ARTILLERY, gunnery; great weapons of war. (F.—L.) Milton, P. L. ii. 715; Shak. K. John, ii. 403. Chaucer, C. T. B 2523, in his Tale of Melibeus, speaks of 'castelles, and other maner edifices, and armure, and artillerie.'—OF. artillerie, machines or equipment of war; see quotation in Roquefort s. v. artillerment. The word was used to include crossbows, bows, &c., before the invention of gunpowder.—OF. artiller, to fortify, equip; Roquefort.—Late L. artillire*, to make machines; a verb inferred from the word artiller, a maker of machines, given by DuCange.—L. arti-, stem of ars, art. See ART. We also find Late L. artiliator, answering to an older form artivclator*, from Late L. articulo, articulum, art, artificer, derivatives of ars, art (not from artus, a joint); see DuCange. Der. artiller-ist.

ARTISAN, a workman. (F.—Ital.—L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; and in Marlowe, Faustus, i. 1. 53.—F. artisan, an artisan, mechanic.—Ital. artigiano, a workman; whence it was introduced into F. in the 16th century; Brachet. β. This corresponds, according to Diez, to a late L. form artiliunus* (not found), formed in its turn from L. artius, cunning, artful (see DuCange), which is from art-, decl. stem of ars, art. See ART. ¶ Rabelais has artizan (Hatzfeld); if here the z = s, the F. word may have been taken immediately from L., and not through Italian.

AS, adverb and conjunction. (E.) ME. as, als, also, also, and al so, al swa, written separately. That these are all one and the same word has been proved by Sir F. Madden, in remarks upon Ilavoclok, and is a familiar fact to all who are acquainted with Middle English. In other words, as is a contracted form of also. β. The successive spellings are: AS. enl swā, Grein, i. 239; al swa, Layamon, l. 70; al so, Seven Sages, 569, ed. Weber; also, P. Plowman, A. v. 144; als, id. B. v. 230 (where als means 'also'); als manye as = as many as; Mandeville's Travels, p. 209. The AS. eal swā means both 'just so' and 'just as.' See Also.

ASAFETIDA, ASSAFETIDA, a medicinal gum. (Hybrid; Pers. and L.) Spelt asafetida, Arnold's Chron. (1502), ed. 1811, p. 234. A juice made chiefly from the Ferula Nardus, an umbelliferous plant, growing in Persia. The Persian name is āzā, 'mastic,' Rich. Dict. p. 65. The L. fetida, stinking, refers to its offensive smell. See Fetid.

ASBESTOS, a fibrous mineral. (Gk.) In Holland's Pliny, b. xxvii. c. 10; il. 624. Written asbestos, Trevisa, tr. of Higden, i. 187. So called because it is incombustible. = Gk. asbestos, incombustible; lit. 'unquenchable.' = Gk. as-, negative prefix; and -bestos, quenchable, from stēvnu, I quench, extinguish. See Brugm. i. § 653, and Prellwitz, as to this curious verb. Der. asbest-ine, adj.

ASCEND, to climb, mount up. (L.) Chaucer has ascension and ascended, C. T. 14861, 14863 (B 4045, 4047). [There is a F. sb. ascension, but the OF. ascendre is rare and obsolete; the F. verb was probably suggested by the Vulgate.] = ascendere, to climb up to, ascend; pp. ascensus. = L. ad-, to (reduced to a- before sc); and scandere, to climb. See Scan. Der. ascendent, Chaucer, ProL 417, from L. pres. pt.; also ascendant, as in Dryden, Legend of T. Cromwell, l. 399, from F. pres. pt.; ascendenc-y; ascens-ion, cf. L. pp. ascensus; ascend (Shak.), coined to pair off with descent, the latter being a true F. word.

ASCERTAIN, to make certain, determine. (F.—L.) The s is an idle addition to the word, and should never have been inserted. Yet the spelling ascertain occurs in Fabyan, c. 177, § 6. Balce has ascertained; Image, pt. i. ME. ascertainen; 'For now I am ascertained thoroughly.' Flower and Leaf, 568. = OF. ascertainer; variant of ascertener (Godefroy). Cotgrave has 'ascertener, to certify, ascertainer, assure.' B. Ascertainer is a coined word, made up of F. prefix a- (L. ad), and the adj. certain, certain, sure. See Certain. Der. ascertain-able.

ASCETIC, adj. often used as sb., one who is rigidly self-denying in religious observances; a strict hermit. (Gk.) Gilbon speaks of 'the ascetics.' Hist. c. 37, § 2. In the Life of Bp. Burnet, c. 13, we find: 'he entered into such an ascetic course.' The adjective was 'applied by the Greek fathers to those who exercised themselves in, who employed themselves in, who devoted themselves to, the contemplation of divine things; and for that purpose, separated themselves from all intercourse with the world'; Richardson. = Gk. askētikos, industrious, lit. given to exercise; applied to hermits, who strictly exercised themselves in religious devotion. = Gk. askētikos, one who exercises an art, esp. applied to an athlete. = Gk. askēin, to work, adorn, practise, exercise; also, to mortify the body, in Ecclesiastical writers. Root unknown. Der. asceticism.

ASCIDIAN, a term applied to some tunicate molluscs; and to pitcher-shaped leafy appendages, in botany. (Gk.) Modern; lit. 'pitcher-like.' = Gk. askēthos, dimin. of askos, a leathern bag, wine-skin.

ASCITITIOUS, ASCITITIOUS, supplemental, incidental. (L.) Little used. 'Ascititious, adjoined, borrowed,' Kersey's Dict. 'Homer has been reckoned an ascititious name, from some accident of his life'; Pope, qu. in Todd's Johnson. Coined, as if from L. 'ascititius (not used), from ascitus, received, derived from others, not innate; pp. of asciscere, to take in, admit, receive from without, also written asciscere. = L. ad, to; and sciscere, to learn, find out, accept, which is formed from sci-re, to know, by the addition of the ending -scere, common in forming 'inchoative' or 'inceptive' verbs in Latin. See Science.

ASCRIBE, to attribute, impute. (L.) It occurs in the Lamentation of Mary Magdeleine, l. 254; a poem later than Chaucer, but sometimes printed with his work. = L. ascribere, to write down to one's account; pp. ascriptus. = L. ad, to (which becomes a- before sc); and scribere, to write. See Scribe. Der. ascrib-able, ascrip-tion.

ASH, the name of a tree. (E.) ME. asch, esch, asch; Chaucer, C. T. 2924 (A 2922). 'E-sche, tree, fraxinus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 143. AS. æsc, Grein, i. 58; + Du. esch; Icel. askr; Dan. and Swed. ask; OHG. asc; MHG. asch; G. esche. Teut. type askiz*. Cf. Russ. iasene, Lith. švis, ash. Der. ash-en, adj.

ASHAMED, [pp. as adj., affected by shame. (F.) ME. aschamed, often written a-schamed. 'Aschamyd, or made aschamyd, verecundatus'; Prompt. Parv. p. 15. But we also find ME. aschamed, ashamed; Shoreham's Poems, p. 160; of-chamed, Owl and Nightingale, l. 932. Hence, in this instance, we may consider the prefix a- as equivalent to of, as it is in the case of the word adown, q. v. This would point back to the AS. form of seamod, which occurs in Ælfric, Lives of Saints, 2. 178. B. Or it may represent AS. asceamod, with prefix a-; whilst seamod is the pp. of seamian, to shame, from seamun, shame. See Shame.

ASHES, the dust or relics of what is burnt. (E.) The pl. of ash, which is little used. ME. asche, asne, aske, a diabolic word, the usual pl. being aschen, axen, ashen, but in Northern and Midland E. ashes.

anes. See ashen, in the (Southern) Ancrer Riwle, p. 214; and ashes in Hampole's Pricke of Conscience, 424. AS. asce, asne, aspe; pl. ascen, axen, Grein, i. 10, 11, 58; + Du. asch; Icel. asga; Swed. asga; Dan. aske; Goth. azgō, sing., azgōn, pl.; Luke, x. 13; OHG. asga, asga; MHG. asche, esche; G. asche. Teut. types askōn-, azgōn-, fem.; perhaps for as(h)ōn-, az(h)gōn-; and allied to Gk. ἀσκήσις, to dry up, parch, L. ār-ere, to be dry, Skt. āsa-s, ashes, dust (Macdonell). Der. ash-y; Ash-Wednesday, so called from the sprinkling of ashes on the heads of penitents, the L. name being dies cinerum.

ASHLAR, ASHLER, a facing made of squared stones. (F.—L.) 'In countries where stone is scarce, ashlar principally consists of thin slabs of stone used to face the brick and rubble walls of buildings'; Eng. Cycl. s. v. Ashler. Again, Ashlering is used in masonry to signify 'the act of bedding in mortar the ashlar above described'; id. It is also used in carpentry 'to signify the short upright pieces of wood placed in the roof of a house to cut off the acute angle between the joists of the floor and the rafters; almost all the garrets in London are built in this way'; id. B. The clue to understanding the word is to remember that the use of wood preceded that of stone. From OF. aisler, Livre des Rois, iii. 6 (see aisler in Hatzfeldt), a cross-piece used to bind together two pieces of timber; extended from OF. aiselle, aiselle (in Cotgrave), f., a little board, or shingle of wood; Cotgrave. = L. axilla, dimin. of axis, an axis, also a board, a plank. See Axis. ¶ The thin square slabs of stone were likened to the wooden shingles that preceded them. The Scot. spellings are esler, aisler. Jamieson quotes 'houses biggit a' with esler stane' = houses all built with squared stone, from Ramsay's Poems, i. 60. And again, he quotes from Abp. Hamilton's Catechism, fol. 5 a: 'A mason can nocht hew a eun aisler without direction of his revill'—cannot hew a straight ashlar without drawing a line with his rule to guide him.

ASHORE, on shore. (E.) Shak. has on shore, Temp. v. 219, where we might say ashore. Thus a- is short for an, ME. form of on. So also in a-bed, a-sleep, &c.

ASIDE, to one side, on one side. (E.) For on side. Wyclif has aydis-hond in Gal. ii. 2, but on sidis hond in Mark. iv. 34 (earlier version). 'The expounding to his disciples alle thingis on sidis hond, or by hem-self.' See above.

ASININE, see Ass.

ASK, to seek an answer, to request. (F.) ME. asken, aschen, azien, &c. Asken is in Ancrer Riwle, p. 338. Azien in Layamon, i. 307. AS. āscian, āskian, āscian, Grein, i. 14, 24, 40. The form āscian is not uncommon; whence mod. prov. F. ax, as a variant of ask. The AS. āscian reduced ME. asken, now lost; the surviving form ask was orig. Northern. + Du. eischen, to demand, require; Swed. äska, to ask, demand; Dan. eske, to demand; OHG. eiscōn, eisgōn; MHG. eischen; mod. G. heischen, to ask. Teut. types askōn*, askgōn*. All related to Skt. ichchhā, a wish, desire, chāna, a wish, ēsh, to search; Gk. lōrōn, wish, will; Lith. įsžukti, Russ. iskate, to seek. The root is seen in Skt. ish, to desire, wish; from √ITS, to seek, wish; Brugm. i. § 619, ii. § 676; Prellwitz. ¶ The Icel. askja does not mean 'to ask,' but 'to wish'; and is not related to ask, but to wish; see Wish.

ASKANCE, obliquely. (Ital.—L.?) Sir T. Wyatt, in his Satire Of the Meane and Sure Estate, l. 52, says: 'For, as she lookt a scanee, Under a stole she spied two stemyng eyes.' &c. We also find a scanee, explained by de travers, en lorgnant, i. e. obliquely; Palsgrave's French Dict. p. 831. Origin uncertain; but perhaps related to Ital. scansare, 'to go aslope or a-scone or askew, to go sidelin'; Florio. This verb is derived from Ital. s- (for L. ex), and (according to Diez) L. campāre, to turn round a place, bend round it; cf. Gk. skēpōre, to bend. Paretti's Ital. Dict. (1831) has di scancio, adv. slanting, askew; scancio, adj. oblique; but this appears in Torriano (1688) as schiancio, 'athwart'; apparently from a Teut. source allied to E. slant.

ASKEW, awry. (OLOW G.) 'But he on it lookt scornfully askew'; Spenser, F. Q. iii. 10. 29. As usual, the prefix a- stands for an, ME. form of on, and askew means 'on the skew.' Hexham explains MDu. schey by 'askew, awry.' See Skew.

ASLANT, on the slant, obliquely. (Scand.) A-slante occurs in the Prompt. Parv. p. 6, as equivalent to aside (aside) and to the L. oblique, obliquely. It stands for on slante, on the slant, a form which occurs in the Anturs of Arthur, st. xlviii. 6; cf. asid, afout, asleep. It appears as o slante in the Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 2254. Cf. Swed. dial. adj. slant, slippery (Rietz). See Slant.

ASLEEP, in a sleep. (E.) For 'on sleep'; a- being short for an, ME. form of on. 'David . . . fell on sleep'; Acts, xiii. 36. See Sleep.

ASLOPE, on a slope, slopingly. (E.) For 'on slope,' as in many other instances; see above. In the Komaunt of the Rose, l. 4464, a slope occurs in the sense of 'awry.' See Slope.

ASP, ASPIC, a venomous serpent. (F.—L.—Gk.) Shak. has aspick, Antony, v. 2. 296, 354; and Palsgrave has aspiche. Gower speaks of 'A serpent, which that aspidis is cleped'; C. A. i. 57; bk. i. 463. The form aspic is French; Cotgrave gives: 'Aspic, the serpent called an aspe. The form asp is also French; see Brachet, who notes, s.v. aspie, that there was an OF. form aspie, which existed as a doublet of the Provençal aspie; both of them being from L. acc. aspidem, from nom. aspis. The false form in Gower is due to his supposing that, as aspis is the nom. pl., it would follow that aspidis would be the nom. singular. — Cf. doris, gen. doridos, an asp. ¶ Hatfield gives the Prov. form as aspid, which might easily be misread aspie. The mod. Prov. form is aspid, from L. acc. aspidem.

ASPARAGUS, a garden vegetable. (L. — Gk. — Pers.?) Formerly written asperage; Holland's Pliny, bk. xix. c. 8; ii. 27 c. Also spargus or spargus; thus Cotgrave explains F. asperge by 'the herb spargus or spargus'. But these are mere corruptions of the L. word. — L. asparagus. — Gk. ἀσπάραγος, Attic ἀσπάραγος, asparagus. Curtius, ii. 110, compares it with the Zend sparegha, a prong, and the Lith. spurgas, a shoot, sprout, and thinks it was a word borrowed from the Persian. If so, the orig. sense was 'sprout'. Brugm. i. § 525.

ASPECT, view, appearance, look. (L. — In old authors, often aspect: 'In thin aspect ben alle liche'; Gower. C. A. i. 143; bk. i. 3009. Chaucer, Treatise on the Astrolabe, pt. ii. c. 31, uses aspects in the old astrological sense, of the 'aspects' of planets. [Probably from L. directly. Whilst known in English in the 14th century, the F. aspect does not seem to be older than the 15th; see Littre.] — L. aspectus, look. — L. aspectus, pp. of aspicere, to behold, see. — L. ad, to, at (> a before sp); and specere, to look, cognate with E. spy. See Spy.

ASPEN, AST, a kind of poplar, with tremulous leaves. (E.) The form aspen (more usual) is properly adjectival, like gold-en, wood-en, and the sb. is asp. The tree is still called the asp in Herefordshire, and in the S. and W. of England it is called aps. The phrase 'lyk an aspen leaf', in Chaucer, C. T. 7249 (11667), is correct, as aspen is there an adjective. ME. aspe, aspe, e.spe. Chaucer has aspe, C. T. 2923 (A 2921). 'Aspe tree, Espe tree.' Prompt. Parv. pp. 15, 143. As. aspe, also aps; Hosworth, † Du. esp, sb., aspen, adj.; Icel. asp; Dan. and Swed. asp; G. espe, espe (Ollig. espe); MllG. (espe). See Fick, iii. 29, who adds Lithuan. apna, Lithuanian apusis; Polish and Russ. osina. Origin unknown.

ASPERITY, roughness, harshness. (F. — L.) Asperite, Sir T. More, Works, p. 1218 c. Chaucer has asprenesse, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. pr. 4. 1. 106. The contracted OF. form asprete occurs in Ancien Riwle, p. 354, as an E. word. — OF. asperitell, later asperitell, roughness. — L. acc. asperitatem; nom. asperitas, roughness. — L. asper, rough. See Brugm. i. § 760.

ASPERSE, to cast calumny upon. (L.) Milton, P. L. i. ix. 296. Formed from L. asperus, the pp. of aspergere, to besprinkle; also, to bespatter. — L. ad, to (> a before sp); and spargere, to sprinkle, scatter. See Spars. Der. aspers-ion, Tempest, iv. 1. 18.

ASPHALT, ASPHALTUM, a bituminous substance. (Late L. — Gk.) 'Blazing cressets bid with naphtha and asphaltus'; Milton, P. L. i. 728, 729. Asphalt occurs in Mandeville's Travels, p. 100, and asphaltum in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1038. — Late L. asphaltum; Hlgden. Polychron. i. 116. — Gk. ἀσφαλτος, ἀσφαλτος, asphalt, bitumen. Of foreign origin. Der. asphaltic; Milton, P. L. i. 411.

ASPHODEL, a plant of the lily kind. (Gk.) In Milton, P. L. ix. 1040. — Gk. ἀσφodelos, a plant of the lily kind. In English, the word has been corrupted into daffodil; see Daffodil.

ASPHYXIA, suspended animation, suffocation. (Gk.) In Kersey, ed. 1708. — Gk. ἀσφύξια, a stopping of the pulse; cf. ἀσφύκτος, without pulsation. — Gk. ἀ, privative; and σφύξω, to throbb, pulsate; cf. σφυγμός, pulsation; G. pochen, to throbb. Der. asphyxi-ate.

ASPIRE, to pant after, to aim eagerly. (F. — L.) Generally followed by to or unto. 'If we shal . . . desyrouly a-pyre vnto that countreye of heauen with all our whole heartes'; Udal, i Peter, c. 3. vv. 21, 22. — F. aspirer, to breathe. . . also to desire, covet, aim at, aspire unto; Cot. — L. aspirare, to breathe towards, to seek to attain. — L. ad, to, towards (> a before sp); and spirare, to breathe, blow. Cf. F. spirit. Der. aspir-ing, aspir-ant, aspir-ate (vib.), to pronounce with a full breathing), aspirate, sb., aspiral-ion.

ASS, a well-known quadruped of the genus Equus; a dolt. (C. — I. — Semitic.) ME. asse; Ancien Riwle, p. 32. Assa, asra, asra, i. 10. The origin of the word is uncertain; and the extent to which one language has borrowed it from another is not clear; the Icel. ass, e.g., is merely the L. asinus contracted. The AS asinus was probably borrowed from Olfrish asav (Stokes, p. 24); and this from L. asinus. The Celtic languages have W. asyn, Corn. asen, Bret. asyn, Irish and Gael. asaf, Manx asaf (Williams), all probably from Latin. Cf. Du. asel, an ass, also, a dolt, blackhead. G. esel, Dan. esal, Goth. asius, Lith. asius, Polish osiel, Icel. a ni, Swed. asna, all from L. asinus or asellus. Cf. also Gk. ἄσιν. Most likely the word is of Semitic origin; cf. Arab. a'sim, Heb. asim, she-ass. Der. asin-ine, from Latin.

ASSAFOETIDA, see Asafoetida.

ASSAGAI, ASSEGAÏ. (Port. — Moorish.) Spelt azagay in Sir T. Herbert, Travels (1665), p. 23. A word (like fetis) introduced into Africa by the Portuguese. — Port. azagaia, a dart, javelin. For az-zaghiyah, from az-foral, the Arab. def. article, and Berber zaghiyah, the native name of a Berber weapon adopted by the Moors (whence F. zagaie); see Devic. See Lanogay.

ASSAIL, to leap or spring upon, to attack. (F. — L.) In early use. ME. assailen, assailen; Ancien Riwle, pp. 246, 252, 362. — OF. assailir, assailir (Chanson de Roland), to attack; cf. L. assilire. — OF. a-, prefix (L. ad, > a before s); and sailir, sailir, to leap, rush forward, from L. salire, to leap, rush forth. See Salient. Der. assail-able, assail-ant; also assault (OF. assault (Littre) from L. ad, to, and salvus, a leap; from salvus, pp. of salire, to leap); whence assault, verb.

ASSART, the offence of grubbing up trees, and so destroying the coverts of a forest. (F. — L.) See Blount, Nomo-Lexicon; Manwood, Forest Laws, &c. The word is due to AF. assartir (Britton), F. essartier, 'to make glades in a wood, to grub up, or clear a ground of bushes, shrubs, thorns, &c.'; Cot. — Late L. exsartire, to grub up, occurring an. 1233 (Ducange); also spelt exsartire. — L. ex, out, thoroughly; and Late L. sartire, to grub up, occurring an. 1202 (Ducange). Sartire (= sartire) is the frequentative of L. sarrere, sarrere, to weed, grub up weeds (whence also sar-culum, a hoe); see essart in Diez. Cf. Gk. saipen, to sweep, saipen, a besom. The L. pl. exsarta, weedled lands, occurs in Liber Custumarum, p. 660.

ASSASSIN, a secret murderer. (F. — Arabic.) Milton has assassin-like, P. L. xi. 219; and assassinated, Sams. Agon. 1109. — F. assassin, given by Cotgrave, who also gives assassiner, to slay, kill, and assassinat, sb., a murderer. ['Assassin, which is assasin in Joinville, in the 13th cent., and in late L. assassin, is the name of a well-known sect in Palestine which flourished in the 13th century, the Hashichin, drinkers of hashichin, an intoxicating drink, a decoction of hemp. The Scheik Hashichin, known by the name of the Old Man of the Mountain, roused his followers' spirits by help of this drink, and sent them to stab his enemies, esp. the leading Crusaders.' Brachet. See the whole account.] — Arab. hashish, an intoxicating preparation of Cannabis indica; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 199; Rich. Dict. p. 569; whence the adj. hashishi, hashishi; pl. hashishin, i.e. 'hashish-eaters'; so that assassin is a pl. form (Devic). Der. assassin-ate, assassin-ation, Mach. i. 7. 2.

ASSAULT; see under Assail.

ASSAY, sb., examination, test, trial; chiefly used of the trial of metal or of weights. (F. — L.) In the sense of 'attempt' it is generally spelt essay in mod. E.; see Acts, ix. 26, xvi. 7; Heb. xi. 29. Chaucer uses assay to denote the 'trial of an experiment'; C. T., G. 1249, 1338. Gower uses assay for 'an attempt', C. A. i. 68; bk. i. 791. [The form assay came in through the use of the OF. verb assayer as another spelling of essayer, to judge of a thing, derived from the sb. essai, a trial.] — OF. essai, a trial. — L. exagium, a weighing, a trial of exact weight. See Essay, a better spelling. Cf. amend = emend. Der. assay, verb; assay-er.

ASSEMBLE, to bring together, collect. (F. — L.) ME. assemblen, assemblen; Will. of Palerne, 1120, 1288. (Chaucer has 'to assemble money'; tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 8. 1. 5. The sb. assemblage, assembly, is in K. Alisaunder, ed. Weber, i. 3473. — OF. assembler, assembler, to assemble, approach, come together, often with the sense of 'to engage in battle', as frequently in Barbour's Bruce. — Late L. assimilare, to collect, bring together into one place; different from classical L. assimilare, to pretend, feign. — L. ad, to; and simul, together; so that Late L. assimilare is 'to bring together'; the L. ad becoming a- before s, as usual. [The class L. assimilare is from ad, to, and similis, like; and similis is from the same source as simul.] β. The L. simul and similis are from the same source as E. same, Gk. ἴσος, at the same time, Skt. sam, with, together with. See Similar. Der. assembl-y, assembl-age. From the same source are similar, simulate, assimilate.

Der. assent, sb., in early use; Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, 8391; assent-ation.

The E. word is formed from the L. pp. assertus. — L. asserere, to add to, take to one's self, claim, assert. — L. ad, to (> a before s); and serere, to join or bind together, connect, to range in a row. See Series. Der. assert-ion, -ive.

Hall has assessment, Hen. VIII, an. 24 (end). — OF. assesser (Godfrey). — Late L. assessare; cf. Law L. assessor, one whose duty it was to assess, i.e. to adjust and fix the amount of, the public taxes; 'qui tributa peræquat vel imponit'; Ducange. [The title of assessor was also given to a judge's assistant, in accordance with the etymological meaning, viz. (F. — L.) So called because sufficient to discharge that burden, which is cast upon the heir, in satisfying the testator's debts or legacies; Blount's Law Dict. In early use in a different form. 'And if it sufficth not for aseth;' P. Plowman, C. xx. 203, where another reading is assetz, B. xvii. 237; see my note on the passage, Notes to P. Plowman, p. 390. In the Romant of the Rose, 5600, the F. asseth is used to translate the F. asse. ß. The final -is is an orthographical device for representing the sound of OF. z, which was sounded as ts; cf. F. avez with L. habetis, shortened to abet's, and cf. F. asse with L. ad satis, shortened to a' sal's. — L. ad satis, up to what is enough: from ad, to, and satis, enough. See Satisfy, Satiate. ¶ It will be observed that assets was originally an adverb, then used adjectively, and lastly a substantive. It is, etymologically, in the singular, like alms, riches, eaves, &c.; but it was treated as a plural, and in modern use has a sing. asset.

ASSEVERATE, to declare seriously, affirm. (L.) Bp. Jewell has asseveration, Defence of the Apology, p. 61. The verb to assever was sometimes used. The verb asseverate is formed, like others in -ate, from the pp. of the L. verb. — L. asseveratus, pp. of asseverare, to speak in earnest. — L. ad, to (> as- before s); and severus, adj., earnest, serious. See Severe. Der. asseveration.

ASSIMILATE, to make similar to, to become similar to. (L.) Bacon has assimilating and assimilate; Nat. Hist. sect. 899. Sir T. Browne has assimilable and assimilation; Vulg. ASSIZE, (1) a session of a court of justice: (2) a fixed quantity or dimension. (F. — L.) In mod. E. mostly in the pl. assizes; the use in the second sense is almost obsolete, but in ME. we read of 'the assise of bread,' &c. It is still, however, preserved in the contracted form size, cf. sizings. See Size. ME. assise, in both senses. (1) 'For to loken domes and assise'; Rob. of Glouc. p. 53, l. 1230. (2) 'To don trewliche the assys to the sellere and to the byygere [buyer]'; Eng. Guilds, ed. T. Smith, p. 359. [We also find ME. verb assisen, to appoint; Gower, C. A. i. 181; bk. ii. 636. But the verb is derived from the sb.] — OF. assise, assize, sitting at table; also, a tax, impost; see Godefroy. Orig. the pp. fem. of the OF. verb. assessor, to sit at table, also to place, provide. — L. assidere, to sit at or near, to act as assessor to a judge (in Late L., to impose a tax); pp. assessus. — L. ad, to, near (> as- before s); and sedere, to sit, cognate with E. sit. See Sit. Der. assize, verb, to assess; assize-er. And see assess.

ASSOCIATE, a companion. (L.) 'Properly a past participle. Cf. 'yf he intend to be associate with me in blisse'; Udal, S. Mark, viii. 34; where we should now rather use associated. (F. — L.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 10. 52, ii. 5. 19, &c. Lowland Sc. assolzie, often misspelled assolzie (with z for y). ME. assolien, P. Plowman, B. prol. 70, 3. 40, &c.; and the pp. assolied in OEing. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 32, l. 4. We find Anglo-French assolre, pres. sing. subj. Liber Custumarum, 109; but the pp. is spelt assolz, Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 275. — OF. assolre, assolre, pres. s. subj. of absoudre (Godefroy); the same as absoudre, to absolve, Cot. — L. absolvere, to absolve. See Ab-solve, of which assol is merely a doublet. ¶ Especially common in the pres. subj. or imperative, as in the phrase 'God assol you,' and the like; hence the form.

ASSONANT, adj., applied to a (certain) resemblance of sounds. (Span. — L.) [Chiefly used in prosody, esp. in discussing Spanish poetry, in which asonance, or a correspondence of vowel-sounds only, is a marked feature. Thus the words beholding, rosebud, boldly, are said to be assonant, all having the accented vowel o in common in the penultimate syllable. So, in Spanish, are the words cruelles, tierras, fuerte, tenue.] — Span. asonante, 'an assonant, in Span. verse'; Pineda (1740); now spelt asonante. — L. assonantem, acc. of asonans, sounding like. Assonans is the pres. pt. of asonare, to respond to, — L. ad, to (> as- before s); and sonare, to sound, from sonus, sound. See Sound. Der. assonance.

ASSORT, to sort, dispose, arrange; to be companion with. (F. — L.) Not much used formerly. — F. assortir, 'to sort, assort, suit, match, equal'; Cot.; occurring as early as 1457 (Hatzfeld); cf. Late L. assortire. — F. prefix as-, imitated from L. as- (the form assumed by ad, to, before s); and sb. sorte, 'sort, manner, form, fashion, kind'; Cot. Thus assortir is to put together things of like kind. The sb. sorte (like Ital. sorta, a sort, kind, species) represents a Folk-L. sorta*, from L. sort-, stem of sortis, a lot. See Sort. Der. assortment (cf. F. assortiment).

ASSUAGE, to soften, allay, abate, subside. (F. — L.) ME. assuagen, assuagen, assuagen. 'His wrath fort assuage'; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 300. — OF. assuagier, assuagier, to soften, appease, assuage, console; a word of which the Provencal forms are assuaviar, assuaviar. Formed (as if from a L. verb assuadiare*, to sweeten) from the OF. prefix a- (L. ad), and L. suavis, sweet. See Suave. Der. assuage-ment.

ASSUASIVE, softening, soothing. (L.) Pope, in his Ode on St. Cecilia's day, l. 25, has the line: 'Music her soft, assuasive voice applies'; and the word has been used also by Johnson and Warton in a similar way; see Todd's Johnson. This queer word seems to have been meant to be connected with the verb to assuage, and to have been confused with persuasive at the same time. It is a mistaken formation, as if from a non-existent L. assuadere, from ad and suadere. See Persuasive.

ASSUME, to take to one's self, to appropriate; take for granted. (L.) The derived sb. assumption was in use in the 13th century as applied to the Assumption of the Virgin Mary. It is spelt assumcion in the Ancien Riwle, p. 412. The use of the verb is later. It is used by Hall, Hen. VII. an. 2. § 5; and in Hamlet, i. 2. 244. — L. assumere, to take to one's self, pp. assumptus. — L. ad, to (> as- before s); and sumere, to take. ß. The L. sumere is a compound verb, from some prefix connected with sub, and emere, to take, buy. See Brugm. i. § 240. The same root occurs in Redeem. Der. assum-ing, assumpt-ion, assumpt-ive, assumpt-ive-ly.

ASSURE, to make sure, insure, make confident. (F. — L.) Chaucer has 'assureth vs,' C. T. 7969 (E 93), and assurance, C. T. 4761 (H 431). — OF. assürer, assürer, to make secure, assure, warrant. — OF. prefix a- (L. ad, to); and adj. seür, secure, from L. seürus, secure, sure. See Sure. ASTER, the name of a genus of flowers. (L. — Gk.) In Kersey (1708). A botanical name, from L. aster, Gk. ástrōp, a star; from the star-like shape of the flowers. See Asterisk, Asterism, Asteroid.

ASTERISK, a little star used in printing, thus * (L. — Gk.) Spelt asterisque in Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. — L. asteriscus — Gk. ástērískos, a little star, also an asterisk*, used for distinguishing fine passages in MSS. (Liddell and Scott). Formed, with dimin. suffix -ískos, from ástrōp, base of ástrōp, a star, a word cognate with E. star. See Star. ¶ An asterisk is sometimes called a star.

ASTERISM, a constellation, a cluster of stars. (Gk.) In Drayton, Barons' Wars, b. vi. st. 31. A coined word, made by adding the Gk. suffix -ismus (E. -ism) to the stem ástrōp of the Gk. ástrōp, a star.

ASTERN, on the stern, behind. (E.) Sir F. Drake, in The World Encompassed, 1578, has: 'Having left this strait a stern.' It stands for on stern; see about, afloat, asleep, and other words in which the prefix a- stands for an, ME. form of on.

ASTEROID, a term applied to the minor planets situate between the orbits of Mars and Jupiter. (Gk.) Modern, and astronomical. Properly an adj., signifying 'star-like,' or 'star-shaped.' = Gk. ἀστροειδής, star-like. = Gk. ἀστροειδής, for ἀστροειδής, a star (cognate with E. Star, q.v.); and ειδής, form, figure. Der. asteroid-al.

ASTHMA, a difficulty in breathing. (Gk.) In Phillips (1658). = Gk. ἀσθμα, short-drawn breath, panting. = Gk. ἀσθμα, to breathe out, breathe through the mouth; allied to ἀσπυ, I blow. f-Goth. waian, to blow; Skt. vā, to blow. See Wind. Der. asthmaic, asthmaic-al, from Gk. adj. ἀσθματικός.

ASTIR, on the stir. (E.) For on stir. 'The host was all on stir' = the army was all astir; Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, vii. 344. 'Var on stir,' i.e. they were on the move, id. xix. 577. See Stir.

ASTONISH, to astound, amaze. (F.-L.-Gk.) The addition of the suffix -ish (as in extinguish) is due to analogy. Rich. quotes 'He astonish'd, O ye heavens,' from the Bible of 1539, Jerem. ii. 12; and 'astonishment hath taken me,' from the Geneva Bible, 1540-57; Jerem. viii. 21. Palsgrave has: 'I astonish, I amaze one, testonish.' The suffix -ish is here added to the ME. astoun, for astounen, as in: 'four strokes of thondre, that astouneth thene yencerey,' four strokes of thunder that astound the sinner; Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 130. The same ME. astounen was the origin of mod. F. astound. See further under Astound. Der. astounish-ment, astounish-ing.

ASTOUND, to astonish, amaze. (F.-L.-Gk.) Astound and astounish are both deducible from the ME. astounen, also found as astounen (whence a later form to astony). Astounish occurs in Shakespeare, and as early as in Palsgrave (1530). Astound is in Milton, Comus, 210, and astounded in the same, P. L. i. 266. It is remarkable that Milton also uses both astounish'd, P. L. i. 266, and astounded, P. L. i. 890. Cf. 'Astonyng or astonyngne, Stuprefactio,' also astounish, or brece werkys, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, 1174. 'Hitt astounish yoy my thought.' For dredde, And lyeve [unprinted seye] ther as hi were astound and as hi were deule; St. Margaret, 291, 292. 'Yif he be slowe and astound and lache, he liveth as an asse'; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. pr. 3. l. 82. β. The form astound probably arose from ME. astouned, pp. of astounen; for which see under Astonish. = OF. astouner (mod. F. astonner), to amaze. = Late L. type astounare*, to thunder out. = L. ex, out; and tonare, to thunder. Cf. L. attonare, to thunder at, astound; with prefix at, at; at, at. See Ex-, prefix, and Thunder. ¶ The word may have been influenced by the native verb stun. See Stun.

ASTRICTION, a binding or constriction. (L.) It occurs in Bacon, Nat. Hist. sect. 312; and astricings in the same, sect. 714. The verb to astRICT is in Hall, Hen. VI. an. 37. = I. acc. astRICTio, from nom. astRICTio, a drawing together, contracting; cf. astRICTus, pp. of astRINGERE, to bind or draw closely together. See Astringe.

ASTRIDE, on the stride. (E.) In Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. ii. l. 390. For on stride, like afloat for on foat.

ASTRINGE, to draw closely together. (L.) In Bacon (see Astringent), now almost obsolete; we should say 'acts as an astringent.' Astringent is in Holland's Pliny, bk. xxiv. c. 13. § 2. = L. astRINGERE, pp. astRICTus, to bind or draw closely together. = L. ad, to, closely (> a before st); and stringERE, to bind closely. See Stringent. Der. astRING-ent, astRING-enc-y; astRICTio, q.v.

ASTROLOGY, the knowledge of the stars. (F.-L.-Gk.) Orig. practical astronomy; later, astronomy, a pretended and exploded science. See Nomad. Der. astronom-ic-al, astronom-ic-al-ly, astronom-er.

ASTUTE, crafty, sagacious. (L.) In Biont's Gloss, ed. 1674. [Coigrave has MF. astut, 'astute, crafty.' = L. astūtus, crafty, cunning. = L. astus, craft, craftiness. Der. astute-ly, astute-ness.

ASYLUM, a place of refuge. (L.-Gk.) 'A sanctuary . . . asylum;' Holland's Livy, p. 7. = L. asylum, a sanctuary, place of refuge. = Gk. ἀσυλον, an asylum; neut. of adj. ἀσφαλτος, safe from violence, unharmed. = Gk. ἀ-, negative prefix; and σῶμα, a right of seizure, σῶμα, I despoil an enemy.

ASYMPTOTE, a line which, though continually approaching a curve, never meets it within a finite distance. (Gk.) Geometrical. In Phillips, ed. 1706. Barrow, in his Math. Lectures, lect. 9, has 'asymptotical lines.' = Gk. ἀσυμπτωτος, not falling together. = Gk. ἀ-, negative prefix; σύν, together (> σύν before π); and πτωτός, falling, apt to fall, a derivative of πτέω, to fall (perf. tense πέπτεκα). The Gk. πτέω (Dor. πρίω ε-πρίω), is from π + πέτ, to fly, to fall. Cf. L. im-pet-ns. Brugm. i. § 116. Der. asymptot-ic-al.

AT, prep. denoting nearness. (E.) In earliest use. AS. æt, Grein, i. 59. f-Icel. at; Dan. at; Swed. at; Goth. at; OHG. az (obsolete); L. ad, which enters largely into English. See Ad-.

ATHEISM, disbelief in the existence of God. (Gk.) Bacon has an essay 'Of Atheism.' Milton has atheist, P. L. i. 495; and atheous, P. R. i. 487. All are coined words from the Gk. ἄθεος, denying the gods, a word introduced into Latin by Cicero in the form atheus. = Gk. ἀ-, neg. prefix; and θεός, a god. See Theism. Der. atheous, atheistic, atheist, atheistic-ly, atheistic-al.

ATHIRST, very thirsty. (E.) Athirst, now an adj., is properly a pp.; and the prefix a- was originally af-. The ME. forms are athurst, ofthurst, corrupted sometimes to athurst, and sometimes to ofurst. See P. Plowman, B. x. 59; also King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1120, Ancien Kiwe, p. 240, where the form is ofthurst. This form is contracted from ofthurstid = made exceedingly thirsty. AS. ofthurstid, very thirsty, Grein, ii. 321; pp. of ofthurstan. = AS. of-, intensive prefix, signifying 'very'; and thurstan, to thirst; Grein, ii. 614. See Thirst.

ATLAS, a collection of maps. (Gk.) Named after Atlas, a Greek demi-god who was said to bear the world on his shoulders, and whose figure used to be given on the title-page of atlases. Cf. Shak. 3 Hen. VI. v. 1. 36. 'Atlas' (gen. Ἀτλαντος) probably means 'bearer' or 'sustainer,' from the τ of TEL, to bear, sustain, which appears in Gk. τῆλαι, to endure, L. tollere, to lift, and tolerare, to endure; see Prellwitz. See Tolerate. Der. Atlante, in arch., figures of men used instead of columns or pilasters (Phillips, ed. 1706), from the Gk. form for the pl. of Atlas; also Atlant-ic, the name of the ocean (Milton, Comus, 97), with reference to Mount Atlas, in the N.W. of Africa.

ATOM, a very small particle. (F.-L.-Gk.) Cudworth, in his Intellectual System, p. 26, speaks of atoms, atomists, and 'atomical physiology.' Milton has atom, P. L. viii. 18. = F. atome, a mote in the sun; Cotgrave. = L. atomum, acc. of atomus, an atom. = Gk. ἄτομος, sb. fem., an indivisible particle; ἀτομος, adj., indivisible. = Gk. ἀ-, neg. prefix; and τομή, 2nd grade of τέμνειν, to cut, divide. See Tome. Der. atom-ic, atom-ic-al, atom-id.

ATOMY (1), an atom. (L.-Gk.) Shak. has: 'it is as easy to count atomies;' As You Like It, iii. 2. 245. From L. atomi, pl. of atomus, an atom; by adding the E. pl. suffix -ies. See Atom.

ATOMY (2), a skeleton. (F.-L.-Gk.) Short for anatomy, which was resolved into an atomy; 2 Hen. IV, v. 4. 33. And see E. D. D. See Anatomy.

ATONE, to set at one; to reconcile. (E.) Made up of the two words at and one; so that atone means 'to set at one.' a. The interesting point is that an old pronunciation of one is here preserved; and there are at least two other similar instances, viz. in alone (ME. aloon), and on-ly (ME. on-ly). β. The use of atone arose from the frequent use of ME. at oon (also written at on) in the phrases 'be at oon' = to agree, and 'set at oon,' i.e. to set at one, to make to agree, to reconcile. Examples are: 'Ihii made certein couenaunt that hii were al at on' = were all agreed; Rob. of Glouc. p. 113 (l. 2451). 'Sone they were at one, with wille at on assent' = they were soon agreed, with will in one concord; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of P. Langtoft, p. 220. 'If gentil men, or others of hir contree Were wrothe, she wolde bringen hem atoon'; Chaucer, C. T., E 437, where the two words are run into one in the Ellesmere MS., as printed. They are similarly run together in a much earlier passage: 'Aton he was wip be king'; King Horn, ed. Lamby, 925. γ. Particularly note the following from Tyndal: 'Where thou seest bate or strife between person and person, . . . leave nothing vnsoight, to set them at one'; Works, p. 193, col. 2. 'One God, one Mediator, that is to say, advocate, intercessor, or an atone-maker, between God and man'; Works, p. 158. 'One mediator Christ, . . . and by that word vnderstand an atone-maker, a peacemaker'; id. p. 431 (Remarks on the Testament of M. W. Tracie). 'Hauyng more regarde to their olde variance then their newe atonement'; Sir T. More, Works, p. 41 c (written in 1513, pr. in 1557). See also the same, p. 40 f (qu. in Richardson). 'And like as he made the Jewes and the Gentiles at one betweene themselves, euen so he made them both at one with God, that there should be nothing to breake the atonement, but that the thynges in heauen and the thynges in earth, should be ioined together as it wer into one body'; Udal, Epb. ii. 16. 'Atoneyme, a louing againe after a breach or falling out'; Haret, Alvarie, s.v. 'So beene they both at one'; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 1. 29. See also Shak. Rich. II, i. 1. 203; Oth. iv. 1. 244; Ant. ii. 1. 102; Cymb. i. 4. 42; Timon, v. 4. 58; As You Like It, v. 4. 116; Cor. iv. 6. 72; also atonement, Merry Wives, i. 1. 33; 2 Hen. IV, iv. 1. 221; Rich. III, i. 3. 36. Also Ben Jonson, Epicene, Act iv. sc. 2 (Truewit to La Foole); Massinger, Duke of Milan, Act iv. sc. 3 (Pescara); Milton, P. L. iii. 234. Bp. Hall says: 'Ye . . . set such discord 'twixt agreeing parts Which never can be set at one-ment more'; Sat. iii. 7. And Dryden: 'If not atton'd, yet seemingly at peace'; Aurungzebe, Act iii. The word atonement came into use soon after A.D. 1500. δ. The simple verb atone, to unite, pp. atoned, occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 7550 (B 1968). N.B. This E. idiom was perhaps translated from AF. 'Il ne peussent estre a un', 'they could not be at one, could not agree; Le Livre de Reis de Angleterre (Rolls Series), p. 220. ¶ It is to be added that the phrase at once was for a long period written as one word, spelt atones, or quite as often attons, attonys. See examples in Gloss. to Specimens of English from 1394 to 1579, ed. Skeat. By introducing the sound of w into once (uance), we have again made at once into two words. Der. atone-ment.

ATROCITY, extreme cruelty. (F.—L.) The adj. atrocious, an ill-formed word, apparently founded on the F. adj. atroce, heinous, is not known before 1669. It occurs in Thomson's Liberty, ii. 305. But atrocious is much older, and occurs, spelt atrocity, in Sir T. More's Works, p. 1294 f (N.E.D.). — F. atrocity, 'atrocious, great cruelty'; Cotgrave. — L. acc. atrocitatem, from nom. atrocitās, cruelty. — L. atrocis, from atrox, cruel; more lit. horrible, frightful. Root unknown; cf. ater, black, dark, malicious. From the same source, atrocious, atrociously, atrociousness.

ATROPHY, a wasting away of the body. (F.—L.—Gk.) Medical. It means lit. 'want of nourishment.' Milton has: 'pining atrophy'; P. L. xi. 486. Holland writes of 'no benefit or nutriment of meat, which they call in Greek atrophia'; Pliny, bk. xxii. c. 25; ii. 143 c. — F. atrophy; Cot.—L. atrophia. — Gk. ἀτροφία, want of food, hunger, atrophy. — Gk. ἀ-, neg. prefix; and τροφή, to nourish (perf. τ. ῥέ-τροφας); allied to Gk. τροφία, a nursing.

ATTACH, to take and hold fast; to apprehend. (F.—Teut.) ME. attachen, to take prisoner, arrest, much in use as a law term. 'Attache the tyrant'; apprehend those cruel men; P. Plowman, B. ii. 199. — OF. attacher, F. attacher, to attach, fasten; cf. F. détacher, to detach, unfasten, which is obviously from the same root. β. As Diez remarks, the root is to be found in the word which appears in English as tack, with the signification of 'peg' or 'small nail'; so that to attach is to fasten with a tack or nail, whilst to detach is to unfasten what has been but loosely held together by such a nail. The prefix is the OF. prep. a, to — L. ad; and -tacher is probably from the Low G.

takk, or EFries. takke; see Tack. Der. attach-able, attach-ment, attach-er (F. pp.). Doublet, attach.

ATTACK, to assault. (F.—Ital.—Teut.) Rich. remarks that it is not an old word in the language. The verb occurs in Milton, Sams. Agonistes, 1113. — F. attaquer, explained by Cotgrave as 'to assault, or set on'; he does not use the work attack. Attaquer was borrowed from Ital. attaccare, 'to fasten, to joyne; attaccar battaglia, to joyne battell'; Florio. — L. ad, to (> at- before t); and Low G. takk, a time, pointed thing; see Tack and Attach. Hence attack and attach are doublets. Der. attack, sb.

ATTAIN, to reach to, obtain. (F.—L.) ME. attainen, attainen; 'they wenen to attaine to thilke good that they desiren'; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. pr. 2. l. 192. — OF. ateign-, pres. stem of ateindre, atindre, to reach to, attain; also to punish, accuse, convict (atindre in Godefroy). — Folk-L. attangere*; for L. attingere, to touch upon, to attain. — L. ad, to (> at- before t); and tangere, to touch. See Tangent. Der. attain-able, attain-able-ness, attain-ment; also attainder, from a substantival use of OF. infin. ateindre (above), in the sense 'to convict.' Also attaint (below).

ATTAINT, to convict. (F.—L.) The similarity in sound between attaint and taint has led, probably, to some false law; see the remarks about it in Blount's Law Dictionary. But etymologically, and without regard to imported senses, attaint is to convict, and attainder is conviction. As a fact, attaint is a verb that has been made out of a past participle, viz. the pp. of the verb to attain, used in a technical sense in law. The Prompt. Parv. has: 'Atteynyn, conuincio'; p. 16. Palsgrave even has 'I atteynt, I hyt or touche a thyng,' i.e. attain it. In the 14th century, we find ME. atteynt, attaint, ateynt in the sense of 'convicted,' and the verb attein in the sense of 'convict.' 'And justise of the lond of falsnes was atteynt' = and the justice administered in the land was convicted of falseness; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 246. 'To reprove tham at the last day, And to atteyntham,' i.e. to convict them; Hampole, Prick of Conscience, 5331. Cf. P. Plowman, C. xxiii. 162. — OF. ateint, ataint, pp. of ateindre, to attain (above). ¶ The sense was affected by confusion with taint (N.E.D.).

ATTAR OF ROSES, perfumed oil of roses. (Arabic.) Often called, less correctly, 'atto of roses.' Byron has 'atar-gul, attar of roses'; note to Byrde of Abydos, l. 10. From Arab. ifr, perfume; from atira, he smelt sweetly. See Richardson's Arab. Dict. p. 1014; and otto in Yule.

ATTEMPT, to temper, qualify. (F.—L.) Now little used. ME. attemper, attemper. 'Atempreth the lusty hours of the firste somer sesoun'; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. mct. 2. — OF. attemper (F. attemper), to modify. — OF. a, to (L. ad); and temper, to temper, from L. temperare, to moderate, control. See Temper.

ATTEMPT, to try, endeavour. (F.—L.) 'For to attempt his fansie by request'; Surrey, tr. of Æneid, bk. iv. l. 142. [Not in Gower, C. A. i. 287.] — OF. attemper, to undertake; Roquefort. The simple verb temper was also spelt tenter, tanter; Burguy. Hence attemper is a Latinised form of an older attemper, which appears as attemper in the Supp. to Godefroy. — L. attemperare, often attempiare, to attempt. — L. ad (becoming at- before t); and temperare, to try, endeavour; so that 'attempt' is to 'try at.' See Tempt. Der. attempt, sb.

ATTEND, to wait upon, to heed. (F.—L.) 'The Carthage lords did on the queene attend'; Surrey, Virgil, Æn. b. iv. l. 171. The subs. attencioun and attendance occur in Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 1. l. 2; C. T. 6515 (D 933). — OF. atendre, to wait. — L. attendere, pp. attentus, to stretch towards, think upon, give heed to. — L. at-, for ad, to; and tendere, to stretch. See Tend (1). Der. attendance, attend-ant; and, from L. pp. attentus, we have attent, adj. (2 Chron. vi. 40, vii. 15); cf. attent-ive, attent-ive, attent-ive-ly, attent-ive-ness.

ATTENUATE, to make thin. (L.) It occurs in Elyot, Castel of Health, bk. ii. c. 7 § 6; Bacon, Nat. Hist. sect. 299. Formed, like other words in -ate, from a past participle. — L. attenuatus, thin, pp. of attenuare, to make thin. — L. ad (> at- before t); and tenuare, to make thin, from tennis, thin. See Thin. Der. attenual-ion.

ATTEST, to bear witness to. (L.) In Shak. Hen. V, iii. l. 22. — L. attestāri, to bear witness to; pp. attestātus. — L. ad (> at- before t); and testāri, to be witness, from testis, a witness. See Testify. Der. attest-at-ion.

ATTIC, a low built top story of a house, or a room in the same. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'A term in architecture, comprehending the whole of a plain or decorated parapet wall, terminating the upper part of the façade of an edifice'; Eng. Cyclopædia, s.v. Attick, in arch., a kind of oriel, after the manner of the city of Athens; in our buildings, a small order placed upon another that is much greater; Kersey's Dict., ed. 1708. — F. attique, upper part of a building; so called as belonging to the Attic order of architecture. — L. Atticus. — Gk. Ἀττικός, Attic, Athenian.

Nat. Hist. Birds, pl. 77, p. 72. Jerdon (Birds of India, ii. 361) says that Blyth has shown that this word took its origin from the city of Ahmedabad, whence the bird used to be imported into Europe in numbers. — A. Newton, in N. and Q. 6 S. ii. 108. Ahmedabad is near the Gulf of Cambay, on the W. coast of Hindostan; and its name is derived from Ahmed, a proper name, and the Pers. ābād, city. Ahmed is from Arab. ahmad, very laudable, Rich. Dict. p. 33; from the root hamada, he praised; see MOHAMMEDAN. For Pers. ābād, see IFORN, § 4.

AVAIL, to be of value or use. (F. — L.) ME. availen (u for v). 'Avaylun or prolytyn.' Prompt. Parv. p. 17. Spelt avail, Cursor Mundi, l. 90. Hampole has availes, Pricke of Conscience, l. 3587. The compound verb was not used in the French of the continent; it was made by prefixing the OF. a (= L. ad, to) to the OF. vail, i. p. pr. s. of valoir, to be of use, from L. valere, to be strong. Der. available, avail-able. The simple form appears in valiant, q. v.

AVALANCHE, a fall of snow. (F. — L.) Modern. In Coleridge's Hymn in the Vale of Chamouni, and in Byron's Manfred, Act i. sc. 2, l. 77. = F. avalanche, a descent of snow into the valley; given by Cotgrave in the form avallanche, 'a great falling or sinking down, as of earth, &c.' = F. avaler, which in mod. F. means 'to swallow,' but Cotgrave also gives, s. v. avaller, the senses 'to let, put, cast, lay, fell down, to let fall down.' = F. aval, downward; common in OF. as opposed to amont, upward (L. ad montem, towards the hill). = OF. a val, from L. ad vallem, towards the valley; hence, downward. See VALLEY.

AVARICE, greediness after wealth. (F. — L.) ME. avarice (u as v); used by Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 5, l. 11; Wyclif, i Kings, viii. 3. = OF. avarice, avarice. = L. avaritia, avarice. = L. avarus, greedy; cf. L. avidus, greedy. = L. avertere, to wish, desire. AVAST, hold fast, stop. (Dutch or Span.) 'Avast, stop, hold, or stay'; Kersey (1708). It occurs in Poor Jack, a sea-song by C. Dibdin, died A.D. 1814. 1. Perhaps from Du. hou vast, hold fast. Hou, short for houd, is the imp. s. of houden, cognate with E. hold. Vast is cognate with E. fast. 2. Otherwise it may be from Span. abasto, 'as much as need, enough, sufficiently'; Minshew; the Span. b being taken as an E. v. Pineda, in his Eng.-Span. vocabulary, has: 'Avast, basta.' Cf. Port. abasta, it is enough; mod. Prov. abasto (sea-term), it is enough; Ital. basta, it is enough.

AVE, hail! (L.) As mostly used, it is short for Avē, Maria, i.e. hail, Mary! alluding to St. Luke, i. 28, where the Vulgate version has 'Ave gratia plena.' Spenser Englishes the phrase by Ave-Mary, F. Q. i. 1. 35. Cf. Chaucer, ABC, 104. = L. ave! hail! imp. sing. of audire, to fare well.

AVENUE, an approach, esp. an alley shaded by trees forming the approach to a house. (F.-L.) Spelt avenue in Holland's Livy, p. 413, but avenue at p. 657 (R.). = F. avenue, also spelt avenue by Cotgrave, and explained by 'an access, passage, or entry unto a place.' It is the fem. pp. of the verb avoir or avénir (Cotgrave), used in the Latin sense of 'to come to.' = L. advenire, to come to. = L. ad; and venire, to come, cognate with E. come, q. v.

AVÉR, to affirm to be true. (F.-L.) In Shak. Cymb. v. 5. 203. = F. aver, 'to aver, avouch, verify, witness'; Cotgrave. = Late L. avēre, avēre, to prove a thing to be true; Duacene. A coined word from L. ad, prep. to, and verum, truth, a true thing, neut. of verus, true. See VERITY. Der. averment; in Blackstone, Comment. b. iv. c. 26.

AVERAGE, a medial or equalised estimate of a series or number of things; an arithmetical mean. (F.) See the N.E.D. for the numerous senses at different dates. Thus it meant (1) a duty, tax, impost; (2) an extra charge on goods above the freight; (3) expense or loss to owners, due to damage at sea; (4) the mode of incidence of such loss, estimated proportionally; (5) the distribution of the aggregate inequalities of a number of things, with a view to equalise them, a medial estimate; (6) the arithmetical mean thus obtained.

1. It first occurs, with the sense of duty, tax, or custom, in Arnold's Chron. (1502), p. 180: 'And over that alle manere of grauntis... of your custumes or subsidies or average.' And, in sense 2, in the same, p. 112: 'And over that to pai or doo pay all maner averages,' with a somewhat different spelling. γ. The spelling average seems to be English only, and substituted for avaries, a pl. formed from F. avarie (below); and perhaps Arnold's spelling avaries points back to the same form. = F. avarie, damage, injury to goods, extraordinary expenses for goods (see Hatfield); Cot. has avaris (for avaris, pl.?). 'decay of wares or merchandise';... the charges of the carriage thereof. Cognate forms are Span. avaría, haberia, 'the custom paid for goods that are exported' (Pineda); Port. avaría; Ital. avaría, 'an account made by the crew of a ship of the loss they have had at sea' (Baretti); Late L. avaría, averia. Orig. a Mediterranean maritime term, signifying 'duty charged on goods' (G. P. Marsh, in N.E.D.). Origin unknown; but perhaps from MSp. averas, haveras, 'goods, wealth, substance' (Minshew), haberes, 'substance, wealth, or riches' (Pineda); which is from the inf. aver, to have, spelt haber (Pineda), used substantively, like F. avoir, and Ital. havere, 'to have... also wealth, riches, goods' (Florio). ¶ Not from Arab. avār, damage, which is merely borrowed from Ital. avaría, in a late sense. N.B. The form average may very well have been due to confusion with another E. word average, now usually represented by arriage in the phrase 'arriage and carriage,' the sense of which was some kind of service due by tenants to the feudal superior, and derived from OF. avrage, an ill-coined term due, apparently, to OF. ovre, work (see L. opera), and confused with aver, which meant property or cattle. See the whole account in N.E.D., where this difficult word is fully discussed.

AVERT, to turn aside. (L.) 'I averte, I tourne away a thyng';

Palsgrave, French Dict. (1530). = L. avertere, to turn away. = L. ā, short form of ab, abs, away, from; and vertere, to turn. See VERSE. Der. (From L. avertus, pp. of avertere) averte, Milton, P. L. ii. 763, averte-by, averte-ness, avert-ion. ¶ The F. avertir = L. advertire, and is therefore a different word.

AVIARY, a place for keeping birds. (L.) 'For aviaries, I like them not'; Bacon, Essay 46; Of Gardens. = L. aviarium, a place for birds; neut. of adj. aviarius, belonging to birds. = L. avis, stem of avis, a bird. Cf. Gk. avérōs, avérōs (for 'alferōs'), an eagle; Brugm. i. § 205 (3).

AVIDITY, greediness, eagerness. (F.-L.) In Phillips (1658). The pl. avidities is in Boyle's Works, ii. 317. = F. avidité, 'greediness, covetousness, extreme lust, ardent affection, eager desire'; Cotgrave (who has not 'avidity' as an English word). = L. acc. aviditatem, from nom. aviditas, eagerness. = L. avidus, greedily, desirous. = L. avire, to crave. See AVARICE.

AVOCATION, pursuit, employment, business. (L.) 'Avocation, a calling away'; Phillips (1658). Used by Dryden (Todd's Johnson); also in Boyle, Occas. Reflections, s. 2. med. 6. Not found in French, but formed with the common F. suffix -ion (L. acc. -tionem), from L. avocatio, a calling away of the attention, a diverting of the thoughts; hence, a diversion, amusement. It is in this sense that Boyle uses it. He says: 'In the time of health, visits, businesses, cards, and I know not how many other avocations, which they justly stile diversions, do succeed one another so thick, that in the day there is no time left to the distracted person to converse with his own thoughts.' Dryden (in Todd's Johnson) speaks of the 'avocations of business.' = L. avocare, to call away; pp. avocatus. = L. āv, for ab, away; and vocare, to call. See VOCAL. ¶ The word has gradually changed its meaning from 'diversions' to 'necessary employments,' by confusion with OF. avocation, avocation, which sometimes meant a profession (Godefroy), and is derived from L. avocatio, with prefix ad.

AVOCET, AVOSET, a wading bird. (F.-Ital.) In a tr. of Buffon, 1792; ii. 120. = F. avocette. = Ital. avocetta, 'a fowle like a stork'; Florio. Prof. Newton (Dict. of Birds) says it is Ferrarese, and by some is considered to be a derivative of L. avis, a bird (unlikely). The Ital. word is also spelt avocetta (Florio).

AVOID, to get out of the way, to shun. (F.-L.) ME. avoiden (n for v), avoiden. 'Avoyden, evacuo, devancio; avoydis, evacuated'; Prompt. Parv. p. 19. In ME. it is generally transitive, meaning (1) to empty, (2) to remove, (3) to go away from; but also intransitive, meaning (1) to go away, (2) to flee, escape. Of these, the true original sense is 'to empty,' as in 'avoid' (thou thine trencher = empty your plate, Babes Book, p. 23. In Eccles. xiii. 6 (xiii. 5 in A.V.) the Vulgate version has: 'Si habes, contineat tecum, et evacuabit te'; where the A. V. has: 'If thou have anything, he will live with thee, yea, he will make thee bare'; but Wyclif has: 'He shal live with thee, and avoid thee out,' equivalent to the modern slang expression 'he will clean you out.' ¶ It is obvious that the word is closely connected with the adj. void, empty, as stated in F. Muller. Often used like the F. éviter, with which it cannot, etymologically, have any connexion; though it gradually acquired a similar sense. Thus Cotgrave gives: 'Eviter, to avoid, eschew, shun, shrink from.' And Shak., though he has 'avoid the house' (Cor. iv. 5. 25), and 'how may I avoid [get rid of] the wife I chose' (Troil. ii. 205), often uses it in the sense of 'shun' (Merry Wives, ii. 2. 280, &c.). In Palsgrave's French Dict., we have: 'Never have to do with him, if thou mayest avoid hym (eschuer or éviter).'

γ. Chaucer uses only the simple form voiden, and in senses that are all connected with the adj. void. 8. The prefix av- (in AF. avoiden, Godefroy) is a corruption of OF. es- (L. ex, out), as in abash, q. v.; this prefix was extremely common in OF., and Godefroy gives the forms evuidier, evuidier, evuidier, to empty out; compounded of es-, prefix, and uidier, voidier, to empty, make void, from OF. uit, uide (F. vide), empty. See VOID. Der. avoid-able, avoid-ance. ¶ In a word, avoid = evoid; just as amend = enend.

AVOIDUPOIS, a particular way of estimating weights, viz. by a pound of 16 oz. (F.-L.) Shak. uses avoidupois (spelt kaberdé-pois in old edd.) in 2 Hen. IV. ii. 4. 277 simply with the sense of 'weight.' His use of de (for du) is correct; we find avoir de pois, lit. 'goods of weight,' in the Statutes of the Realm, i. 159 (1311); avoir de poyz in the same, 156 (1309); avoir de paise in Early E. Poems, ed. Furnivall, p. 154, st. 11 (ab. 1308). From AF. avoir de pois, 'goods of weight,' i.e. heavy articles. = L. habere, to have, whence F. avoir, to have, also as sb., wealth, goods; de, of; and L. pensum, that which is weighed out, from pensum, pp. of pendere, to weigh. The spelling pois is correct; the word is misspelt poide in mod. F. from a false notion of a connexion with L. pondus, weight; see POISE.

AVOUCH, to declare, confess. (F.-L.) ME. avouchen, Gower, C. A. i. 205, in Pauli's edition; but the right reading is vouchen; bk. iii. 486. Sometimes in the sense 'to make good, 'maintain,' or 'answer for it,' as in Macb. iii. 1. 120. Grafton has avouchment in the sense of 'maintenance,' K. John, an. 14. Cf. ME. vouchen, used by Chaucer in the phrase vouchen sauf, to vouchsafe, C. T. 11355, 11885 (F 1043, 1581). — OF. vouchier, to call upon (Godefroy); a more 'learned' form of the popular OF. avouer, avouer, representing L. advocāre, to call to, or summon (a witness). — L. ad, to; and vocāre, to call. See AVOW (1) and Vouchsafe. Doublets, advocate, avow (1).

AVOW (1), to acknowledge, affirm, vouch for, declare oneself. (F. — L.) ME. avouen, avouen, Gower, iii. 191; bk. vii. 3163⁷; Chaucer, C. T., G 642. 'I avoue, I warrant or make good.' Palsgrave. Shak. Troil. i. 3. 271. — OF. avouer, avouer. — L. advocāre, to call upon; Late L. to call on as patron or client, to acknowledge, recognise. — L. ad, to; vocāre, to call. See AVOUCH, ADVOCATE. Der. avow-ry.

AVOW (2), to bind with a vow, to vow. (F. — L.) Obsolete; but easily confused with avow (1); the sb. avow, vow, occurs in 'I make mine avow,' Sir W. Scott, Fair Maid of Perth, iii. 45 (N. E. D.); ch. 25 (near the end). 'I avoue, I make God a vow.' Palsgrave. ME. avouen, Chaucer, Anelida, 355. — OF. avouer. — L. ad (for L. ad, to); and vouer, from Late L. voūare, to vow, from L. vōtum, a vow. See VOW.

AVULSION, a forcible tearing away. (L.) In Phillips (1658). — L. avulsio-em, acc. of avulsio, a tearing away; cf. L. avulsus, pp. of avellere, to pluck away. — L. ā, from; and vellere, to pluck.

AWAIT, to wait for. (F. — OHG.) In early use. ME. awaiten, to wait for; also, to lie in wait for. 'Me awaiteth on' = people lie in wait for you; Ancien Riwle, p. 174. — OF. awaitier, an older and Northern form of OF. agaitier, to lie in wait for, watch for (Godefroy). — OF. prefix a- (L. ad); and OF. vaitier, gaitier (mod. F. guetter) to watch, from OHG. wahiten, to watch (mod. G. wachten). This is a denominative verb from the sb. wacht, a watch, whence OF. waite, a sentinel, preserved in the E. wait, as used in the phrase 'the Christmas waits.' See WAIT.

AWAKE, to rouse from sleep; to cease sleeping. (E.) In ME. we find both awaken, strong verb, answering to mod. E. awake, strong verb; and awakenen, a weak verb, which accounts for the pt. t. and pp. awaked as used by Shakespeare (Timon, ii. 2. 21) and others. 'Tha: awoc Brutus' = then Brutus awoke, Layamon, l. 53. Two AS. verbs are here confused; awacan, weak verb, and onwacian, with a weak pres. pt., but strong pt. t. onwac, pp. onwacen. The prefix is AS. ā or on-. See WAKE. Cf. G. erwachen, OHG. irwachen, weak verb, to awake. Der. awake, adj., as used in Milton, 'ere well awake,' P. L. i. 3. 14. This was originally a past participle, viz. the ME. awake, short for awaken, AS. onwacen, pp. of onwacian (above). And see below.

AWAKEN, to awake. (E.) Strictly speaking, this is an intransitive verb only, and never used transitively till after 1500; it is thus distinguished from awake, which was used in both senses; and it is slightly different in origin. ME. awakenen, awakenen. 'I awakened therewith.' P. Plowman, B. xix. 478. — AS. awacan, awacian, to awake; Grein, i. 46, 47; also onwacian, id. ii. 353; easily confused with onwacian, which was a strong verb. In the suffix, the former n is formative, and conspicuous in both Macro-Gothic and Scandinavian, in which languages it is used to form verbs that are intransitive or reflexive. Thus the verb awaken is essentially intransitive, and should be so used; but the ME. suffix -n-en, -ne was easily confused with the late transitive suffix -en in such words as strengthen.

AWARD, to adjudge, determine, grant, assign. (F. — Oldow G.) 'This I awarde' = thus I decide, Chaucer, C. T. 12136 (C 202). — AF. awarder, OF. eswarder, esgarder, to examine, to adjudge after examination; see esgarder in Godefroy. — OF. prefix es-, from L. ex, out; and OF. warder, old spelling of garder, to observe, regard, guard. [The word is thus a hybrid; for while the prefix is Latin, the rest is Oldow G.] From Oldow G. wardin* (Osax. warden, G. warten), to regard, look at, guard. See WARD. Der. award, sb., Chaucer, C. T., I 483.

AWARE, adj., informed of, in a watchful state. (E.) In this particular word, the prefix a- has an unusual origin; it is a corruption of ME. prefix i-, or y-, which again is a reduction of AS. ge-. The spelling aware occurs in Early E. Poems, ed. Furnivall, p. 16, l. 9, but is very rare, the usual spelling being iwar, ywar, or iwar; see Layamon, ll. 7261, 7581; Ancien Riwle, p. 104, Owl and Nightingale, l. 147; P. Plowman, B. l. 42; Rob. of Glouc. p. 168, l. 3503; Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 100. AS. gewart, aware; AS. Chron. 914 (MS. D.), 1095 (Laud MS.); in which the addition of AS. ge- as a prefix makes no appreciable difference. Gewart is thus equivalent to war, aware, cautious, Grein, i. 649; where we find 'wes thu wart' = be thou aware. Cf. also G. gewart werden, to be aware; where gewart is from OHG. giwar, gawar, from the prefix gi- (AS. ge-) and war, cognate with AS. wer. See WARY.

AWAY, out of the way, absent. (E.) The proper sense is 'on the way,' though now often used as if it meant 'off' (or out of) the way. 'To go away' meant 'to go on one's way.' ME. awei, owei, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 21; spelt oway in Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, 2269. — AS. onweg, away, Grein, ii. 354; from AS.

on, on, and weg, way. See WAY. It was sometimes spelt aweg, Grein, i. 47; but the prefix a- is probably the same as on.

AWE, fear. (Scand.) ME. aje, ajhe, awe, properly a disyllabic word; Ormulum, 7185. [Another form is ME. aje, ajhe, eye, also disyllabic, Ormulum, 4481; from AS. ege. We also meet with AS. ūga, fear, dread. Both words occur in the same passage: 'And beo eower ege and ūga ofer ealle nitenu' — and let the fear of you and the dread of you be over all animals, Gen. ix. 2. Both can be referred to a common base ag-, to dread.] — Icel. agi, awe, terror; Dan. ave, check, control, restraint; ave, to control. — OHG. egiso, terror; Goth. agis, fear, anguish. Further related to Irish agal, fear, terror; Gk. ayos, anguish, affliction. Brugm. i. § 124 (3). Der. aw-ful, aw-ful-ly, aw-ful-ness. ¶ The final e in awe, now quite unnecessary, records the fact that the word was once disyllabic.

AWKWARD, clumsy. (Hybrid; Scand. and E.) a. The modern sense of 'clumsy' is seldom found in old authors; though it means this or something very near it in 'ridiculous and awkward action'; Shak. Troil. i. 3. 149. We also find: 'tis no sinister nor no awkward claim, II. vi. ii. 4. 85; and again, 'by awkward wind,' i.e. by an adverse wind, 2 Hen. VI. iii. 2. 83; and again, 'awkward casualties,' i.e. adverse chances, Per. v. 1. 94. β. In tracing the word backwards, its use as an adjective disappears; it was, originally, an adverb, like forward, backward, onward. Its sense was 'transversely,' 'sideways,' especially used with regard to a back-handed stroke with a sword. 'As he glided by, awkward! he couth hym ta' — as he glided by, he took him a back-handed stroke; Wallace, iii. 175. 'The world that all awkward sett' — they turn the world topsy-turvy, Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, 1541. γ. The suffix -ward, as in onward, forward, means 'in the direction of,' 'towards,' like the cognate L. versus. The prefix awk is the ME. auk, auk, adj., signifying 'contrary,' hence 'wrong.' Auke or angry, contrarius, bilosus, perversus. Auke or wrong, sinister. Aukely or wrawely [angrily], perverse, contrarie, bilose; Prompt. Parv. v. 18. Palsgrave has: 'auke stroke, revers.' Auk is a contraction of Icel. afug-, like hauk from AS. hafoc. — Icel. afgr, afgr, afgr, often contracted to afgr, afgr in old writers, adj. turning the wrong way, back foremost; as in 'afgrum vāpnum' with the butt-end of a weapon; 'við hendi afgr', with the back of the hand; see examples in Cleasby and Vigfusson. Cf. the expression af-nic gefit, gloss to L. peruersa contentio, in Prolog. to St. Matthew, p. 2, l. 12 (Lindisfarne MS.). 8. Here af- stands for af, from; and -ug- is a suffix. Cognate forms appear in Swed. afvig, cross, wrong, O. Sax. aduk, perverse, evil (from af, from, and suffix -uk); in OHG. apuk, MHG. ebich, turned away, perverse, evil (from OHG. ap- = G. ab, off, from, and suffix -uk, or from OHG. apa, off, and suffix -h, cognate with L. que). Thus the sense of auk is 'turned away,' from Icel. af, cognate with E. of, off, Gk. ἀπο. Cf. Skt. apika-s, adj., coming from afar; from apa, off, Gk. ἀπο. Der. awkward-ly, awkward-ness.

AWL, a pointed instrument for piercing holes in leather. (E.) Spelt aule in Shak. Jul. Cæsar, i. 1. 25; Exod. xxi. 6 (1611). ME. an alle; Wyclif. Exod. xxi. 6; later version, a nal. Also el. Ancien Riwle, p. 324. AS. al, dat. ale, Exod. xxi. 6; ale, Levit. xxv. 10. — Icel. alr, an awl; OHG. ala, G. ale; Du. aal. Teut. types alaz*, ālū. Cf. Skt. ārū, an awl. ¶ Distinct from ME. aule, flesh-hook, Ancien Riwle, 212; AS. awel, grappling-hook, trident, Voc. 7. 6; awul, Voc. 127. 10. (W. A. Craigie, Phil. Soc. Trans. 1906; p. 261).

AWN, a beard of corn or grass. (Scand.) ME. awn. 'Hecarista, a noun, i.e. an awn'; Wright's Vocabularies, i. 233. An older (13th-century) form agune appears at p. 155 of the same volume. [AS. agun, pl., awns; Corpus Glos.; whence pref. E. ain, awn.] — Icel. agn, chaff, a husk; Dan. awn, chaff; Swed. agn, pl. agnar, husks. — Goth. ahana, chaff; Luke, iii. 17; OHG. agana, MHG. agene, agen, chaff. Cf. Gk. ἀχυα, pl., chaff; O. La. agna, a straw. Brugm. i. § 729. ¶ Finnish akana, awn, is borrowed from O. Teutonic (Streitberg). In some parts of England (e.g. Essex) beards of barley are called ails; here ail is from AS. egl, a beard of corn, a prickle, mote, Luke, vi. 41, 42; which is allied to ear (2).

AWNING, a cover spread out, usually of canvas, to defend those under it from the sun. (OF. ? or Low G. ?) The earliest quotation is dated 1630, from Capt. Smith's Works, ed. Arber, p. 957: 'Wee did hang an awning (which is an old saile) to . . . trees to shadow us from the sunne.' N. E. D. It also occurs in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 7, in Todd's Johnson: 'Our ship became sulphureous, no decks, no awnings, nor invention possible, being able to refresh us.' Four editions of this work appeared, viz. in 1634, 1638, 1665, and 1667; in the ed. of 1665, the ref. is to p. 8. The proper sense seems to be 'a sail or tarpauling spread above the deck of a ship, to keep off the heat of the sun.' Origin doubtful; perhaps suggested by OF. anvan, auvant, mod. F. avant, which Cotgrave explains by 'a penthouse of cloth before a shop-window.' Cf. Prov. anvan, Late L. antevanna, antevanna, avanna; which seems to be from L. ante, before, and uannus, f., a fan. Or from Low G. havenung, a shelter (Brem. Wört., p. 607); also spelt havening (Berghaus); cf. Dan. havne, to put into harbour, from havn, a haven. See prov. E. havn, a haven (E. D. D.). So also Lübben gives Low G. havenen, to seek a haven, and haveninge, a haven; but the connexion is not made out.

AWORK, at work. (E.) Used by Shak., only in the phr. 'to set a-work'; 2 llcn. IV, iv. 3. 124; Troil. v. 10. 38; Hamlet. i. 2. 510; K. Lear, iii. 5. 8. Also in Chaucer: 'I sette hem so a werke, by my fay.' C. T. 5797 (D. 215). Here a probably stands for an, ME. form of AS. on; as in so many other instances. Cf. ahed, asleep, &c. The phrase 'he fell on sleep' is similar in construction. See Work.

AWRY, obliquely, distordly, sideways. (E.) In Shak. Tam. Shr. iv. 1. 150. ME. awrie (better awry), Romaunt of the Rose, 291. Awry is properly an adverb, and compounded of on and wry; cf. ahed, a-lep, &c. 'Owthir all evin, or on wry' = either all even or awry; Barbour's Bruce, 4. 705. β. The lit. sense is 'on the twist'; and thus wry is, in this phrase, a sb., though no instance of its use as a sb. occurs elsewhere. We may conclude that it is the adj. wry (cf. 'wry nose', 'wry neck') used substantively to form the phrase. See Wry.

AXE, AX, an implement for cutting trees. (E.) ME. ax, enx, ax; also axe, axe. Spelt ax, Havelok, 1894; Layamon, i. 196. AS. ax, ax; older forms axus, axen (Sweet). In Luke, iii. 9, the AS. version has ax, where the Northumbrian glosses have the fuller forms acaxus, acaxe. Icel. ax, axi; Swed. ax; Dan. ax; Goth. akvisi: OHG. achus, MllG. achus, mod. G. axt (with excrement !); OSax. acus, Du. akus. Cf. also L. ascia (for ascia?), an axe, mattock, trowel; Gk. axion, an axe. Brugmann, i. § 992.

AXIL, the upper angle between a leaf or petiole and the stem. (L.) First in 1794 (N. F. D.). = L. axilla, lit. armpit; dimin. of axilla = ala, a wing; see Aislo. Der. axill-ary.

AXIOM, a self-evident truth. (L. = Gk.) In Burton, Anat. of Melan. ed. 1827, i. 316; and in Locke, On the Human Understanding, bk. iv. c. 7. Spelt axiomaes, pl., Lyly, Euphues, ed. Arber, p. 100. = L. axioma. = Gk. ἀξίωμα, gen. ἀξιωματος, worthy, quality, resolve, decision; in science, that which is assumed as the basis of demonstration, an assumption. = Gk. ἀξιόω, I deem worthy, esteem. = Gk. ἀξιος, worthy, lit. 'weighing as much as'. = Gk. ἀγερ, to lead, drive, also 'to weigh as much'. = ἀγ, to drive. See Agent. Der. From the stem ἀξιωματ-, axiomat-ic, -ic-al, -ic-al-ly.

AXIS, the axle on which a body revolves. (L.) In Pope, Essay on Man, iii. 313. Also in Complaint of Scotland, ed. Murray, c. vi. p. 48, l. 27. [In earlier writers, the word used is generally axle, or axletree, as in Marlowe's Faustus, A. ii. sc. 2. 1. = L. axis, an axletree, axis, Gk. ἄξιν, an axle; Skt. aksha, an axle, wheel, cart. Cf. also OHG. aksa, G. achse, an axle; AS. ax, an axle, Grein, i. 250; Du. ax; Russ. os; Lith. asx.] Curtius, i. 479, considers the Gk. stem ax- as a secondary form from ay-, to drive. Benfey likewise connects Skt. aksha with Skt. aj, to drive. = ay, to drive. Der. axi-al. axle is the diminutive form, but a Scand. word; see Axle.

AXLE, the axis on which a wheel turns. (Scand.) ME. axel, axel, which is common in the compound axletree; the latter is in Gower, C. A. i. 320 (bk. iii. 1209), and see Prompt. Parv. p. 20. [The simple word axel generally means 'shoulder' in early writers. 'He hit beid on his axelun' = he bears it on his shoulders; OF. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 245. 'On his axle' - on his shoulder; Layamon, i. 96. This is an allied native word; from AS. axel, the shoulder, Grein, i. 250. = Icel. axull, an axis; Swed. and Dan. axel, axle-tree. The Icel. axull, m., answers to Teut. akshulaz*, m., dimin. of aksh*, f., as in AS. enx, f., axis; see Axis. Cf. W. echel, axle. β. Cf. Icel. axl, shoulder-joint, AS. axel, f., shoulder, G. achsel, f., Teut. akshul*, f.; from base aksh-, as in aksh (above). The explanation is, no doubt, that the shoulder-joint is the axis on which the arm turns. Der. axle-tree, Icel. axul-tré; where tree has the meaning of 'block', or 'piece of wood'.

AXOLOTL, a Mexican batrachian reptile. (Mex.) From Mex. axolotl, lit. 'servant of the water'. = Mex. ax, for atl, water; and axolotl, a servant. From a story in Mex. mythology; see my Notes on Etymology, p. 333.

AY! interjection of surprise. (E.) Distinct from aye, yes; see below. ME. ay, interjection. 'Why ryste ye o' rather? ay! ben-dicte!' Chaucer, C. T. 3766 (A 3768); cf. l. 10166 (E 2291). A natural exclamation. ¶ The phrase 'ay me!' is certainly French, viz. the OF. ayui, ah! for me; Burguy. Cf. Ital. ahimé, alas for me! Span. ay mi! alas for me! Gk. αἶμα, woe's me! See also Ah!

AY, AYE, yes, yes. (E.) In Shak. frequently; Temp. i. 2. 268, &c.; always spelt y in old editions. The use of ay, aye, or y with the above sense is not found in early authors. We may conclude that aye is a peculiar use of aye, ever; used affirmatively. See Aye. Perhaps influenced by Yes. ¶ Or it may be a peculiar use of the pers. pron. I, as the old ekk. indicate.

spelling answers more nearly to the Span. aya, a governess, fem. of ayo, a tutor, but the word was certainly introduced into India by the Portuguese; the final h is an E. addition. = Port. aya, a nurse, governess; fem. of ayo, a tutor of a young nobleman. Origin uncertain; Diez imagines it to be of Germanic origin; Wackernagel (with greater probability) suggests L. avia, by-form of ava, a grandmother, allied to avus, a grandfather. See Unole. Minshew's Span. Dict. (1623) has aya, 'a nurse, schoolmistress'.

AYE, adv., ever, always. (Scand.) The phr. 'for ay' occurs in Iwain and Gawain, l. 1510; in Ritson's Met. Romances, vol. i. We also find 'ay withouten ende', I. I. Beaus Disconus, l. 531, in Ritson's M. R., vol. ii. [Also 'a buten ende', Ancien Kniwe, p. 396; where a = AS. ā.] = Icel. ei, ever. + AS. ā, aye, ever, always; Grein, i. 11; used in various phrases, such as ā forð, ā on worlða forð, ā ið worulde, &c. It also appears in the longer forms āwa, āwo, Grein, i. 46, of which ā is merely a contraction. It is an adverbial use of a substantive which meant 'a long time', as shown by Goth. aiw, ever, an adverb formed from the sb. aiws, time, an age, a long period, eternity, Luke, i. 70. Cf. L. ænum, an age; Gk. aiw, an age, aiē, aiē, ever, always, aye; Skt. eva-s, course, conduct. See Age.

AYE-AYE, a squirrel-like nocturnal animal. (F. = Malagasy.) F. aye-aye; Supp. to Littré. = Malagasy ai'ay; supposed to be named from its cry; Richardson's Malag. Dict.

AZALEA, a genus of shrubby plants. (Gk.) From Gk. ἀζαλέα, fem. of ἀζάλεος, dry, parched; perhaps from growing in dry places. = Gk. ἀζ-ειν, to dry up.

AZIMUTH, an arc of the horizon intercepted between the meridian of the place and a vertical circle passing through any celestial body. (Arabic.) Briefly, azimuthal circles are great circles passing through the zenith; whereas circles of declination pass through the poles. 'These same strykes [strokes] or diuisions ben cleped [called] Azimuthz; and they deuyden the Orisonte of thyn astrolabie in 24 deuisiouns;' Chaucer, tr. on Astrolabe, ed. Skeat, pt. i. sect. 19. Properly, azimuth is a plural form, being equivalent to Arabic asamūt, i. e. ways, or points (or quarters) of the horizon; from al samit, sing., the way, or point (or quarter) of the horizon, or the arc from a particular point in the horizon to the zenith; cf. Arab. samt, a road, way, quarter, direction; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 360. Cf. samt, 'travelling, a way, tract, quarter; samt's ras, the zenith; as-samt, the azimuth; Rich. Diet. p. 848. From the same Arabic word is derived the E. zenith. See Zenith.

AZOTE, nitrogen. (F. = Gk.) The name given by Lavoisier (d. 1794) to nitrogen gas; because destructive to animal life. = F. azote (an ill-coined word; Littré); = Gk. ἀ-, negative prefix; and ζωτ, as in ζωτικός, fit for preserving life. = Gk. ζω-η, life; ζάω, I live. From the same root we have Gk. bios, life, L. uiure, to live; also E. quick, vivid, vital, &c.; as also zoology. See Zoology.

AZURE, adj., of a bright blue colour. (F. = Arab. = Pers.) ME. asur, Joseph of Arimathe, ed. Skeat, II. 195, 198. 'Clad in asure;' Chaucer, Queen Aneliida, l. 330. = AF. asur; OF. azur, azure; a corrupted form. [So also Ital. azzurro, Span. azul, Arab. azul.] = Late L. asur, azurum; also lazur, an azure-coloured stone, known also as lapis lazuli; also, the colour itself. = Arab. lajward, lapis lazuli, azure; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 509. = Pers. lajward, 'lapis lazuli, a blue colour'; Rich. Diet. p. 1251. So called from the mines of I.ajward, situate in Turkestan; see Marco Polo's Travels, ed. Yule. The initial I was no doubt dropped, because it was supposed to be the def. article (F. l, Span. el, Ital. il, Arab. al). See Diez and Devic.

BAA, to bleat like a sheep. (E.) Chapman uses baing in his tr. of Homer, Iliad, bk. iv. l. 463; see quotation in Richardson s. v. bleat. Shak. has the verb to ba, Cor. ii. 1. 12, and the sb. ba, Two Gent. i. 1. 98. An imitative word, and may be considered as English. Cf. G. bä, the bleating of sheep. Der. baa, s.

BABBLE, to gossip, prate. (E.) ME. babelen, to prate; Ancien Kniwe, p. 100 (ab. 1230); to mumble, say repeatedly, P. Plowman, R. v. 8. Though not recorded in A.-S. MSS., it may be considered as an English word; cf. Fries. babbeln, babbeln, to babble. + Du. babbelen, to chatter; Dan. babbe, to babble; Icel. babbla; G. gappeln; also happeln, bappeln, to babble; Grimm's Dict. β. The suffix -le is frequentative, and the verb means 'to keep on saying ba ba'; syllables imitative of the efforts of a child to speak. Cf. F. babiller, to chatter. Der. babble, sb., babble-ment, babbl-ing, babbl-er, A. V. Acta, xvii. 18. Palsgrave has 'Babler, babillart'.

i. 290; bk. iii. 320; bab, Towneley Myst. p. 149; the full form being baban, Ancien Riwle, p. 234 (ab. 1230); and even Levins has: 'Babbon, pupus', 163. 12. Probably formed from the infantine sound ba, rath r than borrowed from Celtic. The similar forms in Celtic, viz. Welsh, Gael., Irish, Corn. baban are all late, and some may even have been borrowed from English. Cf. Mid. Swed. and Swed. dial. babe, little one. Cf. babble (above). Baby is a diminutive form; like lassie from lass. Der. bab-y, baby-ish, baby-hood.

BABIRUSA, BABIROUSSA, a kind of wild hog. (Malay.) 'The Babiroussa, or Indian hog;' tr. of Buffon (1792).—Malay babi rusa, hog like a deer; from rusa, deer, and babi, hog (Yule).

BABOON, a large ape. (F. or Late L.) Probably borrowed, in its present form, from F. babouin, OF. babouin (II.). The form bavian in the Two Noble Kinsmen, iii. 5, is from Du. bavian. Other spellings, babion, babian, may be modifications of ME. babewin; Mandeville's Travels, ed. Halliwell, p. 210; Prompt. Parv. p. 20; cf. Chaucer, H.F. 1189. The last is either from OF. babouin or represents the Late L. babewynus. 'In an English inventory of 1295, in Ducange, we read—'Imago R. v. . . cum pede quadrato stante super quatuor paruos babewynus'; and the verb babuinare signified, in the 13th century, to paint grotesque figures in MSS.; Brachet. Remoter origin uncertain; but Hatzfeld regards babouin as formed from F. baboue, MF. babou; Cot. has faire la babou, 'to make a mow at', to grimace. Cf. mod. Prov. bahuu, a bugbear. Allied to F. babue, 'the lip of a beast,' Cot. Prob. of Germ. origin; from bab, or ba, the root of babble. See Babe, Babbie; of imitative origin.

BACCHANAL, a worshipper of Bacchus. (L.—Gk.) Properly, an adjective. 'Unto whom [Bacchus] we yearly celebrated the feast bacchanal;' Nicolls, Thucydides, p. 50 (R.). 'The Egyptian Bacchanals, i.e. revels, Shak. Ant. ii. 7. 110. 'The tipsy Bacchanals, i.e. revellers, Mils. Nt. Dr. v. 48. —L. Bacchinitis, adj., devoted to Bacchus. —L. Bacchus, the god of wine. —Gk. Bakchos, the god of wine. Also named Iakchos, and said to be so named from the shouting of worshippers at his festival. —Gk. iakchos, to shout; a verb apparently formed by onomatopoeia, to express an interjectional iak! Cf. Eoho. Der. Bacchanal-ian.

BACHELOR, a young knight, a young unmarried man. (F.—Late L.) ME. bachelor, Chaucer, Prolog. 80; Rob. of Glouc. (1297) pp. 77, 228, 453. —OF. bachelier. —Late L. baccalarius, allied to baccalarius, a farm-servant. Etym. unknown, and much disputed. For conjectures, see Diez, s.v. baccalare; Godefroy, s.v. bachelle; Körtling, § 1134. Not from Celtic type bakos*, small (Thurneysen).

BACK, a part of the body. (F.) ME. bak, Ch. Book Duch. 957. AS. bac (in common use). —OSax. and Icel. bak. Teut. type bak-on*, neut. B. ME. derivatives are: bacchon, backbone; bacchiten, to backbite (P. Plowman, B. ii. 80); bacward, backward (Layamon, ii. 878). Der. back-bit, back-bit-er, back-bit-ing, back-bone, back-side, back-slide, back-slid-er, back-slid-ing, back-ward, back-wards, back-wardness.

BACKGAMMON, a kind of game. (F.) Spelt biggammun in Howell's Letters, vol. ii. letter 68, dated Nov. 30, 1635. A quotation from Swift in Johnson's Dict. has the spelling backgammon. It is backgammon in Butler's Hudibras, c. iii. pt. 2, l. 1062. The game seems to have been much the same as that formerly called 'tables.' B. The etym. given by Strutt (Sports and Pastimes, b. iv. c. 2. § 16) is probably correct. 'The words are perfectly Saxon, as bac, and gamen, that is, Back-Game; because the pieces are sometimes taken up and obliged to go back, i.e. re-enter.' See Back and Gammon (2). Cf. Du. verkeeren, to turn, change; verkeerd, reverse; verkeerd-bord, a backgammon-board.

BAD, evil, wicked. (F.) ME. badde, Ch. C. T., A 3155; Chaucer also has badder, i.e. worse, C. T. 10538 (F 224). Not in use much earlier in English. Rob. of Glouc. (in 1297) has badde, evil, p. 108, l. 17; and we find never on badde, not one bad, King Alis. 2118; this is perhaps the earliest instance. [The Pers. bad, wicked, has a remarkable resemblance to the Eng. word, but was unknown to Rob. of Glouc. The Pehlevi form wat (Horn, § 187) shows that the words are unrelated.] Most scholars now believe the word to be

English. Zupitza explains the ME. badde as shortened from AS. bæddel, an hermaphrodite, used contemptuously, like its derivative bædling, an effeminate fellow; whence Prov. E. badling, a worthless person. Sarrafin refers it to AS. bædded, constrained, gebædded, oppressed (cf. mad, from AS. ge mædded); allied to Lith. bėda, ill-luck, sorrow. Der. bad-ly, bad-ness.

BADGE, a mark of distinction. (F.) It occurs in Spenser, F. Q. i. l. 2. The Prompt. Parv. has: 'Bage, or bagge, or badge, of arms, bandium.' —AF. bage, Royal Wills, p. 68 (A. D. 1376); OF. bage, a badge (Godefroy), A. D. 1465; cf. Late L. bagea, bagia, 'signum, insigne quoddam'; Ducange. Of unknown origin.

BADGER, the name of an animal. (F.) Formerly bogearde, as in Sir T. More, Works, p. 1183 g; but the final d is there excrement. In ME., the animal had three familiar names, viz. the brock, the grey, and the bawson, but was not called the badger till the 16th century; cf. 'a bawson or a badger;' Fitzherbert's Husbandry, § 71. B. The name is a sort of nickname, the true sense being the animal marked with a badge, in allusion to the white mark on its face; so also bawson is from the OF. bawson, pie-bald (N. E. D.).

BADINAGE, jesting talk. (F.—Prov.—L.) In Coles's Dict. (1884); also in Phillips, ed. 1658.—F. badinage, jesting talk.—F. badiner, to jest.—F. badin, sportive, orig. foolish, silly, 'gaping.' —Prov. badar, to gape.—Late L. badire, to gape (Isidore). Probably an imitative word; from the syllable ba, denoting the opening of the mouth. Cf. babble, q. v.

BAFFLE, to foil, disgrace. (F.—MHG.) See Spenser, F. Q. v. 3. 37. The history of the word is recorded by Hall, Chron. Hen. VIII, anno 5. Richardson and N. E. D. quote the passage to show that to buffall is 'a great reproach among the Scottes, and is used when a man is openly perished, and then they make of hym an image paynted reuered, with his heles upwarde, with his name, wonderyng, cryenge, and blowing out of [i.e. at] hym with homes, in the most despitefull manner they can.' The word is here confused with Lowland Scotch bauhle, to treat contemptuously; see the poem of Wallace, ed. Jamieson, viii. 724. For change of ea to ff, cf. tough, rough, &c. B. Bauhle is a verb, formed by suffix -le, from adj. bauh, weak, poor, jaded, &c. This was probably borrowed from Icel. bágr, uneasy, poor, or the related sb. bágr, a struggle; from which is formed, in Icelandic, the vb. bágr, to push, or metaphorically, to treat harshly. Fick (iii. 198) connects this Icel. bágr, a struggle, with MHG. bágen, OHG. págan, to strive, to brawl. γ. But the E. buffle seems to be more directly derived from F. beffier, to deceive, mock (Cot.), or F. bafuer, MF. baffuer, 'to baffie, revile, disgrace'; which are allied to Ital. baffare, 'to flout, scoff' (Florio), from baffa, a scoff; and to Norman F. baffer, to slap in the face, Prov. baffa, a scoff. Prob. from MHG. beffen, to scold; cf. G. baffen, Du. baffen, to bark, yelp; of imitative origin, like Du. pnf, a pop, a box on the ear. Cf. further Prov. F. baff, a blow, a suppressed bark (of a dog); baff, to strike; baff, adj., useless, worthless; baffe, to annoy; &c.

BAG, a flexible case. (Scand.) ME. bagge, P. Plowman, B. prol. 41; Ancien Riwle, p. 168 (ab. 1230). —Icel. baggi, a bag; Norw. and MSwed. bagge. Remoter origin unknown. Der. bag, vb., bag-gy, bag-pipe (Chaucer, C. T. 567, A 565), bag-piper.

BAGATELLE, a trifle; a game. (F.—Ital.—Tent.) 'Trifles and bagatels.' Howell, vol. ii. letter 21, dated Aug. 1, 1633. —F. bagatelle, a trifle; introduced in the 16th cent. from Ital. bagatella, a trifle (Brachet). Diez thinks it is from the same root as baggage. Bagatella he takes to be the dimin. of Parmesan bagata, a little property; and this to be formed from the Lombard bagga, a wine-skin, allied to E. bag. See Baggage (1), Bag.

BAGGAGE (1), travellers' luggage. (F.—Scand.) ME. baggage, bagage; occurring in J. Lydgate's Hors. Sheep, and Goose, l. 109; in Chaucer's Dream, by an anonymous author, l. 1555; and in Hall, Chron. Rich. III, an. 3. § 4 from end. —OF. bagage, a collection of bundles, from OF. bagu, a bundle. —Norw. bagge, Icel. baggi, a bag; see Bag. And cf. Lombard bagga, a wine-skin, a bag.

BAGGAGE (2), a worthless woman. (F.—Scand.) A peculiar use of the word above (see N. E. D.); but probably influenced by F. bagasse. Cotgrave explains bagasse by 'a bagasse, quean, jyl, punke, flirt.' Burguy gives the forms batasse, batasse, bagasse, a chambermaid, light woman. Cf. Ital. bagascia, a worthless woman. B. Etym. doubtful, but probably derived, like baggage (1), from OF. bagu, a bundle.

BAIL (1), security, to secure. (F.—L.) Shak. has both sb. and verb; Meas. iii. 2. 77, 85. a. Bail as a verb is from the AF. bailler, introduced as a law-term, occurring in the Statutes of the Realm, p. 132 (1299). —OF. bailler, to keep in custody. —L. bailiāre, to carry about or take charge of a child. —L. bailius, a porter, a carrier. Root bad; cf. Gk. bairáreiv, to carry. Brugm. l. § 759. B. Bail as a substantive is the OF. bail, safe keeping, security; whence 'to be bail.' This is the verbal sb. from OF. bailler.

BAIL (3), a bucket. (F. — Late L.) See Bale (3).

BAILIFF, a deputy, one entrusted with control. (F. — L.) Chaucer has bailif; Prol. 603; also in Politt. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 149, l. 16 (temp. Edw. II.). — OF. bailif; AF. bailif, Stat. of Realm, p. 27 (1275). — Late L. bailiffum, acc. = L. bailiffus. See Bail (1).

BAILLWICK, the jurisdiction of a bailiff. (F. and E.) Fabyan speaks of 'the office of bailwycke'; Rich. II, p. 528, ed. 1811. A hybrid word; from OF. bailie, government; and ME. wike, AS. wic, an office, duty, function; see wike (2) in Strattmann. See Bail (1). 2. Also used to denote the district under his jurisdiction; apparently from AS. wic, an ahode; see Wick (2).

BAILS, small cross-bars used in the game of cricket. (F. — L.?) The history of the word is obscure. Roquefort gives OF. bailles, in the sense of barricade, palisade, with a quotation from Froissart: 'Il fit charpenter des bailles et les assessor au travers de la rue;' which I suppose to mean, he caused sticks to be cut and set across the street. Godefroy says that 'in the arrondissement of Vervains and of Avesnes, bail is the name of a horizontal piece of wood fixed upon two stakes.' Perhaps from L. acc. baculus, a stick, rod (baille < bacula, pl. form), used in many senses.

BAIRN, a child. (E.) ME. burn, P. Plowman, A. ii. 3. AS. bearn, Grein, i. 103. — Icel. barn, a child; Swed. and Dan. barn; Goth. barn. Teut. type þar-nom, neut. sb.; lit. 'that which is born'; from bairn, and grade of beran, to bear, with suffix -no-. See Bear (1).

BAIT, to take to bite, to feed. (Scand.) ME. baiten, to feed; Chaucer, Troilus, i. 192. 'And shoten on him, so don on here Dogges, that wolden him to-tere, Thanne men doth the bere beite' — and rushed upon him like dogs at a bear, that would tear him in twain, when people cause the bear to be baited; Havelok, 1838. To bait a bear is to make the dogs bite him. To bait a horse is to make him eat. — Icel. beita, to make to bite, the causal of Icel. bíta (pt. t. bait), to bite; Swed. baita, to pasture; Dan. bæde. See Bite. Der. bait, sh., i. e. an enticement to bite.

BAIZE, a coarse woollen stuff. (F. — L.) Spelt bays, Arnold's Chron. (1502), ed. 1811, p. 235. An error for bayes, which is a plural form; viz. the pl. fem. of the MF. baye = MF. baye, a lie, fib. . . a covering trick, or tale; also, a berry; also, the cloth called bayes, &c.; Cotgrave (who here confuses three distinct words); cf. F. bui, bay-coloured. β . That the -ze is no part of the original word, and that the word is closely connected with bay, i. e. bay-coloured, reddish brown, is clear by comparison. Cf. Du. baai, bay; Swed. bai, bays, baize (Taulmütz); Dan. bai, baize. Also Span. bayo, bay, bayeta, baize; Port. bato, bay, bacta, baize; Ital. bayo, bay, cheamut-coloured; bayetta, baize. See Bay (1).

BAKE, to cook by heat. (E.) ME. baken, Chaucer, Prol. 384. AS. bacan, pt. t. bac, pp. bacen; Levit. xxvi. 26; Exod. xii. 39. — Icel. baka; Swed. baka; Dan. bage; OHG. pachan, MllG. bachen, G. baken. Allied to Gk. pháyo, to roast; see Brugm. i. § 165. — β . BAIIOG, to roast. γ . Not connected with Skt. pak, which is allied to F. cok, q. v. Der. bak-er, bak-ing, bak-er-y, bake-house.

BAKSHISH, BACKSHEESH, a present, small gratuity. (Pers.) Pers. bakshish, a present, gratuity, drink-money; Rich. Diet. p. 247; also bakshish, id., and in Palmer, Pers. Dict. col. 72. Cf. Pers. baksh, part, share, bakshidan, to give, bestow; bakshshah, bakshshi, a portion. From Zend baksh, to distribute; Horn, § 186. Cf. Skt. bhāṣ, to divide; Fick, i. 381.

BALANCE, a weighing-machine. (F. — L.) Shak. has balance, Mils. Nr. Dt. v. 324; the pl. form used by him is also balance, Merch. iv. 1. 255. ME. balance, Avenbite of Inwyt, pp. 30, 91 (1340). — F. balance, fem. 'a balance, a pair of weights or balances'; (ot. — L. type balancia, from L. acc. balancum, nom. balanza, having two scales; see Brachet. — L. bi, double (for his, twice); and lanx, a platter, dish, scale of a balance. See Fick, i. 748. Der. balance, verb.

BALAS-RUBY, a variety of ruby, of a pale rose-red colour. (F. — Low L. — Arab. — Pers.) Formerly also balais, balays; spelt balays in the Expeditions of Henry, Earl of Derby (Camden Soc. 1894), p. 287, l. 25. Palsgrave has 'balays, a precious stone, balis.' Cotgrave explains MF. balay as 'a balais ruby.' — F. balais, a balas-ruby (Littre); OF. balais, balai (id.); MF. balay, balé, as above. — Low L. balascius, balascus, balaisius, balassus, balagins, a balas-ruby (Ducange). Cf. Ital. balascio, Span. balas. — Arab. balaksh, a ruby (given by Devic, Supp. to Littre, q. v.) — Pers. badaksh, a ruby; so called because found at Badaksh, or Badakhsān, 'the name of a country between India and Khūān from whence they bring rubies'; Rich. Diet. p. 249. Badakhsān lies to the N. of the river Amoo (Oxus), and to the E. of a line drawn from Samarcand to Cabul; see Black's Atlas. The change from d to l is precisely the change found in L. lacrima for β dacrima. Cf. Malagasy with Madagascar.

BALCONY, a platform outside a window. (Ital. — Teut.) Milton has balcone's (sic) as a plural; Aeplogitica (1644), ed. Hales, p. 24. 'The penult is long with Sherburne (1618-1703), and with Jenyns (1704-87), and in Cowper's John Gilpin; Swift has it short; see Richardson; Hales = Ital. balcon, an outjutting corner of a house, also spelt bale (Florio). Ital. paleo or palcone, a stage, scaffold, also occurs. β . Hence Diez well suggests a derivation from OllG. balcho, palecho, a scaffold, cognate with Eng. balk, a beam, rafter. See Balk (1). The term -one is the usual Ital. augmentative suffix; cf. balloon.

BALD, deprived of hair. (C.) ME. balled, ballid, a disyllable; P. Plowman, B. ix. 183. Chaucer has: 'His heed was balled, that schoon as any glass.' Prol. 198. The final -d thus stands for -ed, like the -ed in spoiled, and serves to form an adj. from a sb. 'The original meaning seems to have been (1) shining (2) white, as a bald-faced stag;' note in Morrie's Glossary. A bald-faced stag is one with a white streak on its face; cf. Welsh bal, adj., having a white streak on the forehead, said of a horse; bali, whiteness in the forehead of a horse. Cf. also Gk. φαλακρός, bald-headed; φαλαγός, having a spot of white, said of a dog, φαλός, white, φαλγός, shining. — Gael. and Irish bal or ball, a spot, mark, speckle (whence the adj. ballach, spotted, speckled); Bret. bal, a white mark on an animal's face; cf. Welsh bali, whiteness in a horse's forehead. β . Cf. also Lith. balas, white, balti, to be white; Gk. φαλός, white (as above), Skt. bhāla-m, lustre. See Prellwitz, and Stokes-Fick, p. 164. γ . We also find MDan. and Dan. dial. baldet, bald, Swed. dial. bällöter, bället, bald. Der. bald-ned (ME. balledness or baldness, Wyclif, Levit. xiii. 42); bald-head-ed.

BALDACHIN (with bal- as in bald or as in balcony, and ch as k), a canopy over an altar, throne, &c. (F. — Ital. — Arab.) Orig. the name of the stuff employed. — F. baldaquin. — Ital. baldacchino, a canopy, tester; orig. hangings or tapestry made at Bagdad. — Ital. Baldacco, Bagdad. — Arab. Baghdād, Bagdad.

BALDERDASH, poor stuff. (Scand.?) Generally used now to signify weak talk, poor poetry, &c. But it was formerly used also of adulterated or thin portions, or of frothy water; and, as a verb, to adulterate drink so as to weaken it. 'It is against my freehold, my inheritance, . . . To drink such balderdash, or bonny-clabber;' Ben Jonson, New Inn, Act i; see the whole passage. 'Mine is such a drench of balderdash;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Woman's Prize, iv. 5. 'What have you filled us here, balderdash?' Chapman, May-day, iii. 4. 'Can wine or brandy receive any sanction by being balder-dashed with two or three sorts of simple waters?' Mandeville, on Hypochond. Dis. 1730, p. 279 (Todd's Johnson). β . To dask is, in one sense, to mix wine with water (see N.E.D.), and this accounts for the latter part of the word. Dask is Scandinavian; and we may therefore look to Scandinavian for the other part of the word. We find Dan. balder, noise, clatter; Norw. hjalder, to speak indistinctly (Ross); Icel. baldras, baltrast, to make a clatter. The Dan. dask is to slap, to flap; and dask is a slap, a dash. Hence balderdash may have been compounded (like slap-dash) to express a hasty or unmeaning noise, a confused sound; secondarily, a 'hodge-podge,' as in Halliwell; and generally, any mixture. Cf. prov. E. balder, to use coarse language; balderdash, filthy talk, weak drink; see E. D. D. (Uncertain).

BALDRIC, BALDRICK, a girdle, belt. (F. — MHG. — L.) ME. baudrik, bawdrik, Chaucer, Prol. 116; bawderike, Prompt. Parv. p. 27; also bawdry (ab. 1300). King Alia, 4608. An l appears in Palsgrave's baldrick; and Shak. has baldrick, Much Ado, i. 1. 244. — OF. baldric*, not found; cf. OF. baldred, baldrai, given by Godefroy; and cf. Low L. baldringus in Ducange. — MHG. balderick, a girdle (Schade); formed with suffixes -er and -ik, from balder, for OHG. balz, palz, a belt. — L. balteus, a belt. See Belt.

BALE (1), a package. (F. — MHG.) 'Bale of spycery, or other lyke, buiga;' Prompt. Parv. p. 22. Also spelt balle, as in 'a balle buckrom,' a bale of buckram, Arnold's Chron. ed. 1811, p. 206. Cf. AF. bale, a bale, Stat. Realm, i. 218 (ab. 1284). — OF. and MF. bale, a ball; also, a pack, as of merchandise; Cot. — Low L. bala, a round bundle, package. Merely an adaptation of MHG. balle, a ball, sphere, round body. See Ball (2).

BALE (2), evil. (E.) Shak. has baile (1st folio), Cor. i. 1. 167; and baileful, Romeo, ii. 3. 8. ME. bale, Havelok, 327 (and very common); balu, Layamon, 1455, 2597. AS. balu, bealu, bealo, Grein, i. 101. — OSax. balu, Icel. bál, misfortune; OHG. balo, destruction; lost in mod. G. The gen. of OMerc. balu (neut.) is balwes; and the Teut. type is bal-wom*, neuter; orig. neuter of Teut. balwoz*, adj., evil (like L. malum from malus). Cf. Goth. balwa-wesi, wickedness. Allied to Russ. bole, pain, sorrow, Och. Slav. boli, sickness. Der. bale-ful, bale-ful-y.

BALE (3), to empty water out of a ship. (F. — Late L.) Not in ME. A better spelling is bail. We find: 'having freed our ship thereof [of water] with baling;' Hackluyt's Voyages, v. li. pt. ii. p. 109. It means to empty by means of bails, i. e. buckets. — F. baille (naut.), a bucket; whence also Du. balie, a tub.—Late L. bacula*, dimin. of baca, bacca, a vessel for water, also a small boat (whence also Du. bak, a bowl, pail); see Basin. Körtling, § 1135.

BALE-FIRE, a blazing fire; esp. of a funeral pyre. (E.) From bale and fire. ME. bale meant 'a blazing fire, or burning pile; also, a funeral pyre.' 'In a tale of firs,' P. Plowman's Crede, 667. AS. bāt, fire, Beowulf, 2323; bāt-fyr, id. 3144; Icel. bál, a great fire; cf. Gk. φαῖς, shining, bright, Lith. balas, white; Skt. bhāla-m, lustre. ¶ Distinct from Bail, which is Semitic.

BALK (1), a beam; a ridge, a division of land. (F.) Not much in use except in prov. E.; common in old authors. ME. balke. 'Balke in a howse, trabs'; 'Balke of a londe eryd, porca'; Prompt. Parv. p. 22; balke, rafters, Chaucer, C. T. 3626; 'baulke of lond, separation'; Palsgrave. AS. balca, a heap; in the phr. 'on balcan leccan'—to lay in heaps, Boeth. xvi. 7; which explains Shak. 'balked,' laid in heaps, 1 Hen. IV. i. 1. 61. OSaxon balko, a beam, Helian, i. 1708; Du. bal, a beam, rafter, bar; Icel. bálkr, a partition; Swed. balk, a beam, partition; G. balken, a beam, rafter; OHG. balcho. Teut. type balkon-*; a bar, weak masc. β. Further allied to Icel. bjálkr, Swed. bjálke, Dan. bjálke, a beam, Teut. type balkon-*; and to AS. balca, a plank for a ship's gang-way, Teut. type balkon-*. Perhaps further allied to Gk. φαλαγγ, a round bar of wood. See Phalanx.

BALK (2), to hinder. (E.) Shak. has balked, Tw. Nt. iii. 2. 26. 'Balkyn or ouerskypyn, omitto'; Prompt. Parv. And again, 'Balkyn, or to make a balkyn yn a londe, porce'; Prompt. Parv. p. 22. A balk also means a bar, a beam, see above; and to balk means to bar one's way, hence to foil; cf. Icel. bálkr, a beam of wood, also a piece of wood laid across a door; also, a fence. Hence the vb. is derived from Balk (1).

BALL (1), a dance. (F.—Late L.) Used by Dryden, tr. of Lucretius, b. ii. l. 29. Chapman and Shirley wrote a play called The Ball, licensed in 1632.—F. bal, a dance; from OF. baler, to dance.—Late L. bállare, to dance (Lewis). Prob. suggested by Gk. βαλλέω, to dance; which is possibly connected with Gk. βάλλειν, to throw. See Ballet, Ballad.

BALL (2), a spherical body. (Scand.) ME. balle, King Alisaunder, 6481; Layamon, ii. 307, 616.—Icel. bállr, a ball, globe, gen. bállar; Swed. báll, Dan. bald. Teut. type balluz-*; MHG. balte, OHG. pallo, a ball, sphere. Perhaps allied to L. foliis, an inflated ball. From the same source, ball-on, ball-of.

BALLAD, a sort of song. (F.—Prov.—Low L.) ME. balade, Ch. L. G. W. 270; Gower, C. A. i. 134.—OF. balade, F. ballade, of which Brachet says that 'it came in the 14th century, from the Provencal balada'. Ballada seems to have meant a dancing song, and is clearly derived from Late L. (and Ital.) bállare, to dance. See Ball (1).

¶ In some authors the form ballat or ballat occurs; in this case, the word follows the Ital. spelling ballata, 'a dancing song,' from Ital. ballare, to dance. See ballata and ballatry in Milton's Areopagitica; ed. Hales, pp. 8, 24.

BALLAST, a load to steady a ship. (Dutch—Scand.?) Ballasting occurs in Cymbeline, iii. 6. 78; balast or ballast in Hackluyt's Voyages, i. 594; ii. pt. ii. 173; Palsgrave (1530) has balast.—Du. ballast, ballast; ballasten, to ballast. (Many of our sea-terms are Dutch.) Cf. also Dan. ballast, ballast; ballaste, to ballast; also spelt baglast, baglaste; Swed. barlast; MDan. barlast. B. The latter syllable is, as all agree, the Du., Dan., and Swed. last, a burden, a word also used in English in the phr. 'a last of herrings'; see Last (4). The former syllable is disputed; but perhaps we may rely upon the Swed. and MDan. form bar-last, i. e. 'bare (mere) load'; whence ballast by assimilation. In this view, the first syllable is cognate with E. bare. [The Dan. bag means 'behind, at the back, in the rear'; and we may conclude that baglast was so called because stowed more in the after part of the ship than in front, so as to tilt up the bows; see Back. But this form was probably due to popular etymology.] C. Another etymology is given in the Wörterbuch der Ostfriesischen Sprache, by J. ten D. Koolman. The Efrisian word is also balast, and may be explained as compounded of bal (the same word with E. bale, evil), and last, a load. In this case ballast = bale-load, i. e. useless load, unprofitable lading. This view is possible, yet not convincing; it does not account for the MDan. barlast, which is prob. the oldest and most correct form. And it is not clear that Efrisian bal can mean 'useless'; it is rather 'evil' or 'harmful'.

BALLET, a sort of dance. (F.—Ital.—Late L.) First used by Dryden, Essay on Dram. Poesie (1668); ed. T. Arnold, p. 61.—F. ballé, a little dance.—Ital. balletto, dimin. of ballo, a dance.—Ital. ballare, to dance. See Ball (1).

BALLOON, a large spherical bag. (F.—OHG.) Formerly baloume, baloon; see quotations in Richardson from Burton, Anat. of Melancholy, pt. ii. sec. 2, m. 4, and Eastward Ho, Act i. sc. 1. In both instances it means a ball used in a game resembling football; and this form was borrowed from the Ital. ballone, 'a great ball, a ballone, a football,' Florio; augment, of balla, a ball. The modern E. word is from F. ballon, augment, of F. ballo, a ball. See Ball (2). ¶ The game of baloon is better known by the Italian name pallone, which Diez says is from the OHG. form palla, pallo, an earlier form of G. ball, a ball.

BALLOT, a mode of voting, for which little balls were used; also, to vote by ballot. (Ital.—OHG.) 'They would never take their balls to ballot [vote] against him,' North's Plutarch, p. 927 (R).—Ital. ballotta, a little ball used in voting; whence ballottare, 'to cast lots with bullets, as they use in Venice'; Florio. Ballotta is a dimin. of balla, a ball. [Hence also F. balloter, to cast lots (Cotgrave); ballote, ballotte, a little ball used in voting (Cotgrave), a word used by Montaigne (Brachet).] See Ball (2).

BALM, an aromatic plant. (F.—L.—Gk.—Arab.) The spelling has been modified so as to bring it nearer to balam; the spelling balm occurs in Chapman's Homer, Iliad, b. xvi. 624, but the ME. form is baume or baume; Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, 1686; spelt bame, Ancrer Riwle (ab. 1230), p. 164; spelt baume, Gower, C. A. iii. 315. The derivative enbaumen occurs in P. Plowman, R. xvii. 70.—OF. basme.—L. balasamum.—Gk. βάλσαμον, the fragrant resin of the balsam-tree; cf. βάλσαμος, a balsam-tree. Of Semitic origin; from Arab. bashām, the name of a fragrant shrub; Rich. Dict. p. 273; cf. Heb. bāšām, balsam; see Gesenius. Der. bal-m-y. Doublet, balsam.

BALSAM, an aromatic plant (Timon, iii. 5. 110). See Balm. BALUSTER, a rail of a staircase, a small column. (F.—Ital.—L.—Gk.) Evelyn (Of Architecture) speaks of 'rails and balusters'; Dryden has ballustred, i. e. provided with balusters, Art of Poetry, canto i. l. 54; Mason has balustrade, English Garden, b. ii. 351.—F. balustre; Cotgrave has: 'Balustres, ballisters, little, round, and short pillars, ranked on the outside of cloisters, terraces,' &c. He also has: 'Balustre, Balaustra, the blossom, or flower of the wild pomgranet tree.'—Ital. balaustra, a baluster, small pillar; so called from a fancied similarity in form to that of the calyx of the pomgranate flower.—Ital. balaustra, balaustra, balaustra, the flower of the wild pomgranate tree.—L. balustrium.—Gk. βαλυστήριον, the flower of the wild pomgranate; Dioscorides.

BALUSTRADE, a row of balusters. (F.—Ital.—L.—Gk.) In Evelyn's Diary, Nov. 19, 1644. Borrowed from F. balustrade, = Ital. balaustrata, furnished with balusters, as if pp. of a verb balustrare, to furnish with balusters. See Baluster.

BAMBOO, a sort of woody Indian reed. (Malay—Canarese.) 'They raise their houses upon arches or posts of bamboos, that be large reeds'; Sir T. Herbert, Travels (1665), p. 378.—Malay bambū, the name of the plant; Marsden's Malay Dict., p. 47; but not original. H. H. Wilson thinks it is from the Canarese bambu. See bamboo in Yule.

BAMBOOZLE, to trick, cajole. (F.—Ital.?) The quotations point to the original sense as being to cajole by confusing the senses, to confuse, to obfuscate. It occurs in Arbutnot, Hist. of John Bull, part iii. ch. 6, who talks of 'a sort of fellows that they call banterers and bamboozlers, that play such tricks.' In the Tatler, no. 31 (1709), is the remark: 'But, sir, I perceive this is to you all bamboozling,' i. e. unintelligible trickery; and in no. 230, bamboozle is noted as a new word. The word to bam, i. e. to cheat, is, apparently, a contraction of it, and not the original. 'The statement that it is a Gipsy word wants proof,' N.E.D. But it may well have been suggested by F. bambocker, 'to be on the lark, to play pranks'; Hamilton.—F. bamboche, 'a puppet . . . sprce, pranks'; id.—Ital. bamboccio, a child, simpleton; augment, of bambo, 'a foolish fellow,' Florio; which is prob. of imitative origin. Cf. E. babble, and Gk. βαυβαίρειν, to stammer.

BAN, a proclamation; pl. BANNS. (E.) ME. ban, Rob. of Glouc. p. 188, l. 3881. Cf. ME. banien, bannen, to prohibit, curse; Layamon, i. 344; Gower, C. A. ii. 96; bk. iv. 2834. [Though the Low L. bannum and OF. ban are found (both being derived from the OHG. strong vb. bannan, or pannan, to summon) the word may well be E. the G. word being cognate; the influence of OF. ban was only partial.] AS. gebann, a proclamation, in Ælfric's Hom. i. 30. Cf. 'þa hēt se cyng abannan út calne þeodscipe'—then the king commanded to order out (assemble) all the population; AS. Chron. A.D. 1006.—Du. ban, excommunication; bannen, to exile; Icel. and Swed. bann, a ban; banna, to chide; Dan. bænd, a ban; bände, to curse. All from a Teut. strong verb bannan-* (conj. 7), to proclaim. β. Brugmann (i. § 559) connects ban with L. fīma, fīri, from BHĀ*, to speak. Cf. Skt. bhan, to speak, related to bhāshā, to speak; Gk. φῆμι, I say. See Bandit, Banish, Abandon. ¶ Hence pl. banns, spelt banes in Sir T. More, Works, p. 434 g; cf. 'Bane of marriage,' Prompt. Parv. BANANA, the plantain tree, of the genus Musa. (Port.—W. African.) Noticed by Dampier in 1686; Voyages, i. 316 (Yule).

The pl. bananus occurs as early as 1599 in J. Davis, Voyages (Hakluyt Soc.), p. 138. Borrowed from Port. (or Span.) banana, the fruit of the plantain or banana-tree; the tree itself is called in Spanish banano. The name is said by early Port. writers to have come from Guinea; see Yule. So also in Voyages (1745), ii. 336.

BAND (1), also BOND, a fastening, ligature. (Scand.) ME. band, band, Prompt. Parv. p. 43; Ormulum, 1821. = Icel. band; Swed. band; Dan. baand; OFriesic band; Du. band, a bond, tie; G. band; Ollig. pant. Teut. type bandum*, neut.; from band, 2nd grade of bud-an-, to bind. Further allied to AS. bend, Goth. bandi, a band. Also to Skt. bandha-, a binding, tie, fetter; from Skt. bhand, to bind. See Bind. But orig. unconnected with bondage, q.v. Der. band-age, band-box. N.B. band-box was orig. made for the bands or ruffs of the 17th cent.; see Fairholt, Gloss., p. 26, l. 1.

BAND (2), a company of men. (F.-G.) Not found in this sense in ME. Shak. has: 'the sergeant of the band'; Com. of Errors, iv. 3. 30; also banding as a pres. pt., 1 Hen. VI. iii. 1. 81. = F. 'bande', a band; also, a band, a company of soldiers, a troop, or crew; Cot. [whence mod. G. bande, a gang, etc.] = G. band, a band, tie; cf. Low L. banda, a gang. Allied to Low L. bandum, a banner. See further under Banner. Der. band, vb.; band-ed, band-ing, band-master; and bandy.

BANDANNA, a silk handkerchief with white spots. (Hind.-Skt.) 'Waving his yellow bandanna'; Thackeray, Newcomes, ch. 4. = Hind. bāndhnā, 'a mode of dyeing, in which the cloth is tied in various places, to prevent the parts tied from receiving the dye . . . a kind of silk cloth'; Forbes. Cf. Hind. bāndhnā, to tie, bind. = Skt. bāndh, to bind.

BANDICOOT, a large Indian rat. (Telugu.) Telugu pandi-kokku, lit. pig-rat (Yule). = Tel. pandi, hog; kokku, rat (Brown).

BANDIT, a robber; prop. an outlaw. (Ital.-Teut.) Bandite occurs in Comus, l. 426, and banditto in Shak. 2 Hen. VI. iv. 1. 135. Borrowed from Ital. bandito, outlawed, pp. of bandire, to proscribe. = Low L. bandire, to proclaim; formed (with excrement d) from banire, with the same sense. = Low L. banium, a proclamation; of Teut. origin. See Ban, Banish.

BANDOG, a large dog, held in a band or tied up. (Scand. and E.) For band-dog. Sir T. More, Works, p. 586, has bandedogges. Prompt. Parv. p. 43, has 'Boudogge, or bonde dogge, Molousus;' and Way, in a note, quotes 'A bande dogge, Molossus'; Cath. Angl. So also: 'Hic molossus, a banddogge', Wright's Vocab. i. 187; also spelt banddogge, id. p. 251. 'A bandlogge, canis catenarius' = a chained dog; Levins, Manip. Vocab. col. 157. Hexham has: 'een bandt-hondt, a banddogge'. See Band (1) and Dog.

BANDOLEER, BANDOLIER, a shoulder-belt; now used for cartridges. (F.-Span.-Teut.) 'Six muskettiers with bandileeres'; Union Invent. (1596); p. 3. From MF. bandouillere, 'a muskettier's bandoleer'; Cot.; F. bandouliere. = Span. bandolera, a bandoleer; from banda, a sash, band. Of Teut. origin; see Band (1).

BANDY, to beat to and fro, to contend. (F.-G.) Shak. has bandy, to contend, Tit. And. i. 312; but the older sense is to beat to and fro, as in Romeo, ii. 5. 14. It was a term used at tennis, and was formerly also spelt band, as in 'To band the ball'; G. Turberville, To his Friend P., Of Courting and Tenys (ab. 1570?). The chief difficulty is to account for the final y, though we have a similar suffix in parley. One sense of bandy was a particular stroke at tennis, perhaps from MF. bande, lit. 'struck.' = MF. bandier, to bind, fasten with strings; also, to bandie, at tennis; Cotgrave. He also gives: 'Jouer à bander est à racleir contre, to bandy against, at tennis; and, by metaphor, to pursue with all insolency, rigour, extremity.' Also: 'Se bandier contre, to bandie or oppose himself against, with his whole power, or to join in league with others against.' Also: 'His se bandent à faire un entrepris, they are plotting a conspiracy together.' B. The word is therefore the same as that which appears as band, in the phrase 'to band together.' The F. bandier is derived from bande, sh.: from the G. band, a band, tie; see Band (2).

BANDY-LEGGED, crook-legged. (F. and E.) Swift (in 1727) has: 'Your bandy leg, or crooked nose;' Furniture of a Woman's Mind, l. 22. The prefix bandy is merely borrowed from the MF. bande, bent, spoken of a bow. Bandy is the pp. of F. bandier, explained by Cotgrave as 'to bend a bow; also, to bind, . . . tie with bands.' He has here inverted the order; the right sense is (1) to string a bow; and (2) to bend it in stringing it. = G. band, a band. = G. band, and grade of binden, to bind. See Bind. Cf. Observe that bande is the F. equivalent of beni, because bend is also derived from bind. See Band.

BANE, harm, destruction. (E.) ME. bane, Chaucer, C. T. 1099 (A 1097). AS. ban, a murderer. = Icel. ban, death, a slayer; Dan. and Swed. bane, death. Teut. type banon*, masc. Cf. Goth. banjan, a wound. Perhaps allied to Olfrisk ben-in, I strike, Bret. ben-a, to cut, Stokes-Fick, p. 167. Der. bane-ful, bane-ful-ly.

BANG (1), to beat violently. (Scand.) Shak. has bang'd, Tw. Night, iii. 2. 24. = Icel. bang, Dan. banke, to beat; cf. Icel. bang, a hammering; Dan. bank, a beating. Note also MSwed. bengel, G. bengel, a cudgel (lit. 'bang-er'); MDan. bange, to make a noise, bang, noise, uproar.

BANG (2), BHANG, a narcotic drug. (Port.-Hind.-Skt.) Formerly bangue (see Yule). = Port. bangue; cf. they call it in Portuguese bang; Capt. Knox (A.D. 1681), in Arber's Eng. Garner, i. 402. = Hind. bhang, hemp (Cannabis sativa); Forbes; cf. Pers. bang, an inebriating draught, hashish; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 93. = Skt. bhangā, hemp; the drug being made from the wild hemp.

BANGLE, a kind of bracelet. (Hind.) 'The ankles and wrists ornamented with large rings or bangles'; Archæologia, vol. viii. p. 256, an. 1787 (Davies). From Hindustani bangri, fem. 'a bracelet, an ornament for the wrist; corruptly, a bangle'; Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms, p. 59; Forbes, p. 88.

BANIAN, a tree; see Banyan.

BANISH, to outlaw, proscribe. (F.-OHG.) ME. banishen, Chaucer, Kn. Tale, 1727 (A 1725). = OF. ban-ir, ban-ir (with suffix -ish due to the -is, which occurs in conjugating a F. verb of that form; answering to the L. inchoative suffix -isc-, -esc-). = Low L. banirre, to proscribe; from a Teutonic source. = Ollig. banann, pannan, to summon; a strong verb. See Ban. Der. banish-ment.

BANISTERS, staircase railings. (F.-Ital.-L.-Gk.) 'Thumping the banisters all the way'; Sheridan, The Rivals, ii. 1 (Fag). A corruption of balusters; see Baluster.

BANJO, a six-stringed musical instrument. (Ital.-Gk.) A negro corruption of bandora, which occurs in Menzies's Dict. (1627). Again, bandore is for bandora, described in Queen Elizabethes Achademy, ed. Furnivall, p. 111; Chappell's Popular Music, i. 224, ii. 776. Also written pandore: 'The cythron, the pandore, and the theorbo strike'; Drayton, Polyolbion, song 4. = Ital. pandora, pandura, 'a musical instrument with three strings; a kit, a croude, a rebecke'; Florio. = Gk. panthōpa, panthōpis, also panthōpa, a musical instrument with three strings (Liddell and Scott). Not a true Gk. word; Chappell says the Greeks borrowed it from the ancient Egyptians. Cf. Mandolin, q.v., is from the same source.

BANK (1), a mound of earth. (Scand.) ME. banke, P. Plowman, B. v. 521; bankes in Ormulum, 9210. = OScaud. banke*, orig. form of Icel. bakki, ridge, eminence, bank of a river; cf. Jutland banke (Feilberg), Dan. bakke, Swed. banke, bank; whence also Norman F. banque, a bank. Teut. stem bankon*-, m. = Ollig. panch, a bank; also, a bench. Note also AS. hā-banc, lit. 'huel-bench', as a gloss to spōnda; Voc. 280. 12. Oldest sense ridge or shelf; hence bunch, table. See Bench.

BANK (2), a place for depositing money. (F.-Ital.-G.) Bank is in Udall, on Luke, c. xix. 23. = F. banque, a money-changer's table or bench; Cot. = Ital. banca, f., a bench; also banco, m., 'a bench, a merchants bank'; Florio. = MIG. banca, a bench, table. See Bench; and see above. Der. bank-er, q.v.; bank-rupt, q.v.; bank-rupt-ry.

BANKER, a money-changer. (F. with F. suffix.) Banker occurs in Sir T. More, Works, p. 1385 h. It is formed from bank, with F. suffix -er. Cf. F. banquier, 'a banker'; Cot.

BANKRUPT, one unable to pay just debts. (F.-Ital.) ME. bankerupte, Sir T. More, Works, p. 881 f. An earlier sense was 'bankruptcy'; N. E. D. The word has been modified by a knowledge of its relation to the L. ruptus, but was originally French rather than Latin. The true French word, too, was banqueroutier (Cotgrave), formed from banqueruile, f., which properly meant 'a breaking or becoming bankrupt'; i. e. bankruptcy. The latter was introduced into French in the 16th cent. from Ital. banca rotta (Brachet). = Ital. banca, a bank, bench; rotta, broken. = MIG. banca, a bench; and the L. rupta, f. of ruptus, broken, pp. of rumper, to break. See Bank (2), and Bench; also Rupture. Cf. The usual account, that a bankrupt person had his bench (i. e. money-table) broken, is unauthorized and needless. Cf. Late L. ruptus, a bankrupt (A.D. 1334) in Ducange. It was the man that was 'broken'.

BANNER, a flag, ensign. (F.-Teut.) ME. banere, Ancien Riwe (1230), p. 300; AF. banere, Stat. Realm, i. 185 (1322). = OF. banere, baniere; cf. Prov. bandiera. = Low L. type bandūria*, f. (the form bandiera occurs), a banner. = Low L. bandum, a standard; with suffix -ūria. From a Teut. (Langobardic) source; 'uexilum, quod bandum appellat'; Paulus. De gestis Langob. i. 20; cf. Goth. bandwa, bandwō, a sign, token. = Teut. band*, 2nd grade of bindan-*, to bind. See Bind.

BANNERET, a knight of a higher class, under the rank of a baron. (F.-Teut.) AF. baneret, Le Prince Noir, l. 193 (ab. 1386); F. banneret, which Cotgrave explains as 'a banneret, or knight banneret, a title, the privilege whereof was to have a banner of his own for his people to march and serve under,' &c. Spelt baneret by Stanishurst, in Holinshed's Desc. of Ireland, ed. 1808; vi. 57. From a

Lat. type banerātus*, i.e. provided with a banner. —OF. banere, a banner: see above.

BANNE, a proclamation of marriage. (E.) The plural of Ban, q.v. BANQUET, a feast. (F.—Ital.—G.) Banquet, vii, occurs in Hall's Chron. Henry V. an. 2 (1809), p. 57. The more usual old form is banquet; as in Fisher's Works, ed. Mayor (E. E. T. S.), p. 294. —F. banquet, which Cotgrave explains as 'a banquet; also a feast.' &c. The word has reference to the table on which the feast is spread. —Ital. banchetto, dimin. of banco, orig. a bench. (Florio has banchettiare, 'to banquet.') —MHG. banc, a bench, a table. See Bank (1), Bench.

BANSHEE, a female spirit supposed to warn families of a death. (Irish.) 'In certain places the death of people is supposed to be foretold by the cries and shrieks of banshi, or the Fairies wife;' Pennant, Tour in Scotland, 1769, p. 205 (Jamieson). —Gael. beanshi, a banshee; lit. fairy-woman (Macleod, p. 627); from Irish bean sidhe, OIr. ben side, 'woman of the fairies'; see Macbain, p. 293. The Gael. and Ir. bean = Old Irish ben, is cognate with E. queen. Windisch has OIr. ban-side; where ban- is for ben (in composition); and side is a pl. form, meaning 'fairies'.

BANTAM, a kind of fowl. (Java.) The bantam fowl is said to have been brought from Bantam, the name of a place in Java, at the western extremity of the island.

BANTER, to mock or jeer at; mockery. (E?) 'When wit hath any mixture of railery, it is but calling it banter, and the work is done. This polite word of theirs was first borrowed from the bullies in White Friars, then fell among the footmen, and at last retired to the pedants; but if this bantering, as they call it, be so despicable a thing,' &c.; Swift, Tale of a Tub; Author's Apology. Banterer occurs A. D. 1709, in the Tatler, no. 12. Origin unknown; apparently slang. Davies (Suppl. Gloss.) gives an earlier quotation: 'Occasions given to all men to talk what they please, especially the banters of Oxford (a set of scholars so called, some M.A.), who make it their employment to talk at a venture, lye, and prate what nonsense they please.' A. Wood, Life, Sept. 6, 1678. Prob. picked up from some E. dialect, cf. prov. E. bant, vigour; bant, to conquer, haggie; banter, to cheapen, haggle, tease, taunt (E. D. D.). Perhaps we may compare Schmeller's Bavarian Dict. (col. 248): 'bündeln (pron. banteln), used jocularly or ironically, to be busy about a bandage (called bantl), fig. to intrigue.' see the whole article.

BANTLING, an infant, a brat. (G.) Occurs in Drayton's Pastorals, ecl. 7, st. 17; where Cupid is called the 'wanton bantling' of Venus. Apparently confused with band, as if for band-ling, one wrapped in swaddling-bands; but really an adaptation of G. bantling (with the same sense as Low G. bantler), an illegitimate child; from G. bank, a bench; i.e. 'a child begotten on a bench, not in the marriage-bed;' see Banker in Brem. Wörterbuch. And see Bastard.

BANYAN, a kind of tree. (Port.—Skt.) Sir T. Herbert, in describing the religion of 'the Bannians' of India, proceeds to speak of 'the bannian trees,' which were esteemed as sacred; ed. 1665, p. 51; see also p. 123. The bannians were merchants, and the bannian-trees (an English, not a native, term) were used as a sort of market-place, and are (I am told) still so used. At first applied to a particular tree; see Yule. —Port. banyan, a trader. —Gujarati vāṇiyo, one of the trading caste (H. H. Wilson, p. 547). —Skt. vanyu, banji, a merchant (Beaufey, p. 625).

BAOBAB, a kind of large tree. (W. African.) In Arber's Eng. Garner, i. 441. The native name, in Senegal.

BAPTIZE, v. to christen by dipping. (F.—I.—Gk.) Formerly baptise was the commoner form; it occurs in Rob. of Glouc. p. 86; l. 1918. [The sb. baptiste occurs in the Ancien Riwle, p. 160; and baptisme in Gower, C. A. i. 189; bk. ii. 899.] —OF. baptiser. —L. baptizāre; = Gk. βαπτίζω; from βάπτω, to dip. From a root GwEBH; whence also Icel. hvefja, to dip, quench. Brugm. i. § 677; Prellwitz. Der. baptist (Gk. βαπτιστής, a dipper); baptism (Gk. βαπτισμα, a dipping); and baptist-ery.

BAR, a rail, a stiff rod. (F.) ME. barre, Chaucer, C. T., A 1075; Havelok, 1794. —OF. barre. —Late L. barra, a bar (of unknown origin); whence also Port., Span., and Ital. barra. A connexion with Bret. barr, a branch, seems possible. Cf. Stokes-Fick, pp. 172–3. Der. barriade, q.v., barrier, q.v.; barriester, q.v.; prob. barrel, q.v.; and see embarrass.

BARB (1), the hook on the point of an arrow. (F.—L.) Merely an adaptation of the L. barba, a beard. Cotgrave has: 'Barbelé, bearded; also, full of snags, snips, jags, notches; whence flesche barbelée, a bearded or barbed arrow.' —F. barbe. —L. barba, the beard. See Barbel, Barber, and Beard.

BARB (2), a Barbary horse. (F.—Barbary). So in Glossographia Anglicana; 1719. Cotgrave has: 'Barbe, a Barbary horse.' Named from the country.

BARBAROUS, uncivilized. (L.—Gk.) ME. barbar, barbarik, a barbarian; Wyclif's earlier version, Col. iii. 11, 1 Cor. xiv. 11. Afterwards barbarous, in closer imitation of the Latin. —L. barbarus. —Gk. βάρβαρος, foreign; cf. L. balbus, stammering. β. The name was applied by Greeks to foreigners to express the strange sound of their language; see Curtius, i. 262; Fick, i. 684. Der. barbarian, barbaric, barbarity, barbarise, barbarism, barbarousness.

BARBECUE, a frame-work of sticks supported on posts; orig. used for sleeping on or for meat meant to be smoke-dried. (Span.—Hayti.) Hence the verb barbecue, to smoke-dry, to broil. 'They... barbecue their game and fish in the smoke;' Stedman, Surinam, i. 406. —Span. barbacoa, a scaffold raised above the ground; Pineda. —Hayti barbacoa, a raised wooden framework; Notes on F. Ety. p. 347.

BARBED, accoutred; said of a horse. (F.—Scand.) Shak. has: 'barbed steeds;' Rich. III. i. 10. Also spelt barbed, the older form; it occurs in Berners' tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 41. Cotgrave has: 'Barde, m. -ée, f. barbed, or trapped as a great horse.' —F. barde, horse-armour; but explained in Cot. as 'a long saddle for an ass or mule' [mule]. Referred by Diez to Icel. barð, a brim of a helmet; also, the beak or armed prow of a ship of war; from which sense it might have been transferred so as to be used of horses furnished with spiked plates on their foreheads. Cf. also Icel. barði, a shield. β. But Devic refers F. barde, pack-saddle, Span. albarda, to Arab. bar-da't, a pack-saddle. However, this may be a different word. See Körting, § 1237. (Uncertain.)

BARBEL, a kind of fish. (F.—L.) 'Barbylle fysche, barbell fische, barbyllus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 24. —OF. barbel, F. barbeau. Cotgrave has both forms, and defines barbeau as 'the river barbell'. . . also, a little beard.' —L. acc. barbellum, from barbellus, dimin. of barbus, a barbel; cf. barbula, a little beard, dimin. of barba, a beard. ¶ The fish is so called because it is furnished near the mouth, with four barbels or beard-like appendages (Webster). See Barb (1).

BARBER, one who shaves the beard. (F.—L.) ME. barbour, Chaucer, C. T., A 2025 (Kn. Ta.) —OF. barbeor, barbier, a barber. —F. barbe, the beard, with suffix of agent. —L. barba, the beard; which is cognate with E. beard; Brugm. i. § 972. See Beard. β. ME. and AF. barbour, OF. barbeor, answer to a L. type barbutōrem*, acc.; OF. barbier to Late L. type barbūrium, acc.

BARBERRY, BERBERRY, a shrub. (F.—L.) Cotgrave has: 'Berberis, the barberry-tree.' The Eng. word is borrowed from French, which accounts for the loss of final s. The ME. barbaryn (Prompt. Parv.) is adjectival. —Late L. berberis, the name of the shrub, also spelt barbaris, as in Prompt. Parv. Origin wholly unknown; the Arab. barbāris (often cited) is not a true Arab. word. The name barbaryn-tree (Prompt. Parv.) answers to OF. barbarin, 'foreign'; and an ultimate derivation from Gk. βάρβαρος or βάρβαρος, foreign, does not seem impossible. The Span. berberis, Ital. berberi, afford no help. Mandeville has barbarynes (to translate F. berberis); c. ii. p. 14. 'Berberi, fructus, berbarynes;' Wright, Voc. 568. 4. ¶ This is an excellent example of accommodated spelling; the change of the two final syllables into berry makes them significant; but the word cannot claim three r's.

BARBICAN, an outwork of a fort. (F.—Arab. and Pers.) ME. barbi an. King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, l. 1591; Gawain and the Grene Knight, ed. Morris, l. 793. John de Garlande has 'antemuralia, barbycons;' and 'propugnacula, Gallice barbaquenne;' Wright's Voc. i. pp. 130, 131. —OF. barbacan, also barbecan, barbicant, barbeckant; 'Antemuralia, barbeckant;' also 'Les creneaux ou barbicants;' Godefroy. Cf. Low L. barbacana, an outwork; a word of unknown origin. [Not AS.] ¶ Brachet says that it was adopted from Arabic barbak-khaneh, a rampart, a word which is not in Richardson's Arab. and Pers. Dict., and which appears to have been coined for the occasion. Diez derives it from Pers. bāla-khānah, upper chamber, which is far from satisfactory. For conjectures, see Devic, and Körting, § 1168. β. L. barba cāna, 'gray beard,' is exactly the mod. Prov. barbacano, a barbian; and this may very well be a 'popular etymology,' due to trying to make sense of the Eastern name bāb-khānah, 'gate-house,' a term written on a barbian at Cawnpore; see Yule's account. If this be right, the derivation is from Arab. bāb, a gate, and Pers. khānah, a house.

BARCAROLLE, a boatman's song. (F.—Ital.—Late L.) In Moore, National Airs, no. 10, l. 17. —F. barcarolle. —Venetian barcarola; fem. of barcaro = a waterman (Baretto), Ital. barcaruolo. —Ital. barca, a boat; see Barb (1).

BARD (1), a poet. (C.) Bard occurs in Sir R. Holland's Houlate, ll. 795, 822, 825. Sciden speaks of 'bardik impostures;' On Drayton's Polyolion; Introduction. Borrowed from the Celtic; Irish bard, Gael. bard, a poet; so too W. bardd, Corn. bardh, Bret. barz. β.

Celtic type bardos*, which probably meant 'speaker'; cf. Gk. φράζω (for φράζω), to speak. Der. bard-ic.

BARB (2), armour for a horse; see Barbed.

BARB, naked. (E.) ME. bar, barre, Owl and Nightingale, 547. AS. bar, bare, Grein, i. 77. + Icel. barr, bare, naked; OHG. par (G. AS.), bare; Du. baar. Teut. type bazaz*; allied to Lith. basas, barefooted; Oslav. boasť, Russ. bosi, barefooted. Idg. type bhosos*. Der. bar-ness, bare-footed, bare-headed, bare-footed.

BARGAIN, to chaffer. (F.) ME. bargayn, sh., Chaucer, Prol. 282; Robert of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 169. = OF. bargaigner, to chaffer. = Late L. barcāniare, to change about, shift, shuffle. Origin uncertain; Diez and Burguy refer the Late L. form, without hesitation, to Late L. barca, a barque or boat for merchandise, but fail to explain the latter portion of the word. See below.

BARGE, a sort of boat. (F. — Late L.) ME. barge, Chaucer, Prol. 410; Robert of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 169. = OF. barge. = Late L. barga, apparently a variant of barca, for which see Bark (1). β. Diez derives barge from a Late Lat. type barica*, a supposed dimin. from l. bāris, a flat Egyptian row-boat (Propertius). = Gk. βάρης, a flat Egyptian row-boat; perhaps of Egyptian origin; Mahn cites a Coptic bari, a small boat, given by Peyron. See below.

BARKE (1), BARQUE, a sort of ship. (F. — Ital. — Late L.) These are probably varieties of the same word as the above. Hackluyt has 'small barques,' Voyages, vol. ii. part i. p. 227; and Fabian's Chronicles, ed. 1811, p. 286, has 'small caruyles [caravels] and barkeys;' clearly borrowed from F. barque. Cotgrave has 'Barque, a barke, little ship, great boat.' = Ital. barca, 'a boat, a lighter'; Florio. = Late L. barca, a small ship or boat (Paulinus Nolanus, ab. 400). Cf. Thunmeyer's thinks that l. barca may be of Celtic origin, from OIrish bar; but the borrowing was more probably in the other direction.

BARKE (2), the rind of a tree. (Scand.) ME. barke, P. Plowman, R. xi. 251; barke, Legends of Holy Rood, p. 68. = Swed. bark, rind; Dan. bark; Icel. börkr (stem bar-). = MDu. borcke, barcke, 'the bark of a tree, or a crust,' Hexham; Low G. barke. Teut. type barkuz*.

BARKE (3), to yelp as a dog. (E.) ME. berke, Will. of Palerne, ed. Skeat, l. 35; the pp. borken is in Ch., tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 5, l. 1. AS. beorcan, Grein, i. 106; strong verb, pt. t. beare, pp. beorcen; cf. Icel. weak verb berkja, to bark, to bluster. β. Prob. of imitative origin; and somewhat similar to AS. brecan, to break, to crack, to snap, used of a sudden noise; cf. the cognate L. fragor, a crash. We find AS. brecan in the sense of 'to roar,' Grein, i. 137; cf. Icel. braka, to creak as timber does. See Break. Similarly Skt. barh, to roar as an elephant; Swed. bråka, to bleat.

BARLEY, a kind of grain. (E.) ME. barlich, barli, Wycl. Exod. ix. 31; barli, Ormulum, 15511. AS. barlic, AS. Chron., an. 1124; 'to barlicse crofte,' to the barley-croft; Cod. Dipl. vi. 79, an. 966. Bar- may be compared with Icel. barr, n., barley, and is allied to AS. bere, cognate with Goth. baris*, only found in the adj. bariz-eims, made of barley. The suffix -lic signifies 'like'; so that barley orig. meant 'of the bar-kind,' where bar is the Lowl. Scotch form of AS. bere, m. The AS. bar, bere, are further allied to L. far, corn; and even to Oslav. brashino, food, Servian brachno, meal; see Miklosich, p. 10, col. 1, s. v. borshino; Uhlenbeck, Goth. Wört.; Brugm. i. § 180. See Farina.

BARME (1), yeast. (E.) ME. berm, Chaucer, C. T. 16281 (G 813). AS. beorma, m., Luke, xiii. 21. + Swed. härma; Dan. bärme, dregs, lees; G. barme, yeast. Teut. type bermentum*; cf. L. fermentum, yeast; from fervere, to boil. See Ferment.

BARME (2), the lap. (E.) Nearly obsolete; ME. barm, barme, Prompt. Parv. p. 25. AS. bearm, m., the lap, bosom; Grein, i. 103. + Icel. barmr; Swed. and Dan. barm; Goth. barms; OIIG. barm, parm. Teut. type barmoz*, m.; from bar, 2nd grade of ber-au, to bear; whence also Finnish parmas, barm. See Bar.

BARNE, a place for storing grain. (E.) ME. berne, Chaucer, C. T. 12996 (H 1256). AS. bera, Luke, iii. 17; a contracted form of her-ern, which occurs in the Old Northumbrian version of the same passage; which glosses L. 'ream' by 'her-ern vel here-for.' A compound word; from AS. bere, barley, and ern, ern, a house or place for storing, which enters into many other compounds; see Grein, i. 228. The form ern stands, by metathesis, for ran(n)*, and is cognate with Icel. ran, Goth. razo. Teut. type razom*, n., a house, abode. See Ransack, Barton, Barley. Der. bar-n-door.

BARNAACLE (1), a species of goose. (F. — Late L.) 'A barnacle, bird, chelonopsis,' Levens, 6. 2. Pinnin, of ME. bername; 'barnacles, vesicles liche to wyld gees,' Trevisa, tr. of Higden, l. 335; where Caxton's version has bername. = ME. bername, 'the fowle called a barnacle'; Cot. = Late L. bername, in Giraldus Cambrensis (ab. 1175). Ducange has 'Bernacia, aves acule palustris similes,' with hy-forms bernamecia, bernamecia, bernamecia, and bernamecia. β. The history of the word is very obscure; but see the account in Max Müller's Lectures on the Science of Language, 8th ed. ii. 602. His theory is that the birds were Irish ones, i. e. aves Hibernicae or Hibernulae; that the first syllable was dropped, as in Low L. bernamegium for hybernagegium, &c.; and that the word was afterwards applied to the shell-fish from which the barnacle-geese was imagined to be produced. See Barnacle (2).

BARNACLE (2), a sort of small shell-fish. (F. — Late L.) Spelt bernameles by Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, bk. iii. c. 28, § 17. The same word as the above, according to an extraordinary popular belief. Hence it would be to beside the question to explain the word as from the L. pernuclea, dimin. of perna; see this discussed in Max Müller, Lect. on the Science of Language, 8th ed. ii. 584. [Cf. Lat. perna, used by Pliny, Nat. Hist. 32. 55: 'Appellatur et perna concharum generis, circa Pontias insulas frequentissime. Stant velut sullo crure longe in arena defixi, hiantesque, qua limpidudo est, pedali non minus spatio, cibum venantur.' From Gk. πέπρα, lit. a ham.] β. The Gael. and Irish hairneach, a limpet, W. brenig, are perhaps from ME. bername (Macclain). But Stokes (p. 162) derives these from a form berenn (?), a rock.

BARNACLES, spectacles; orig. irons put on the noses of horses to keep them quiet. (F.) 'Barnacles, an instrument set on the nose of unruly horses,' Barlet; and see Levius. Hence the more modern jocular use in the sense of spectacles; first in 1571 (N. E. D.) Barnacle (which occurs in Trevisa, tr. of Higden, l. 353) is a dimin. of ME. bernak, explained by I. 'chāmus' in Prompt. Parv. = OF. bernac, gloss to cinnum, in A. Neckam (ab. 1200); Wright, Voc. i. 100, l. 3. Origin unknown. See the word discussed in Max Müller, Lect. on the Science of Language, 8th ed. ii. 583; but the solution there offered is untenable. See notes in the Eng. Dial. Dict.

BAROMETER, an instrument for measuring the weight of the air. (Gk.) Not in early use. Due to Boyle, in 1665 (N. E. D.) It occurs also in Glanvill, Ess. 3. R. Boyle (in 1665) has barometrical; Works, vol. ii. p. 798; and so Johnson, Rambler, no. 117. Coined from the Gk. = Gk. βάρω, for βάπω, weight; and μέτρον, a measure. The Gk. βάρω, heavy, is allied to L. gravis, heavy; Curtius, l. 77; Brugm. i. § 665. See Grave and Metro. Der. barometrical.

BARON, a title of dignity. (F. — L.) ME. baron, Roh. of Glouc. p. 125, l. 2669 (see Koch, Eng. Gram. iii. 154); barun, Old Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 35. = F. baron (AF. barun, Vie de St. Auban, ed. Atkinson, l. 134, and note to l. 301). β. The final -on is the accus. suffix, and the nom. form is OF. ber; both ber and baron meaning, originally, merely 'man' or 'husband.' Diez quotes from Raynouard the OI rovençal phrase 'lo har non es creat per la femna, mas la femna per lo baro' — the man was not created for the woman, but the woman for the man. = Late L. bāro (gen. bārūnis), a man; the same word as L. bāro, a simpleton (Cicero). Korting says that sufficient proof of this identification is given by Settegast, in Roman. Forschungen, i. 240. Hence also Prov. bar (acc. barō); Span. varon, Port. varão, a man. Der. baron-age, baron-y, baron-et, baron-el-cv.

BAROUCHE, a sort of carriage. (G. — Ital.) The word is not properly French; but G. barutsche modified so as to present a French appearance. The German word is borrowed from Ital. baroccio, commonly (and more correctly) spelt biroccio, a chariot. β. Originally, biroccio meant a two-wheeled car, from L. birotus, two-wheeled; with the ending modified so as to resemble Ital. carroccio, a carriage, from carro, a car. = L. bi-, double; and rota, a wheel; see Rotary. The F. form is brouette, a dimin. of beroute, standing for L. birotum.

BARRACKS, soldiers' lodgings. (F. — Ital.) A modern word; Rich. quotes from Swift's Letters and Blackstone, Comment. bk. i. c. 13. The earliest quotation in N. E. D. is dated 1685; but it occurs at least seven years earlier. 'Moonmouth writes from Ostend in 1678: 'Many men ill . . . which they attribute to . . . damp lodging of men in the Barraques;' Sir S. D. Scott, The British Army, iii. 399. = F. baraque, a barrack, spelt baraque in Supp. to Godfrey; introduced in the 16th century from Ital. baracca, f., a tent (Brachet), which Torriano (1688) explains as 'a shed made of boards.' Diez derives baracca from Ital. barra, a bar. See Bar.

BARRATOR, one who excites to quarrels and suits-at-law. (F.) Spelt barrator, barater, in Blount's Nomo-lexicon; baratouere in Prompt. Parv. p. 115; see Way's note. The pl. barattours, deceivers, is in the F. text of Mandeville, Trav. p. 160, note f. From ME. barat, fraud, Aynbite of Iwyt, pp. 39, 61, 82; barete, strife, R. Manning, tr. of Langtoft, p. 274; barat, Ancien Riwe, p. 172. The AF. pl. barattours occurs in the Stat. of the Realm, i. 364, an. 1361; and AF. barat, deceit, in Life of Edw. Confessor, ed. Luard, l. 36. = F. barat, 'cheating, deceit, guile, also a barter,' Cotgrave. See Barater. But the sense has certainly been influenced by Icel. baráttu, strife.

BARREL, a wooden cask. (E.) ME. barrel, Chaucer, C. T. B 3083 (ed. Tyrw. 13899). Spelt barrell, King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, l. 28. = OF. baril, a barrel. β. Brachet says 'origin unknown'; Diez and Scheler suppose the derivation to be from OF. barre, a bar; as if the barrel were looked upon as composed of bars or staves. [The Celtic forms are borrowed from English.] Cf. BARRICADE.

BARREN, sterile. (F.) ME. barryn, Chaucer, C. T., A 1977; barain, Ancien Rime, p. 158. —OF. barraige, barraige, barraigne (F. barraigne, all fem. forms), barren. Etym. unknown; the usual guess is, from Breton brez han, sterile; but this is merely borrowed from French (Thurneysen).

BARRICADE, a hastily made fortification; also, as a verb, to fortify hastily. (F. — Span.) 'The bridge, the further end whereof was barricaded with barrels,' Hackluyt, Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 142. —F. barricade, f., in Cotgrave's barriqueade, which he explains as 'a barricado, a defence of barrels, timber, pales, earth, or stones, heaped up, or closed together,' &c. β. The F. verb was barriquer, formed directly from barrique, a large barrel. But the F. sb. is clearly a mere borrowing from the Span. barricada, f., wrongly Englished as barricado; and this (supposed) Span. form appears in English also; e.g. 'they . . . barricaded up their way,' Hackluyt, Voyages, iii. 568. The Span. barricada is formed as it is up from a vb. barriar, which is from barra, a barrel. Probably from Span. barra, a bar. See Bar; and cf. Barrel.

BARRIER, a boundary. (F. — Late L.) ME. barriere, in Lydgate, Siege of Thebes, pt. iii. l. 223; barriere in E. E. Allit. Poems, B 1239. —OF. barriere, Godefroy (s.v. bassin); F. barrière, a barrier. —OF. barre, to bar up. —OF. barre, a bar. See Bar.

BARISTER, one who pleads at the bar. (F.) with E. suffix. In Holland, Plutarch, p. 138. First found as barister ab. 1545 (N. E. D.). Formed from the sb. bar, with suffixes -ist and -er; or, more probably, from ME. barre with suffix -ster. Spelman cites a 16th cent. L. barroterius, prob. from E. See Bar.

BARROW (1), a burial-mound. (E.) Sherwood, in his index to Cotgrave, has: 'A barrow, a hillock, mouveau de terre.' ME. bergh (v. r. berue), a hill, P. Plowman, C. viii. 227. 'Hul vel beoruk', i.e. a hill or barrow, Wright's Vocab. i. 92. —AS. beorge (Omerc. berge), dat. of beorh, beorg, (1) a hill, (2) a grave-mound; Grein, i. 106. —OSax., Du., G. berg, a hill. Teut. type berga*, m. Further allied to Skt. bṛhant, great, Pers. burz, high, Irish brí, W. bre, a hill; and to Borough.

BARROW (2), a wheelbarrow. (E.) ME. barrow, barrowe, Prompt. Parv. pp. 25, 105; barrowe, Becket, l. 899 (ab. 1300). AS. beorwe, in comp. meow-beorwe, manure-barrow; Voc. 336. 8. —AS. bar (ber), 2nd grade of the verb beran, to bear, carry; so that the signification is 'a vehicle.' Cf. Efrics. barfe, a barrow; Low G. barwe (Berghaus). See Bar, Beir.

BARTER, to traffic. (F. — C.?) ME. bartryn, to chaffer; Prompt. Parv. —OF. barater, barater; Cotgrave has 'Barater, to cheat, couzen, beguile. . . also, to truck, scourse, barier, exchange; and Godefroy records the contracted form on baria, with the sense 'barter,' in 1373. —OF. sb. barat, which Cotgrave explains by 'cheating, deceit; also a barter, &c.' Prob. of Celtic origin; cf. OIrish mrath, brath, treachery, W. brad, treachery, Gael. brath, betrayal; Irish and Gael. bradach, thievish; Stokes-Fick, p. 220. β. The suggestion of Diez, connecting barat with the Gk. παράδοσις, to do, is valueless. [Another meaning of barat in ME. is 'strife'; from Icel. baráttu, strife.]

BARTISAN, a battlemented parapet. (F. — Teut.) A mistaken form due to Sir W. Scott. In Marmon, vi. 2. 21; &c. Due to ME. bratysing; the Catholicism Anglicum has 'bratysing, propugnaculum.' This is the mod. F. bratticing; see Brattice.

BARTON, a courtyard, manor; used in provincial English and in place-names and surnames. (E.) A compound word from AS. bere-tūn, which occurs as a gloss for L. aream in the Lindisfarne MS., Matt. iii. 12. From AS. bere, barley; and tūn, a town, enclosure. See Barley, Barn, and Town.

BARYTES, older form of baryta, protoxide of barium, a heavy earth. (Gk.) Modern. So named from its weight. —Gk. Βαρύτης, weight. —Gk. Βαρύς, heavy; cognate with L. gravis. See Grave. Der. baryta, a protoxide of barium, barytes being then used to mean sulphate of barium; bari-um, a newer coinage from Gk. Βαρίς (N. E. D.).

BARYTONE, a grave tone, a deep tone; used of a male voice. (Ital. — Gk.) Also spelt baritone. An Italian musical term. —Ital. baritono, a baritone. —Gk. Βαρύς, heavy (hence deep); and τόνος, tone. See above; and see Grave and Tone.

BARALT, a kind of rock. (L.) Formerly basaltas, as in Holland's Pliny (1634), b. xxvi. c. 7. —L. basaltas, a dark and very hard species of marble in Ethiopia; an African word. Pliny, Nat. Hist. 36. 7; cf. Strabo, vii. p. 818 (Lewis).

BASE (1), low, humble. (F. — L.) ME. base, Gower, C. A. i. 98 (bk. i. l. 1678); base, Sir T. More, Works, p. 361 d. —F. bas, m., base, fem. —Late L. basus. β. Diez regards basus as a genuine Latin word, meaning 'stout, fat' rather than 'short, low'; he says, and truly, that Basus was a L. personal name at an early period. Der. base-ness, base-minded, &c.; a-base, a-base-ment; de-base; base-ment (F. sous-bassement, Ital. bassamento, lit. abatement). And see Base (2).

BASE (2), a foundation. (F. — L. — Gk.) ME. bas, bas; Chaucer, on the Astrolabe, ed. Skeat, ii. 41. 2; ii. 43. 2. —F. base = L. bas, = Gk. βάσις, a going, a pedestal. For bas-ris*; cf. Skt. ga-it-a, a going. From Gk. Bas, allied to Bas in Basivus (for Basivus*), to go; from the same root as E. come. See Come. Der. base-less, base-line. Doublet, basin.

BASEMENT, lowest floor of a building. (F. — Ital. — L.) Appears in F. as sous-basement, formerly sousbasement; a word made in the 16th cent., from sous, under, and basement, borrowed from Ital. bassamento, of which the lit. sense is 'abatement' (Brachet, Torriano). Thus it belongs to the adj. base, not to the sb. See Base (1).

BASENET, a light helmet; see Basnet.

BASHAW, the same as Pasha, which see. (Pers.) Marlowe has basso, 1 Tamerlane, iii. 1. 1. Cf. F. bacha, 'a Bassa, a chief commander under the great Turk'; Cot.

BASHFUL, shy. (F. and E.) In Tempest, iii. 1. 81. From the verb to bash (Nares, ed. 1876), to be ashamed, which is short for abash; with the suffix -ful. See Abash.

BASIL (1), a kind of plant. (F. — L. — Gk.) 'Basil, herb, basilica,' Levins, 124. Spelt basil in Cotgrave. It is short for basilie, the last syllable being dropped. —F. basilie, 'the herb basil'; Cot. — L. basilicum, neut. of basilicus, royal. —Gk. Βασιλικός, royal; from Gk. Βασιλεύς, a king. ¶ The G. name königkraut, i.e. king's wort, records the same notion.

BASIL (2), a bevelled edge; see Bezel.

BASIL (3), the hide of a sheep tanned. (F. — Span. — Arab.) Halliwell gives basil lether, mentioned in the Brit. Bibliographer, by Sir E. Bridges (1810), ii. 399. The form is corrupt, I bring put for ; Johnson observes that a better spelling is basen. The Anglo-French form is bazene, bazeyne, Liber Custumarum, pp. 83, 84; also bazain, bazein, Gloss. to Liber Albus. —OF. basaine, given by Palgrave as the equivalent of a 'schepskynne towed,' i.e. a tawed sheep-skin; bazane, Cotgrave; mod. F. basane, f. —Span. badana, a dressed sheep-skin. —Arab. bīṣān, the [inner] lining of a garment; Rich. Dict. p. 276; because basil-leather was used for lining leather garments. —Arab. root basana, to cover, hide (Freytag). Cf. Arab. baf, the belly, interior part, Rich. Dict. p. 277; Heb. baf (spelt with ḥ), the belly. See Littre; also Devic; Supplement to Littre; and Engelmann.

BASILICA, a palace, a large hall. (L. — Gk.) L. basilica (sc. domus, house), royal; fem. of basilicus, royal. —Gk. Βασιλική (sc. σπρά), a public building with colonnades, a church; fem. of Βασιλικός, royal. —Gk. Βασιλεύς, a king. See below.

BASILISK, a kind of lizard or snake. (L. — Gk.) 'The serpent called a basiliske,' Holland's Pliny, bk. viii. c. 21. Also in E. E. Psalter (ab. 1300), Ps. xc. (xc.). 13. —L. basiliscus; same ref. —Gk. Βασιλιανός, royal; from a white spot, resembling a crown, on the head (Pliny). —Gk. Βασιλεύς, a king; of doubtful origin.

BASIN, a hollow circular vessel. (F. — Late L.) ME. basin, basin; Seven Sages, ed. Weber, l. 2342; (used in the sense of helmet) King Alisaunder, l. 2333. —OF. basin (F. basin, m.); alluded to by Gregory of Tours, who cites it as a word of rustic use; 'patere quos vulgo bacchinon vocant.' Romanic type basinum* (whence also Ital. bacino, Span. basin); from Late L. bacca, a water-vessel (Isidore). Hence also Du. bak, a tray, trough, Dan. bakke, a tray. Der. basin-et, q.v.

BASIS, a foundation. (L. — Gk.) In Shak. Macb. iv. 3. 32; Benam. and Fletcher, Valentinian, iv. 4. See Base (2).

BASK, to lie exposed to warmth. (Scand.) ME. bask. Palgrave has —I bask, I bathe in water or any liquor.' β. It is certainly formed, like bask, from an Old Scand. source, the -sk being reflexive. The only question is whether it means 'to bask oneself' or 'to bathe oneself.' All evidence shows that it is certainly the latter. γ. Chaucer uses bathe hire, i.e. bathe herself, in the sense of bask; Nonne Prestes Tale, l. 447; and see Gower, C. A. i. 200 (bk. iii. ll. 312–15); and the quotation above. 8. The derivation is then from an OSand. baska* (for baska sik), to bathe oneself, now represented by Icel. báskast, to bathe oneself, with the common change of final -sk to -st. For loss of sk, cf. or for other. See Bath, and Busk.

BASKET, a vessel made of flexible materials. (F.) ME. basket; Chaucer, C. T., 13737 (C. 445). Sometimes said to be Celtic; but W. bagged, a basket. Corn. baised, Irish bascid, Gael. bascid, are merely borrowed from English; and the oft-quoted Celto-L. bascinda (Martial, Juvenal) gave rise to OF. bache, bachon, a basket (Godefroy, Cotgrave), which greatly differs in form. β. Certainly French; the AF. form basket (with the characteristic AF. pl. baches) appears in A. Neckam (ab. 1200); see Wright's Voc. i. 98. 6; 111. 2. The suffix -et is also usually French. But no such word has been recorded in O. French of the continent; unless we may consider the OF. basie, a basket, noted by Godefroy, to be allied to it. γ. The AF. word may have been suggested by E. bast; cf. prov. E. bass, bast, also a mat, hassock, basket made of matting; basik, a basket.

BASNET, BASSENET, BASSINET, a kind of light helmet. (F.—Late L.) Spelt bassinet in Halliwell, who gives several examples; bassinet in Spenser, F. Q. vi. 1. 31. ME. basinet, Rich. Cœur de Lion, 403; bacynet, id. 5266; basnet, King Alisaunder, 2324.—OF. basinet (Burguy, Roquefort); spelt bassinet in Cot., who explains it by 'a small basson; also a head-peccé.' Dimin. of OF. bacin, a basin; see Basin.

BASS (1), the lowest part in a musical composition. (F.—L.) Shak. has bass, generally printed bass; Tam. of Shrew, iii. 1. 46. Cotgrave has: 'Basse, contre, the base part in music.' Sherwood has: 'The base in musick, basse, basse-contre.'—F. basse, fem. of bas, low; cf. Ital. basso, which has influenced the spelling, but not the sound. See Base (1). Der. bass-relief (Ital. bassorilievo).

BASS (2), BARSE; names of a fish. (E.) These are, radically, the same word. We make little real difference in sound between words like pass and parse. 'A barse, fish, tinck;' Levins, 33. 13. ME. bace, a fish; Prompt. Parv. p. 20; see Way's note. AS. bars, lupus vel scardio; Voc. 180. 26.—Du. baars, a perch; G. bars, barsch, a perch. Orig. applied to the perch, and named for its prickles. From bars*, and grade of Teut. root bars*, whence also Bristle, q.v. Cf. Skt. bhr̥khi, pointed.

BASSOON, a deep-toned musical instrument. (F.—L.) Not in early use. In Bailey's Dict., ed. 1735. Borrowed from F. basson, a bassoon; formed, with augmentative suffix -on, from basse, bass. See Base (1), Base (1).

BAST, the inner bark of the lime-tree, or matting made of it. (E.) ME. bast; 'Hecilia, baste-ire,' Vocab. 647. 11. AS. bast, a lime-tree; Vocab. 51. 2. Cf. Icel., Swed., Dan., Du., G. bast, bast. Sometimes corrupted to bass; see Basket.

BASTARD, a child of parents not married; illegitimate, false. (F.—Late L.) 'William bastard,' i.e. William the Conqueror; Rob. of Glouc. p. 295 (l. 5970).—OF. bastard, bastart, of which the etymology has been much disputed. β. The ending -ard is common in C.F. (and even in English, cf. cow-ard, drunk-ard, the E. suffix having been borrowed from French). This suffix is certainly OHG., viz. the OHG. -hart, hard, first used as a suffix in proper names, such as Regin-hart (whence E. reynard), Eber-hart (whence E. Everard). In French words this suffix assumed first an intensive, and secondly, a sinister sense; see examples in Pref. to Brachet's Etym. F. Dict. sect. 196. γ. It is now ascertained that OF. bastard meant 'a son of a bast' (not of a bed), where bast is the mod. F. bât, a pack-saddle, from Late L. bastum, a pack-saddle. See Ducange, who quotes: 'Sagma, sella quam vulgus bastum vocat, super quo componitur sarcina.' Brachet refers to M. G. Paris, Histoire poétique de Charlemagne, p. 441, for further information. The phrase fil de bast, 'pack-saddle child,' was quite common; see Bast in Godefroy. Cf. 'thei [though] he were abast ibore,' i.e. born on bast; Rob. of Glouc. p. 516 (l. 10629). ¶ The word was very widely spread after the time of William I. on account of his exploits, and found its way into nearly all the Celtic dialects, and into Icelandic. Scheler quotes OF. coit-art, a bastard, lit. 'son of a coire or quilt,' and G. bank-art, 'son of a hench'; see Bantling.

BASTE (1), vb., to beat, strike. (Scand.) We find 'basting and bear-baiting,' Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1, l. 36. Also 'he has basted me;' Ben Jonson, Every Man, iv. 4.—Swed. dial. basta, to strike, to beat (Rietz, p. 25, col. 2); cf. busta, a beating (ibid.), MDan. bastig, adj., beating, striking; perhaps an extension from Swed. basa, to strike, beat, flog. Cf. Dan. baske, prov. F. bask, to beat.

BASTE (2), to pour fat over meat. (F.—Late L.) It occurs in Palsgrave, p. 442; in Gammer Gurton's Needle, i. 1; and in Shak. Com. Errors, ii. 2. 59. 'To baste, lindre;' Levins, 36. 22. It appears to be only a particular use of OF. basir, to build; for in Du Wez, Suppl. to Palsgrave, p. 938, we find these entries: 'To buyde, basir (sic for basir); To cast butter upon rost, basir.' See Bastile.

BASTE (3), to sew slightly. (F.—OHG.) ME. basten, bastyn; Prompt. Parv. p. 26; Kom. of the Rose, l. 104.—OF. basir, F. butir, to baste, which is distinct (according to Littré and Hatfield) from bâir, to build.—MHG. bestan (for basjan*), to bind.—OHG. bast, the inner bark of the lime-tree. So also Dan. baste, to tie, to bind with bast, to pinion; for Dan. bast, bast. See Bast.

BASTILE, a fortress. (F.—Prov.—Late L.) Chiefly used of the bastille in Paris.—OF. bastille, a building.—Prov. bastida, the same, with change of suffix (Hatfield).—Late Lat. bastire, to build; whence OF. bastir, to build. Usually referred to the same root as Baton, q.v. BASTINADO, a sound beating; to beat. (Span.—Late L.) Shak. has bastinado as a sb.; K. John, ii. 463.—Span. bastonada, a beating with a stick.—Span. baston, a stick, staff, baton. See Baton.

In Howell, bk. i. letter 42; and in Goldsmith, Citizen of the World (R.)—F. bastion, introduced in the 16th century from Ital. bastione (Brachet); which is the augmentative of Ital. bastia, a building, fort, rampart.—Prov. bastia, bastida, the same.—Late L. bastire, to build. See Bastile.

BAT (1), a short cudgel. (E.) ME. batte, Prompt. Parv. p. 26; batte, Ancren Kewle, p. 366; Layamon, 21593. AS. bat; in Napier's Glosses. Cf. Irish bata, bat, a staff. Prob. allied to Batter (1). Der. bat-lat (with dimin. suffix -let = -el-et), a small bat for beating washed clothes; Shak., As You Like It, ii. 4. 49. Also bat, verb; Prompt. Parv.

BAT (2), a winged mammal. (Scand.) Corrupted from ME. bakke. The Prompt. Parv. has 'Bakke, flying beat [beast], vesper-tilio.' Wyclif (in some MSS.) has bakke, Levit. xi. 19.—Dan. bakke, only used in the comp. aftenbakke, evening-bat. For change of k to t, cf. apricot for apricock. β. There is also an older form blakke, seen in Icel. lebrblaka = a 'leather-flapper,' a bat.—Icel. blaka, to flutter, flap. The equivalence of the forms is clearly shown by MSwed. natt-blaka, lit. 'night-bat'; as compared with Swed. dial. natt-blakka and natt-batta. The form blak, a bat, occurs even in ME., viz. in Rob. Brunne, Handl. Synne, l. 11863, but is recorded neither by Stramann nor in the N.E.D. Cf. also MDan. naibakka, a bat. ¶ The AS. word is hcremis, whence prov. Eng. veremose, veremouse.

BATCHE, a quantity of bread. (E.) A batch is what is baked at once; hence, generally, a quantity, a collection. ME. bachce; 'bakeche, or bakynge, or batche, piastura.' Prompt. Parv. p. 21. Here batche is a later substitution for an older bachce, due to an AS. form bachce*; clearly a derivative of AS. bac-an, to bake. See Bake.

BATE (1), to abate, diminish. (F.—L.) Shak. has bate, to beat down, diminish, remit, &c.; in many passages. We find too: 'Batyn, or abaten of weyte or mesure, subtraho;' Prompt. Parv. p. 26. ME. bate, K. Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 338. Merely a contraction of abate, borrowed from OF. abatre, to beat down. See Abate.

BATE (2), strife. (F.—L.) Shak. has 'breeds no bate;' 2 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 271; also bate-breeding, Ven. and Adonis, 655. 'Batyn, or make debate, jurgor;' Prompt. Parv. p. 26. ME. bât, bate, Cov. Myst. p. 12; Gawain and the Grene Knight, l. 1461. It is agreed that bate is a mere contraction of the common old word debate, used in precisely the same sense; borrowed from the OF. debât, strife; a derivative of battre, to beat. See Batter (1).

BATH, a place for washing in. (E.) ME. baþ, Ormulum, 18044. AS. bað (Gren). ¶ Icel. bað; OHG. bad, pad; MSwed. bad (here); Du., Dan. bad. Teut. type baðom*, verb. The OHG. appears to have a still older source in the OHG. vb. bājan*, bāhen, to warm (G. bühen, to foment).

BATHE, to use a bath. (E.) The AS. baþian, to bathe, is a derivative from bað, a bath; not vice versa. Der. bað.

BATHOS, lit. depth. (Gk.) Ludicrously applied to a descent from the elevated to the mean in poetry or oratory. See the allusion, in a note to Appendix I to Pope's Dunciad, to A Treatise of the Bathos, or Art of Sinking in Poetry.—Gk. Babos, depth; cf. Gk. Babús, deep.

BATON, BATOON, a cudgel. (F.—Late L.) Spelt batroon in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 149; bature in Phillips' Dict., ed. 1658; batroon in Tavenant, Long Vacation in London, l. 9.—F. bâton, a cudgel.—OF. bas-ton.—Late L. acc. bastōnem, from basto, a stick; of unknown origin. Diez suggests a connexion with Gk. βαράειν, to support. Doublet, batten (2).

BATTALION, a body of armed men. (F.—Ital.—Late L.) Milton has it; P. L. i. 569.—F. bataillon, introduced, says Brachet, in the 16th cent. from Ital. battaglione; which was formed from Ital. battaglia, a battle, by adding the augment. suffix -one. See Battle.

BATTEN (1), to grow fat, to fatten. (Scand.) Shak. has batten, to feed gluttonously (intransitive), Hamlet, iii. 4. 67; but Milton has 'battening our flocks,' Lycidas, l. 29. Strictly, it is intransitive.—Icel. batna, to grow better, recover; as distinguished from bæta, trans., to improve, make better. ¶ Goth. gabatan, to profit, avail, Mark, vii. 11, intrans.; as distinguished from bōjan, trans., to avail, Mark, viii. 36. Both Icel. batna and Goth. gabatan are formed from the Teut. base BAT, good, preserved in the E. better and best. See Better. ¶ Cf. also Du. baten, to yield profit; baat, profit.

BATTEN (2), a wooden rod. (F.—Late L.) 'Batten, a scantling of wood, 2, 3, or 4 in. [or 7] broad, seldom above 1 thick, and the length unlimited; Moxon; in Todd's Johnson. Hence, to batten down, to fasten down with battens. A mere variant of batton or baton. See Baton.

BATTER (1), to beat. (F.—L.) ME. bateren, batren, P. Plowman, B. iii. 198; formed with frequentative suffix -er from a base bat.—F. battre, to beat.—L. battere, a popular form of battuere, to beat. See Battle. Der. batter (2), batter-y, batter-ing-ram.

BATTER (2), a compound of eggs, flour, and milk. (F.—L.)

ME. batours, Prompt. Parv. p. 27; batours, Catholicon. — OF. bature, a beating. — OF. batre, to beat. See above. So called from being beaten up together; Wedgwood. So, too, Span. batido, batter, is the pp. of batir, to beat.

BATTERY, a beating; a place for cannon; a number of cannon in position. (F. — L.) See Twelfth Night, iv. 1. 36; 11en. V. iii. 3. 7. Cotgrave has: 'Batterie (also Batterie), a beating; a battery; a platform for battery.' — F. batre, to beat. See Batter (1). ¶ The AF. batterie (legal term) occurs in the Stat. of the Realm, i. 48 (an. 1278).

BATTLEDOOR, a bat with a thin handle. (South F. — L.) 'Batylidore, a washynge betyle', i. e. a bat for beating clothes whilst being washed, Prompt. Parv. p. 27. a. A corrupted form; borrowed from the Provencal (South French) batedor, meaning exactly a washing-beetle, a bat for clothes; cf. Span. batidor, the same. [The English held Bordeaux till 1451.] Once imported into English, the first two syllables were easily corrupted into bat le, a dimin. of bat, leaving -door meaningless. Cf. crayfish. Note prov. E. batting-stone, a stone on which wet linen was beaten to cleanse it; batting-stick or batlet, a battle-door for washing. β. Formed from Prov. batre, Span. batir, to beat; the suffix -dor in Span. and Prov. answers to the L. acc. suffix -torem, as in amā-torem, acc. of amā-tor, a lover. See Batter (1).

BATTELEMENT, a parapet for fortification. (F.) ME. batelment, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1459. 'Batylment of a walle, propugnaculum.' Prompt. Parv. p. 27. As if from an OF. *baillement, formed from the verb battailier, battellier, to fortify, to furnish with battlements, called in OF. batailles, a peculiar use of the pl. of bataille, a battle (Godefroy); see Battle. Thus 'mur bataillé', an embattled wall, occurs in the Rom. de la Rose, l. 131; cf. Chaucer's translation, l. 139. But probably confused with a later OF. batillement (Godefroy), a redoubt, formed from OF. bassiller, to fortify. See Battle and Battle; and see Embattile.

BAUBLE (1), a fool's mace. (F.) This seems to be the same as baule, a plaything. Palsgrave has: 'Baule for a fool's, marotte.' 'As he that with his baule pleide'; Gower, C. A. iii. 224; bk. vii. 3955. — OF. baubel, baubel, a child's plaything (Godefroy); perhaps connected with Ital. babbula, a toy (Florio), and with L. babulus, a fool. Cf. E. Babbie. β. Prob. a distinct word from ME. babulle, babille, 'Librilla, pegma', in Prompt. Parv. p. 20. As to this babille, see Way's note in Prompt. Parv., showing that librilla means a stick with a thong, for weighing meat, or for use as a sling; and pegma means a stick with a weight suspended from it, for inflicting blows with. Perhaps so called from the wagging or swinging motion with which it was employed; from the verb babilyu, or babylun, or waveryn, librillo; Prompt. Parv. p. 20. We also find, at the same reference, 'babelynge, or wauerynge, vacillacio, librillacio.' Were this verb still in use, we might equate it to prov. E. bobbie, to bob up and down, formed, as many frequentatives are, by adding the suffix -le. It is prob. imitative. See Bob.

BAUBLE (2), a plaything. (F.) Shak. has bauble in the sense of a trifle, a useless plaything, Tam. Shrew, iv. 3. 82. — OF. baubel, a plaything (Godefroy); also spelt bael. See Bauble (1) above.

BAVIN, a faggot. (F.) Prov. E. bavin, a faggot, brushwood; hence, as adj., soon kindled and burnt out, 1 Hen. IV. iii. 2. 61. 'Bauen, great faggotes'; Palsgrave (1530). — OF. baffé, a faggot, bundle (Godefroy, Roquefort). Remoter origin unknown.

BAWD, a lewd person. (F. — G.) ME. bande, Chaucer, C. T. 6936 (D 1354); P. Plowman, B. iii. 128. But it is a contracted form; the full form being baudstrot, P. Plowman, A. iii. 42 (another MS. has baude). — OF. baldestrot, baudestrot, found only in the later form baudstrot, as a gloss to L. prouba, a bride-woman. — OHG. bald, bold, gay, lively (cognate with E. bold); and MIHG. strotzen, to strut about, to be puffed up (cognate with F. seruir). See Bold. Der. baud-y, baud-i-ness; baud-r-y [distinct from OF. bauderie, balderie, vivacity]; see below.

BAWDY, lewd. (F. — G.) Merely formed as an adj. from baud; see above. ¶ But the ME. bawdy, dirty, used of clothes, in Chaucer and P. Plowman, is a different word, and may be of Celtic origin. Cf. W. bawaid, dirty; baw, dirt. The two words, having something of the same meaning, were easily assimilated in form.

BAWL, to shout. (Scand.) Sir T. More has 'yelping [yelping] and bawling'; Works, p. 1354 c. Cf. 'Baffynge or bawlyng of howndys'; Prompt. Parv. p. 20. — Swed. bōla, to howl; MDan. bōle, to howl; mod. Icel. baula, to howl; Icel. bawl, a cow. Of imitative origin. — Low G. bōlen, to bawl (Berghaus).

BAY (1), a reddish brown. (F. — L.) ME. bay; 'a stede bay,' a bay horse; Chaucer, C. T. 2159 (A 2157). — OF. bai. — L. badius, bay-coloured, in Varro. Cf. (sacri. and Irish buidhe, OIrish buide, yellow. Der. bay-ard (a bay-horse); baize, q. v.

BAY (2), a kind of laurel-tree; prop. a berry-tree. (F. — L.) 'The roiall lawrel is a very tall and big tree, with leanes also as large in proportion, and the bays or berries (bacca) that it beareth are nothing [not at all] sharp, biting, and vnpleasant in tast'; Holland's Pliny, b. xv. c. 30. 'Bay, fruct. bacca.' Prompt. Parv. — F. baie, a berry. — L. bāca (less correctly bacca), a berry. ¶ Cf. AF. *bayes de lorre = bacca lauri; Alphita.*

It is clearly formed from the verb, which is older, and occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 12320 (C 306). There is a term of similar import, spelt bedderidig in the Bremen Wörterbuch, i. 65; from Low-G. bedde, a bed, and redig, riding. The AS. bēce, weak fem., represents a Teut. type bēh-jōn* (with mutation of h to f); allied to Teut. type bēh-jōn*, str. fem., whence AS. bēc, a beech-tree; see Book. Further allied to Du.

beuk; G. buche (OHG. puokka); L. fāgnus; Gk. φύκος. These forms point to an orig. Idg. type bhāgus*, meaning a tree with esculent fruit; cf. Gk. φάγος, to eat. Der. beech-en, adj. (= AS. bēcen).

BEEF, an ox; the flesh of an ox. (F.-L.) ME. beef, Polit. Songs, p. 334. 1. 235 (temp. Edw. II.); beef, Chaucer, C. T. 7335 (D 1753). - AF. beuf, an ox, Year-books of Edw. I. 1292-3, p. 245; OF. beuf, beuf - L. acc. bovem, an ox; nom. bos, an Oscan form. + Gael. bō, a cow; AS. cū, a cow. Thus the word beef is co-radicate with cow. See Cow. Der. beef-eater, q. v.

BEEF-EATER, a yeoman of the guard. (Hybrid; F. and E.) 'Pensioners and beefeaters' [of Charles II.]. Argument against a Standing Army, ed. 1697, p. 16; qu. in N. and Q. 5. viii. 398. Also in The Spectator, no. 625 (1714); and as early as 1610, in Histriomastix, iii. 1. 99. An eater of beef; but why this designation was given them is not recorded. ¶ In Todd's Johnson is the following notable passage. 'From beef and eat, because the commons is beef when on waiting. Mr. Steevens derives it thus. Beef-eater may come from beaufeier, one who attends at the side-board, which was anciently placed in a beaufet. The business of the beefeaters was, and perhaps is still, to attend the king at meals. This derivation is corroborated by the circumstance of the beefeaters having a hasp suspended to their belts for the reception of keys.' This extraordinary guess has met with extraordinary favour, having been quoted in Mrs. Markham's History of England, and thus taught to young children. It is also quoted in Max Müller's Lectures, 8th ed. ii. 582, but with the substitution of buffeier for beaufeier, and buffet is explained as 'a table near the door of the dining-hall.' There is not the faintest tittle of evidence for the derivation beyond the 'hasp' suspended to their belts. I do not find beaufeier or buffeier, but I find in Cotgrave that buffeteurs de vin were 'such carmen or boatmen as steal wine out of the vessels they have in charge, and afterwards fill them up with water.' Mr. Steevens does not tell us what a beaufet is, nor how a sideboard was 'anciently placed in' it. On this point, see Buffet, sb. When the F. buffeier can be found, with the sense of 'waiter at a side-board' in reasonably old French, or when the E. beef-eater can be found spelt differently from its present spelling in a book earlier than the time of Mr. Steevens, it will be sufficient time to discuss the question further. Meanwhile, we may note that Ben Jonson uses eater in the sense of 'servant,' as in 'Where are all my eaters?' Silent Woman, iii. 2. Also, that the expression 'powder-beef lubber' occurs in the sense of 'man-servant,' where powder-beef certainly means salt-beef; see 'Powder, to salt,' in Nares. A rich man is spoken of as having 'confidence of [in] so many powder-beef lubbers as he fedde at home'; Chaloner, translation of Prayse of Follie, 2nd edit. 1577, G. v. (1st ed. in 1549). See Notes and Queries, 5 S. viii. 57; 6 S. vi. 491. Cf. bread-winner, a sb. of similar formation; and particularly, AS. blāf-ēta, a domestic servant, lit. 'loaf-eater'; so that the idea is very old. Also pie-crust-eater, in Dekker's Shoemaker's Holiday, in Works (1873), i. 62; beef-eating slave, Eng. Garner, ed. Arber, i. 339 (1681); and see Tatler, no. 148.

BEER, a kind of drink. (E.) ME. bere, Prompt. Parv. p. 31; ber, King Horn, ed. Lumby, i. 1112. AS. bēor, beer, Grein, i. 112. + Du. bier; Icel. bjorr; G. bier (OHG. biur). Origin unknown.

BEESTINGS; see Biestings.

BEEET, a plant. (L.) ME. bete, in a vol. of Vocabularies, ed. T. Wright, p. 190. AS. bēte, gen. bētan, fem. sb., in Cockayne's Leechdoms; but certainly borrowed from L. bēta, used by Pliny.

BEETLE (1), an insect. (E.) Prov. F. bitte, ME. biytel, Prompt. Parv. p. 37. AS. bitela, bitula; as in 'Mordiculus, bitela', Voc. 122. 8; 'Blattis, bitulum', Sweet, O. E. Texts. - AS. bit-, weak grade of bitan, to bite; with suffix -el of the agent. Thus beetle means 'the biting insect'; cf. 'Mordiculus, bitela', showing that the word was understood in that sense. See Bite and Bitter.

BEETLE (2), a heavy mallet. (E.) ME. beyle, Prompt. Parv. p. 34; bettes, pl. Ancren Riwle, p. 188. AS. bjētel, bjēl; Judges, iv. 21; answering to O Wessex bietel*, O Merc. bietel*; cf. Low G. bätel. Teut. type bantiloiz*, 'a beater, from bautan* (AS. bēatan), to beat; with regular mutation. See Beat. Der. beetle-headed, Tam. Shrew, iv. 1. 161, i. e. with a head like a log, like a block-head, dull.

BEETLE (3), to jut out and hang over. (E.) 'The summit of the cliff That beetles o'er his base into the sea'; Hamlet, i. 4. 71. Apparently coined by Shakespeare. By whomsoever coined, the idea was adopted from the ME. bitelbrowed, beetle-browed, having prominent brows, as in P. Plowman, B. v. 190; also spelt bitterbrowed, id., footnote. The reference seems to be to the beetle (N.E.D.). Cf. F. sourcils de hanneton (Hatzfeld). See Beetle (1). Der. beetling; cf. beetle-browed, which is really the older expression.

BEFALL, to happen. (E.) ME. befallen, bifallen, in common use; Havelok, 2981. AS. befallan, Grein, i. 83. + OSax. bifallan; OFries. bifalla; Dn. hwallen, to please; OHG. bifallan. From be-, prefix, and fall; see Be- and Fall. ¶ This is one of the original verbs on which so many others beginning with be- were modelled.

BEFOOL, to make a fool of. (E. and F.) ME. befofen, Gower, C. A. liii. 236 (b. vii. 4293). — E. prefix be-, and ME. fol, a fool; see Fool.

BEFORE, prep., in front of; adv., in front. (E.) ME. bifore, before, before; in common use; spelt bifore, Layamon, iii. 131. AS. beforan, biforan, prep. and adv., Grein, i. 83, 84, 115. — AS. be-, bi-, prefix, see Be- or By; and foran, before, prep. and adv., Grein, i. 315. AS. foran is a longer form (-an being a suffix) from fore, prep. and adv., before, for; Grein, i. 321. See Fore, For. Cf. OSax. biforan, before; MHG. bevor, before; OHG. biforan, before. See below.

BEFOREHAND, previously. (F.) In early use as an adverb ME. biuorehand, Ancren Riwe, p. 212; from ME. biuore, before, and hand, hand. See Before and Hand.

BEG, to ask for alms. (F.) Cf. ME. beggar, beggere, a beggar. In the Ancren Riwe, p. 168, we read: 'I hit is beggaris rihte worte [for to] beren bagge on bac.' The word is French, or rather Anglo-French. The AF. begger, to beg, occurs in Peter Langtoft, ed. Wright, i. 248. It was evolved from the sb. beggar, found in the Ancren Riwe, as above; or from the equivalent OF. begard, begari, a name given to an order of lay brothers in the Low Countries in the 13th century; and it was soon adopted by many who were mere idle mendicants. The masc. form Begard seems to have imitated that of the female order of Beguine; the suffix -ard, -art, being masculine, as in dat-ard. See the examples of Beguer in the Kom. of the Rose, C. 7256, 7282, and the note. See Beguine. ¶ The derivative beguinner likewise meant to beg; Britton, i. 22. § 15 (vol. i. p. 93).

BEGGET, to generate, produce. (E.) ME. bigeten, begeten, (1) to obtain, acquire; (2) to beget. 'To bigiten mine rihte' — to obtain my right; Layamon, i. 495. 'Thus was Marlin bigeten' — thus was Merlin begotten; Layamon, ii. 237. AS. begitan, bigitan, to acquire; Grein, i. 86, 115. — AS. be-, bi-, prefix; and gitan, to get. The Southern form would have been beyet; see Get. So too OSax. bigetan, to seize, get; and Goth. bigitan, to find. Der. beggett-er.

BEGIN, to commence. (E.) ME. biginnen, biginen, in common use. AS. beginnan, Grein, i. 86 (though the form oginnan, with the same signification, is far more common). From the prefix be-, and AS. ginnan, to begin. Cf. Du. and G. beginnen, to begin. See Gin (1). Der. beginn-er, beginn-ing.

BEGONE, pp. beset. (F.) In phr. woe-begone, i.e. affected or oppressed with woe, beset with grief. 'The orig. phrase was him was woe begon, i.e. to him woe had closed round; but already in Chaucer we find the later construction in He was woe begon; N. E. D. Wel bigon occurs in the Rom. of the Rose, l. 580, apparently in the sense of 'glad'; lit. well surrounded or beset. It is the pp. of ME. begon, to beset; cf. 'wo þe bigo', woe come upon thee, Reliq. Antiq. ii. 273. — AS. bigian, begian, orig. to go about, Grein, i. 115. From prefix be-, bi-, and AS. gān, to go. Cf. Du. begaan, concerned, affected. ¶ In the phrase 'begone!' we really use two words; it should be written 'be gone!' See Go.

BEGONIA, a plant. (F.) Named by Plumier, a French botanist (1646-1704), after Michel Begon, a French promoter of botany (1638-1710). See N. E. D.

BEGUILE, to deceive, amuse. (Hybrid; E. and F.) ME. bigilen, to beguile, Ancren Riwe, p. 330. — E. prefix be-, bi- (AS. be-, bi-); and ME. gilen, to deceive. 'As theigh he gyled were' — as if he were beguiled; Will. of Palerne, 689. — OF. guiler, to deceive. — OF. guile, guile, deceit. See Guile. Der. beguil-ing, beguil-ing-ly, beguil-er.

BEGUINE, one of a class of religious devotees. (F.) The word is rather French than English; and, though we find a Low-Latin form beguinus, it was chiefly used as a feminine noun, viz. F. beguine, Low L. beghina. The beguines belonged to a religious order in Flanders, who, without taking regular vows of obedience, lived a somewhat similar life to that of the begging friars, and dwelt together in houses called beguinages. They were first established at Liège, and afterwards at Nivelles, in 1207, some say 1216. The Grand Beguinage of Bruges was the most extensive; Mayday, Dict. of Dates. ¶ Another set of 'religious' were called Begardi; and it has been clearly ascertained that both names were derived from the surname (or nickname) of a certain Lambert Digue or le Bigue (the stammerer), a priest of Liège, who founded the order of Beguines in the 12th century. See Ducange, who quotes an annal of 1180, s.v. Begardi. Cf. Walloon begui, to stammer, in the dialect of Namur; Picard beguer; equivalent to Fr. begayer. With the fem. form Beguine cf. heroine; with the masc. form Beghard, Begard, cf. reyn-ard. See also Beggar and Beggin.

BEGUM, in the E. Indies, a lady of the highest rank. (Pers. — Turk. and Arab.) Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 284, gives Pers. begum, a queen, lady of rank; also queen-mother, respectable matron; spelt bigam at p. 310. 'Queen mother' seems to be the orig. sense, as Devic thinks that the word is compounded of Turk. beg or bey, a bey, governor, and Arab. umm or umm, mother; hence 'governor's mother'. The Arab. umm, mother, is in Rich. Dict. p. 162. And see Bey. Yule (p. 59) explains it from Eastern Turki bigam, a fem. formation from beg. ¶ Another derivative of bey is the title beglerbeg, given to the governor of a province; see Massinger, Renegado, iii. 4. In Sandys' Travels (1632), we read of the Beglerbegs, the name signifying a lord of lords; p. 47. This explanation is correct; begler or beyler signifying lords, and beg or bey, a lord. See Bey.

BEHALF, interest, benefit. (E.) In ME., only in the phrase in, on (or uppon) bihalve, or bekahle. Chaucer has: 'on my bihalve' (u-v), Troil. and Cress. ii. 1458. So also: 'in temperouris bihalve' — on the emperor's behalf; Seven Sages, ed. Weber, 325. Here on my bihalve is a substitution for the AS. on healfes, on the side of (see ex. in Grein, i. 53), blended with a second common phrase be healfes, by the side of (same ref.). ¶ The AS. healf, lit. half, is constantly used in the sense of 'side'; and even now the best paraphrase of 'in my behalf' is 'on my side.' That this explanation is correct can easily be traced by the examples in Mätzner's Old Eng. Dict., which shows that bihalve was in common use as a prep. and adv. before the sb. behal came into use at all. See Layamon, vol. i. p. 349; ii. 58; iii. 65, 114, &c. The prefix be- is the unstressed form of the prep. by. See Half.

BEHAVE, to conduct oneself. (E.) Shak. has behave, refl., to conduct oneself, a Hen. VI. iv. 3. 5; and intr. but not refl., Oth. iv. 2. 108. Rare in early authors, but the phr. 'to lerne how to behave' kur among men — to teach her to behave herself amongst men, occurs in Le Livre Florent of Rome, l. 1567, in Ritson's Metrical Romances, vol. iii. It is a mere compound of the verb to have with the AS. and ME. prefix be-. [There was an AS. behabban, to detain; but behave was formed independently of it.] ¶ E. behave oneself answers to G. sich behalten.

BEHAVIOUR, conduct. (E., with F. suffix.) Spelt behavoure, Levins, 222. 45. Formed, abnormally, from the verb to behave, q.v. The curious suffix is best accounted for by supposing a confusion with the Tudor E. havour, haviour, due to AF. avoir, F. avoir, used substantively, a word which not only meant 'wealth' or 'possessions', but also 'ability'; see Cotgrave. And see Haviour in Croft's Gloss. to Elyot's Governour. It must be remembered (1) that behaviour was often shortened to haviour, as in Shakespeare; and (2) that havings, at least in Lowland Scotch, had the double meaning of (a) possessions, and (b) carriage, behaviour. See Jameson's Scot. Dict.

BEHEAD, to cut off the head. (E.) ME. bihefen, bihefsden, bihafden. 'Heo us wulle bihafden' — they will behead us, Layamon, iii. 45. Later, spelt biheden; the bihedide Joon, he beheaded John; Wyclif, Matt. xiv. 10. AS. behafdan, to behead; Matt. xiv. 10. — AS. be-, prefix, lit. 'by', with a privative force; and hafdan, head. See Hend. Cf. Dn. outloofden, G. entloofen, to behead.

BEHEMOTH, a hippopotamus. (Heb. — Egypt.) See Job, xl. 15. — 11cb. benēmūth, apparently a plural, signifying 'beasts'; but here used to denote 'great beast'; as if from sing. bēhēmāh, a beast. But it is thought that this is merely a Heb. popular etymology; and that the word is really adapted from the Egypt. p-he-mau, 'water-ox', a hippopotamus; see Gesenius, 8th ed. p. 94.

BEHEST, a command. (E.) ME. behest, biheste, commonly used in the sense of 'a promise'; Chaucer, C. T. 4461 (B 41); and connected with the verb bihote, bekote, to promise, Chaucer, C. T. 1856 (A 1854). From be-, prefix, and hest. Cf. AS. behēts, a vow, behtā, a promise, behtān, to promise. 'He fela behātsa behēt', he made many promises; AS. Chron., anno 1093. The final i is extraneous. See Hest.

BEHIND, after. (E.) ME. bekinde, bihinde, bihinden, after, at the back of, afterwards; Chaucer, C. T. 4847 (B 427). AS. behindan, adv. and prep., afterwards, after, Grein, i. 87. From AS. prefix be-; and hindan, adv., behind, at the back, Grein, ii. 76. Cf. OSax. bihindan, adv., behind; Heliand, l. 3660. See Hind. Der. behind-hand, not in early use; made in imitation of before-hand, q.v. It occurs in Shak. Winter's Tale, v. 1. 151.

BEHOLD, to see, watch, observe. (E.) ME. biholden, beholden, biholde, beholde, to see, observe, to bind by obligation; in common use. [The last sense appears only in the pp. beholden; 'beholdyn', or bowndyn, obligor, tenor.] Prompt. Parv. p. 28. Shak. wrongly has beholding for the pp. beholden, as in Merry Wives, i. 1. 283. ¶ AS. behaldan, to hold, possess, guard, observe, see; Grein, i. 87. — OFries. bikhald, to keep; OSax. bikhaldan, to keep; Dn. beholden, to preserve, keep; G. behalten, to keep. From AS. prefix be-, and haldan, to hold. See Be- and Hold. [Cf. L. tuer, I see, keep; E. guard, as compared with regard, &c.] Der. behold-er; also pp. behold-en, corrupted to behold-ing.

BEHOOF, advantage. (E.) Almost invariably found in ME. in the dat. case behove, bihove (written for v), with the prep. to preceding it; as in 'to ancren bihove', for the use of anchoresses, Ancren Riwle, p. 90. AS. behof, advantage, in Napier's Glosses; also in the comp. behōfic, is, gloss to L. oportet in Luke, xviii. 1, in the Lindisfarne MS. (Northumbrian dialect). Cf. OFries. behōf, bihōf, +Du. behoef, commonly in the phr. ten behoeve van, for the advantage of; Swed. behov, want, need; Dan. behov, need; G. behov, behoof. β. The be- is a prefix; cf. Swed. kävas, to besem. All from Teut. type hōf*, second grade of haf-*, as in Goth. haf-jan, AS. hebban, to heave; see Heave. From the KAP*, to hold, contain; cf. L. capax, containing, capere, to seize, orig. to contain, hold, grasp. See Brugm. i. § 635. γ. The development of ideas is accordingly (1) to seize, hold fast, retain, (2) to fit for one's use, to make serviceable. Der. behove (below).

BEHOVE, to become, befit. (E.) ME. bihoven, behoven (written bihoven, bekoven in MSS.); commonly as impers. verb, bihoveth, bekoveth, Chaucer, Troil. iv. 1004; pt. t. bihouede, Ancren Riwle, p. 394. AS. bihōfan, behōfan, to need, be necessary; Grein, i. 87, 116. Cf. OFries. bihovia, to behave. +Du. behoeven, to be necessary, to behave; Swed. behöva; Dan. beköve. β. The forms of these verbs show that they are derivatives from the β. (above). Also, the be- is a mere prefix. The simple verb appears only in the Icel. hefa, to behave; Swed. hövas, to besem. See Behoof.

BELOUBO, to ply vigorously, beat soundly; (Hybrid; E. and F.-L.) 'Ile... belouboured Jubellius with a cudgel'; North's Plutarch, p. 964. — E. prefix be-, γ. v.; and labour, γ. v.

BELAY, to fasten a rope. (Du.) 'To lay is to fasten a rope by laying it round and round a couple of pins. This use was prob. suggested by Du. beleggen, to cover, to overlay, to border, to lace, garnish with fringe, &c.; and, as a naut. term, to lay. From prefix be- (the same as L. prefix be-), and leggen, to lay, place, cognate with E. lay. See Lay (1). ¶ There was also a native E. word to belay, a compound of be- and lay, but it meant 'to besiege' or 'beleaguer' a castle; see Spenser, Sonnet 14. See Beleaguer.

BELCH, to eructate. (E.) ME. belken, belthe, Towneley Myst. p. 314. The sb. bolke is found, in the dat. case, in P. Plowman, ll. v. 397; and the vb. bolken, Prompt. Parv. p. 43. AS. bealcen, 'Ps. xviii. 2; commoner in the derived form bealcetan, 'Ps. xlii. 1; Ps. cxviii. 17; also bealcen, bealcetan (Grein). Cf. Du. balcken, to bray, Du. bulken, Low G. bolken, to low, bellow, roar; Hamburg böcken, to low; obpöcken, to belch up (Kichey). Allied to Bellow.

BELDAM, an old woman. (F.-L.) Ironically used for beldame, i. e. fair lady, in which sense it occurs in Spenser, F. Q. iii. 2. 43. Cf. 'beldame, meretrice'; Palsgrave, — F. belle, fair; dame, lady. — L. bella, fair; domina, lady. Hence beldama is a doublet of belladonna.

BELAGUER, to besiege. (Du.) 'In defence of beleaguer' d truth'; Milton, Arcop. ed. Hales, p. 46. We also find the verb to belague; as in 'besieging and belaguering of cities'; Holland's Plutarch, p. 319 (R.); but this is a less correct form. — Du. belageren, to besiege; from prefix be- (as in E.), and leger, a bed, a camp, army in encampment; which is from leggen, to lay, place, cognate with E. lay. [Thus the true E. word is belay; see Note to belay.] The Du. leger is E. lair. +G. belagern, to besiege; lager, a camp; legen, to lay; Swed. belägra, to besiege; läger, a camp; lägga, to lay. See Lair, Lay (1).

BELEMNITE, a kind of fossil. (Gk.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 5. s. 10. So called because shaped like the head of a dart. — Gk. βελωνίτης, a kind of stone, belemnite. — Gk. βέλωνος, a dart, missile. — Gk. βέλων, to cast, throw; also to fall. +Skt. gal, to drop, distill, fall; Brugm. i. § 653.

BELFRY, properly, a guard-tower. (F.-G.) Owing to a corruption, the word is now only used for 'a tower for bells.' Spelt belfroy, Caxton, Godefrey of Boloyne, ch. 153 (p. 277, l. 12). Corrupted from ME. berfroy, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1187; berfroy, King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 2777. — ONorth F. berfroi, berfroit; OF. berfroi, berfroit (also belfroy); cf. Guernesey belfré (Métivier). — MHG. berfroit, berchfrit, a protecting tower. — MHG. berc, protection (from bergen, to protect); and MHG. fride, OHG. fridu (G. friede), a place of security (allied to OHG. frī, cognate with E. free). β. The mod. G. friede means only 'peace,' but OHG. fridu meant also 'a place of security,' and even 'a tower'; so that berfroit meant 'a protecting tower' or 'guard-tower.' ¶ The term was first applied to the towers upon wheels, so much used in the siege of towns. Even the OF. belfroy is used with the sense of 'belfry'; as in 'campanile, quod belfroy dicitur' (dated 1226); in Perts, Monumenta Germaniae, Legg. ii. 257.

BELIE, to tell lies about. (E.) Much Ado, iv. i. 148. 'To belye the truth'; Tyndal, Works, p. 105, l. 2. ME. bilien, bilizen; the pp. bilowen occurs in P. Plowman, B. ii. 22, and in the Ancren Riwle, p. 68. — AS. be-, prefix; and liogan, to lie. See Lie (2).

BELIEVE, to have faith in. (E.) ME. below, Aynbite of Inwyt, p. 151; EE. belde, pt. t. of belief, Layamon, 2856*. The prefix is AS. be- or bi-, substituted for the earlier prefix ge-. — OMerc. geifan, AS. ge-lyfan, geifan (Grein, i. 424), to believe; +Goth. galaubjan, to believe, to esteem as valuable; from galaub, valuable, allied to Goth. liub, dear, equivalent to AS. lēof, Eng. lie; OHG. galaubjan, to believe; whence G. glauben. See Lief. Here AS. lēof represents a Teut. type leub-oz*, and from the 2nd grade (leub) we have the verb laubjan*; which gives (by mutation) the AS. -lyfan, -lyfan, OMerc. -lyfan. Der. belief (ME. believe, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 187), believe-able, believe-er.

BELL, a hollow metallic vessel for making a loud noise. (E.) ME. belle, a bell; Prompt. Parv. p. 30; Layamon, 29441. AS. belle; Voc. 198. 8. Cf. EFries. belle, a bell, Du. bel. — AS. bellan, to bellow, make a loud sound (Grein). BELLADONNA, deadly nightshade. (Ital.—L.) Various reasons have been given for the name; perhaps due to the use of it by ladies to give expression to the eyes, the pupils of which it expands. — Ital. bella donna, a fair lady. — L. bella domina, a fair lady. Bella is the fem. of bellus, handsome; see Beau. Domina is the fem. of dominus, a lord; see Don, sb. Doublet, beldam.

BELLE, a fair lady. (F.-L.) In Pope, Rape of the Lock, i. 8; Fletcher, Beggar's Bush, iv. 4. — F. belle, fem. of beau, fair, goodly. See Beldam and Beau.

BELLOW, to make a loud noise. (E.) Gower uses beluwing with reference to the noise made by a bull; C. A. iii. 203 (b. vii. 3322). From ME. beluen. 'As loude as belueth wind in helle'; Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 713. We also find ME. bellen; as in 'belling' as a bole 'b[ull]'; Will. of Palerne, 1891; from AS. bellan, to make a loud noise, Grein, i. 80. +OHG. bellan, bellan, to make a loud noise. Of imitative origin. β. The suffix -ow is due to the g in the derived AS. form bylgan, to bellow, Martyr, 17 Jan. (in Cockayne's Shrine, p. 52); cf. Icel. belja, to bellow. And see Bell.

BELLOWS, an implement for blowing. (Scand.) ME. below, a bag, used in the special sense of 'bellows.' The pl. belowes was also used in the same sense. — Belowe, or belows, folliis; Prompt. Parv. p. 30. The numerous examples in Mätzner, s.v. bali, show that belowes is the pl. of below, a bag, from Icel. belgr, a bag. Another ME. form is beli, bely, bellows, as in Ch. C. T. i. 351; where Tyrwhitt reads belous. This ME. beli is from AS. belig, a bag. Cf. G. blasbalg = a blow-bag, a pair of bellows. See Belly.

BELLY, the lower part of the human trunk. (E.) ME. bely, pl. belies; also bali, pl. balies; P. Plowman, B. prol. 41, A. prol. 41. Teut. type balgiz*, m. From baelg, 2nd grade of the Teut. root belg-*, as in AS. belg-an, orig. 'to swell out.' Cf. Irish bolg, bag, belly; bolgain, I swell; W. bol, belly. From bhielgh*, to swell. ¶ Bellows is from the pl. of the cognate Scand. form.

Not found in AS., which has only the simple verb langian, to long after, to crave for; Grein, ii. 157. But cf. Du. belangen, to concern; wel belangt, as far as concerns, as for; belangende, concerning; EFries. belangen, to reach, attain to. See Long (1).

BELLOVED, much loved. (E.) ME. belowed, Gower, C. A. i. 106 (l. 1920). It is the pp. of ME. bilufen, biluiven, to love greatly; spelt biluiven in Layamon, l. 39. — AS. prefix be-, bi-, here used intensively; and AS. lyfan, to love. See Love. ¶ The ME. biluiven also means 'to please'; O. Eng. Homilies, i. 257; cf. Du. believen, to please. BELOW, beneath. (E.) ME. biloothe, adv., beneath, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 116. Compounded of prep. bi, be, by; and looh, low, low. See Low (1).

BELT, a girdle. (L.) ME. belt; Chaucer, C. T. 3927 (A. 3929). AS. belt, Voc. 192. 15; cf. Icel. belti; Irish and Gaelic balt, a belt, a border. All from L. baltus, a belt.

The AS. bēl is further allied to Lith. bal-tis, white, GK. phā-sor, bright, SKt. bhān(m), lustre. The Olirish ten is allied to L. tep-ter, to be warm. Two need-fires were lighted on Heliane among the Gael, between which they drove their cattle for purification and good luck; Macbain. See Stokes-Fick, pp. 125, 164.

BELVEDERE, BELVEDERE, a prospect-tower. (F.—Ital.—L.) 'Palaces and belvedere'; Webster, Devil's Law-case, i. 1. 9. = F. belvedere (Hatzfeld). — Ital. belvedere, 'a place of a faire prospect'; Florio, — L. bellus, fair; nidire, to see.

BEMOAN, to moan for, sorrow for. (E.) The latter vowel has been changed, as in moan, ME. bimemen, to bemoan; O. E. þimolles, i. 13. AS. bimōzan; Grein, i. 117. — AS. bi-, prefix; and mōzan, to moan. See MOAN.

Teut. type banki*. See Bank, of which bench is a doublet. Der. bench-^{er}.

BEND (1), to bow, curve. (E.) ME. hendon, bende; 'bende bows, tendo', Prompt. Parv. p. 30. AS. bendan, to bend; Grein, i. 90. allied to AS. bend, a bond (Teut. type bandiz*). From bend, 2nd grade of AS. bindan, to bind. See Bind. — Icel. benda; Swed. bända, to stretch, to strain. ¶ Bend means to strain a bow by fastening the band or string. The vowel e is a mutation of a; so that bendan is for bōndjan*. Cf. bend — a hand; Gower, C. A. iii. 11; bk. vi. 296; F. bender was arc, to bend a bow, to string it.

BEND (2), a slanting band, in heraldry; one of the nine ordinaries. (F.—C.) Spelt bende in Book of St. Albans (1486), pt. ii, leaf c. 1. Perhaps orig. F. (see above), but modified by OF. bende, which was a modification of bande. The Anglo-French bende, in the heraldic sense, occurs in Langtoft's Chron. ii. 434. Cotgrave gives bende, the same as bande; and assigns 'a bend in armory' as being one meaning of bande; see Band (2). The ME. bende also meant a fillet; see Cath. Anglicum, p. 27, note 7.

BENEATH, below. (E.) ME. benethe, Gower, C. A. i. 35; prol. 931; beneathen, Ancren Riwle, p. 390. AS. heneoþan, prep.; below; Grein, i. 91. — Du. beneden, adv. and prep. From AS. prefix be-, by; and neodan, adv., below; Grein, ii. 290. Here -an is an adverbial suffix, and neod- = nid-, seen in AS. nider, adv., below, and nidra, nether, lower. See Nether.

BENEDICTION, blessing. (F.—L.) Shak. has both benediction and benison; the former is really a 'learned' or Latin form, and the latter was in earlier use in English. See Benison. Caxton has benediction, Golden Legend, St. Nicholas, § 7.

BENEFACITOR, a doer of good to another. (L.) Benefactor in North's Plutarch, p. 725; benefactor in Tyndal's Works, p. 216, col. 1; but the word was not French. — L. benefactor, a doer of good. — L. bene, well; and factor, a doer, from facere, pp. factus, to do. Der. benefaction, benefactor.

BENEFICE, a church preferment. (F.—L.) ME. benefic, Chaucer, Prolog. 291. — F. benefice (Cot.) — Late L. beneficium, a grant of an estate; L. beneficium, a kindness, lit. well-doing. — L. beneficere, to benefit. — L. bene, well; and facere, to do. See Beneficium in DuCange. From L. beneficere we have also beneficence, beneficent, beneficial, beneficently, benefic-i-ary; and see benefit.

BENEFIT, a favour. (F.—L.) Rich. quotes from Elyot's Governour, bk. ii. c. 8. § 2: 'And that vertue [beneficence] . . . is called than beneficence; and the deed, vulgarly named a good tourne, may be called a benefit.' ME. benefit, which occurs with the sense of 'good action' in P. Plowman, B. v. 621; Gower, C. A. iii. 187; bk. vii. 3039. — OF. benefait (F. bienfait), a benefit. — L. benefactum, a kindness conferred. — L. bene, well; and factum, done, pp. of facere, to do. ¶ The word has been modified so as to make it more like Latin, with the odd result that bene- is Latin, and -fit (for -fuit) is French! The spelling benefit occurs in Wyclif's Bible, Eccles. xxix. 9.

BENEVOLENCE, an act of kindness, charity. (F.—L.) In Hoccleve, Orison to the Virgin, l. 10. 'He reysed thereby notable summes of money, the whiche waye of the leuynge of this money was after named a benyuolence.' Fabyan, Edw. IV, an. 1475. — F. benivolence, 'a well-willing, or good will; a favour, kindness, benevolence'; Cot. — L. benivolentia, kindness. — L. benivolens, kind; also spelt beniuolens; cf. volens, stem of volens, willing. — L. beni-, from bonus, by-form of bonus, good; and uolo, I wish. See Voluntary. Der. From the same source, benivolent, benivolent-ly.

BENIGHTED, overtaken by nightfall. (E.) In Dryden's Eleonora, l. 57. Pp. of the verb benight. 'Now jealousy no more benights her face'; Davenport, Gondibert, bk. iii. c. 5. st. 16. Coined by prefixing the verbal prefix be- to the sb. night.

BENIGN, affable, kind. (F.—L.) Chaucer has benigne, C. T. 4599 (B 179). — OF. benigne (F. benin). — L. benignus, kind, a contracted form of benigenus*; from beni-, for bonus, by-form of bonus, good; and -genus, born (as in indigenus) from the verb gignere, old form of gignere, to beget. From GEN*, to beget. Der. benign-ly, benign-ant, benign-ant-ly, benign-ly.

BENISON, blessing. (F.—L.) Shak. has benison, Macb. ii. 4. 40; Chaucer has it also, C. T. 9230 (E 1365). Spelt beneyson, Havelok, 1723. — OF. beneyson, beneyson (Godefroy). — L. acc. benedictionem, from nom. benedictio; cf. benedictus, pp. of benedicere, (1) to use words of good omen, (2) to bless. — L. bene, well; and dicere, to speak. Doublet, benediction.

BENT-GRASS, a coarse kind of grass. (E.) 'Hoc gramen, bent'; Wright's Vocabularies, i. 191. AS. beonet, as in Beonet-lāh, mod. E. Bent-ley, in Kemble's Index. Cf. prov. E. benet (E. D. D.) EFries. bente. — OIIG. binz, pinz, MHG. binez, binz, G. binse, bent-grass, coarse grass growing in wet places. Teut. type binul*.

BENUME, to make numb. (E.) Written benum by Turberville; Pynclara's Answer, st. 40. Benum is properly not an infn., but a past part. of the verb benin; and hence Gower has: 'But altogether he is benome The power both of hand and fot' — he is deprived of the power; C. A. iii. 2; bk. vi. 36. And Palsgrave has: 'benome of ones lymbes'; p. 306. Lit. 'taken away'; from AS. be-, prefix, 'away'; and numen, pp. of numan, to take. See Numb.

BENZOLIN, a resinous substance. (F.—Span.—Ital.—Arab.) Spelt benzoin in Lingua, iv. 3, in Old Plays, ed. Hazlitt, ix. 419 (1607). Called also gum benzoin, and (by a singular popular etymology) gum Benjamin. Phillips (1706) calls it 'benjamin or benzoin'. — F. benjoin, 'the aromatically gumme, called benjamin or benzoin'; Cotgrave. The n seems to be a F. addition; Cotgrave also notes that benjoin Français meant 'the hearse maisterwork, or false pelliory of Spain'; showing that benjoin was not a F. word, but Spanish. — Span. benjui, 'benjamin or benzoin, gum-resin'; Neuman. — Ital. benjoin (Torriano); also benzoino. Shown by Engelmann and Dory (and approved by Devic) to be a corruption (dropping the first syllable) of the Arab. name for benzoin, which was lubān jāwi, lit. Javanese frankincense. Perhaps lu- was confused with the Ital. def. art. lo. The Arab. lubān means frankincense, benzoin; Rich. Dict. p. 1256; whilst jāwi means belonging to Java, Javanese. Benzoin really comes from Sumatra, but Devic says that the Arabs regarded Java as a name for that island also; and it is called 'Java minor' by Marco Polo. With Arab. lubān, cf. Heb. levānāh, frankincense, from the root lāvan, to be white (whence GK. λίβαρος).

BEQUEATH, to dispose of property by will. (E.) ME. byquathe, Chaucer, C. T. 7770 (A 2768). AS. be-cweþan, bi-cweþan, to say, declare, affirm; Grein, i. 82, 113. From prefix be- or bi-, and AS. cweþan, to say. See Quoth.

BEQUEST, a bequeathing; a thing bequeathed. (E.) ME. biguete, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 86; but very rare. The usual form is biquide, biguide, biguide (trisyllabic), as in Rob. of Glouc., pp. 381, 384, li. 7826, 7887; which is from prefix be-, and AS. cwida, a saying, opinion, declaration, Grein, i. 176; cf. AS. bi-cweþan, to declare. See Bequeath. β. But biquete is a by-form of biquiste (P. Plowman, C. ix. 94); formed with added -t-, -le, from AS. be-, prefix, and cwis (in ge-cwis), a saying. This sb. cwis represents a Teut. type kwesiz*, Idg. g(w)etis*, formed with suffix -ti- from Idg. base g(w)et*, whence AS. cweþan, to say (Sievers, A. S. Gr. § 232); and becwis is thus a regular derivative of hecweþan, to bequeath.

BEREAVE, to deprive of. (E.) ME. bireue, berue (u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 7653 (D 2071). AS. birēafan, berēafan; Grein, i. 92, 118. — AS. be-, prefix; and rēafan, to rob. See Reave. Der. berest, short for birued (u for v), the pp. of birēafan; berave-ment.

BERGAMOT, a variety of pear. (F.—Ital.—Turk.) F. bergamotte, in Cotgrave, explained as 'a yellow pear, with a hard rind, good for perry; also, the delicate Italian small pear, called the Bergamotte pear'. — Ital. bergamotta, bergamot pear, 'a kind of excellent pears, come out of Turkey'; Torriano. — Turk. beg-armūdi, 'prince's pear.' — Turk. beg, a prince; armūd, a pear. ¶ Another bergamot, the name of an essence, is from the Ital. place-name, Bergamo, in Lombardy.

BERGOMASK, rustic. (Ital.) 'A Bergomask dance'; Shak. Mid. Nt. Dr. v. 360. Explained by Nares as a rustic dance by the clownish people of Bergamo. More correctly Bergamask. — Ital. bergamasca, 'a kind of dance'; Baretti. — Ital. Bergamo (in Lombardy).

BERRY, a small round or ovate fruit. (E.) ME. berye, berie (with one r); Chaucer, prol. 207. AS. berige, berge, Deut. xiii. 24; where the stem of the word is ber-, for bes-, which is for bas-; cf. Dan. bes, bezie, a berry; Icel. ber; Swed. bär, Dan. bær; G. beere, OHG. peri; Goth. bam, a berry. Cf. Skt. bhas, to eat; the sense seems to have been 'edible fruit'. Der. ghost-berry, &c.

sea-room, or the place where a ship lies when at anchor or at a wharf; (2) to a place in a ship to stow things in, or to sleep in; (3) to a comfortable official position. β. The orig. sense was perhaps 'suitable position': cf. prov. E. berth, a good foothold, a secure grasp. Better spelt berth (but cf. E. stern from AS. styrne, &c.); formed with suffix -th (as in bir-th, dear-th) from AS. byr, as in ge-byrian, to suit, ge-byr-e, opportunity, ende-byrd, arrangement, order. From Teut. bur-*, weak grade of ber-an, to bear. Cognate with E.Fries. bort, good time or position, Du. beurt, Norw. byrt, Swed. börd, a course, turn; Low G. bört, as in in der bört ligen, to lie in a good berth (as a ship). Cf. G. gehören, to suit; &c.

BERYL, a precious stone. (L.—Gk.—Skt.) In the Bible (A.V.), Rev. xxi. 20. Spelt beril in An Old English Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 98, l. 174.—L. beryllus, a beryl.—Gk. βήρυλλος; cf. Arab. billaur or ballūr, crystal; a word given in Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 91.—Skt. vaiḍūrya (Prakrit velūriya), orig. beryl, brought from Vidūra in S. India. See Yule, and Max Müller, Selected Essays, 1881, ii. 352; Böhtlingk, Dict. p. 1392.

BESANT, BEZANT, a golden circular figure, in heraldry. (F.—L.—Gk.) Intended to represent a golden coin of Byzantium. ME. besant, Gower, C. From the prefix be-, and ME. sechen, seken, to seek (seken being, usually, the Northern form, and sechen Southern). Cf. Du. bezaken, G. besuchen, to visit; Swed. besöka, Dan. besøge, to visit, go to see. See Seek.

BESSEM, to be becoming. (E.) ME. bisemen, beseмен, 'Be-cemyn, decet'; Prompt. Parv. p. 27. 'Wel bisemeth be'—it well becomes thee; St. Juliana, p. 55. From the prefix be-, bi-; and the ME. semen, to seem. See Seem.

BESSET, to set about, surround, perplex. (E.) ME. bisetten, besetten, especially used of surrounding crowns, &c. with precious stones. 'With gold and riche stones Beset'; Gower, C. BESIDE, prep., by the side of; BESIDES, adv., moreover. (E.) ME. biside, bisiden, bisides, all three forms being used both as prep. and adv. 'His daungers him bisides'; Chaucer, C. T. prol. 402. 'Bisides Scotland'—towards Scotland, said of the Roman wall built as a defence against the Scots; Layamon, ii. 6. AS. be sidan, used as two distinct words; where be means 'by', and sidan is the dat. sing. of side, a side. ¶ The more correct form is beside; besides is a later development, due to the habit of using the suffix -es to form adverbs; the use of besides as a preposition is, strictly, incorrect, but is as old as the 13th century.

BESIEGE, to lay siege to. (Hybrid; E. and F.) ME. bisegen, beseigen. 'To bisigi his castel'; Rob. of Glouc. p. 399; l. 8242. Formed by prefixing be- or bi- to the ME. verb segen, formed from the ME. sb. sege, a siege. See Be- and Siege. Der. beseig-er.

Similarly is used Icel. staddir, circumstanced, the pp. of stefja, to stop, fix, appoint; also Swed. stadd, circumstanced; vars stadt i fara, to be in danger; whence ME. bestad, Cursor Mundi, 5254; 'wors bestad', Spenser, F. Q. vi. 1. 4. The Icel. stefja is from stafa, a place. See Be- and Stead.

BESTIAL, beast-like. (F.—L.) In Rom. of the Rose, 6716.—F. bestial.—L. bestialis, beast-like.—L. bestia, a beast. See Beast.

BESTOW, to place, locate, &c. (E.) ME. bistowen, bestowen, to place, occupy, employ, give in marriage; Chaucer, Troilus, i. 967; C. T. 3979, 5695 (A 3981, D 113). From the prefix be-, and ME. stowe, a place; hence it means 'to put into a place'. See Be- and Stow. Der. be-tow-er, bestow-al.

BESTREW, to strew over. (E.) In Temp. iv. 1. 20. ME. bistrewen, Old Eng. Homilies, p. 5.—AS. be- or bi-, prefix; and strewian, to strew. See Strew.

BESTRIDE, to stride over. (E.) In Shak. Cor. iv. 5. 124. ME. bistriden, Layamon, iii. 118. AS. bestridan; Ælfric, Hom. ii. 136.—AS. be-, prefix; and stridan, to stride. See Stride.

BET, a wager; to wager. (F.—Scand.) Shak. has it both as sb. and verb; Hen. V. ii. 1. 99; Hamlet, v. 2. 170. It is a mere contraction of abet, formerly used both as a sb. and a verb. See Abet. Phillips (1706) has: 'Abet, to encourage, egg, or set on; to maintain, uphold, or back.' Cf. 'The meede of thy mischallenge and abet'; Spenser, F. Q. iv. 3. 11. The verb occurs as early as in Ascham, Toxophilus, 1545, ed. Arber, p. 19: 'ready to laye and bet with [against] him'.

BETAKE, to enter on, take to. (Hybrid; E. and Scand.) ME. bitaken, which was chiefly used in the sense of 'to entrust, deliver, hand over to.' 'Heo sceullef cow þat lond bitaken'—they shall give you the land; Layamon, i. 266. Hence 'to commit'; as in: 'Ich bitake min soule God'—I commit my soul to God; Rob. of Glouc. p. 475; l. 9772. From AS. prefix be- or bi-, and ME. taken, which is a Scand. word, from Icel. taka, to take, deliver. No doubt the sense was influenced by the (really different) AS. betizean, to assign, Grein, i. 95. See Be-, Take, and Teach.

BETEM, to think fit, grant, permit. (E.) In the sense of 'grant'; Shak. M.N.D. i. 1. 131: of 'permit'; Hamlet, i. 2. 141. From an AS. form beteman*, betiman*, to befit, to suit; cf. Friesic bytema (Hetteima), to befit, Low G. betemen (Lübben). From E. prefix be-, and AS. teman*, OSax. teman, E.Fries. temen, G. ziemen, to suit.

BETEL, a species of pepper. (Port.—Malayalam.) Mentioned in 1681; see Arber's Eng. Garner, i. 414; and in 1585 (N.E.D.).—Port. betel, betela.—Malayal. vettila, i.e. veru + ila, 'simple or mere leaf' (Yule). ¶ Used of the leaf (ila) which is chewed with the dried areca-nut.

BETHINK, to think on, call to mind. (E.) ME. bithenken, bithenken, bithinken; Layamon, ii. 531. AS. bithencan, to consider, think about; Grein, i. 121.—AS. bi-, prefix; and þencan, to think; see Think.—Du. and G. bedenken, to consider; Dan. betænke, to consider; Swed. betänka, to consider.

BETIDE, to happen to, befall. (E.) ME. bitiden, Ancren Riwle, p. 278.—ME. prefix bi- or be-, and ME. tiden, to happen; which is from AS. tidan, to happen (Bosworth), from tīd, a tide, time, hour. See Tide.

BETIMES, in good time. (E.) Formerly betime; the final s is due to the habit of adding s or -es to form adverbs; cf. whiles from while, afterwards lengthened to whilst; besides from beside; &c. 'Bi so thou goe bityme'—provided that thou goe betimes; P. Plowman, B. v. 647.—AS. be or bi, by; and tima, time. See Time.

BETOKEN, to signify. (E.) ME. bitakenen, bitokenen, bitokenen; Ormulum, 1717. Just as in the case of believe, q.v., the prefix be- has been substituted for the original prefix ge-. AS. getician, to betoken, signify; Grein, i. 462.—AS. ge-, prefix; and tācn, a token; Grein, ii. 520. See Token. ¶ Observe that the final -en is for -n, where the s is a real part of the word, not the ME. infinitive ending. Cf. Du. betecken-en, Dan. betejgne-e, Swed. beteckna-a, G. bezeichnen-en, to denote.

BETONY, a plant. (F.—Late L.) Spelt betayne, Voc. 568, 13; betony, id. 711, 19; the AF. form was betaine, id. 554, 13.—OF. betoine (Suppl. to Godfrey).—Late L. betonica, Voc. 711, 19; for vetonica, betonica, a plant discovered by a Spanish tribe named Vettones; Pliny, bk. xxv. c. 8.

BETRAY, to act as traitor. (E. and F.) ME. bitrayen, betrayen, Chaucer, Troil. v. 1247. It appears early, e.g. in Rob. of Glouc.

p. 454, l. 9325; in King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1271; and in O. Eog. Misc., ed. Morris, p. 40, l. 104. From the E. prefix be-; and the ME. traien, to betray, of F. origin. [This hybrid compound may have been suggested by beuwar, q. v.] β. The ME. traien is from OF. trair (F. trahir); which is from L. trādere, to deliver. See Tradition. Der. betray-er, betray-al.

BETROTH, to affianse. (E.) ME. hireuthien, to betroth; occurs thrice in Shoreham's Poems, ed. Wright (Percy Society), pp. 66, 70. Subsequently assimilated to Troth. Made by prefixing the verbal prefix bi- or be- to the sb. treuthe, or treawthe; which is from AS. tréowð, troth, truth; Grein, ii. 552. See Troth, Truth. Der. betroth-al, betroth-ment.

BETTER, BEST. (E.) 1. The ME. forms are, for the comparative, both bet (Chaucer, prol. 242) and bette (Chaucer, prol. 256). The former is commonly adverbial, like L. melius; the latter adjectival, L. melior. AS. bet, adv.; betera, adj.; Grein, i. 95. β. Goth. baiten, adj., better; from a base BAT, good. 2. Again, best is short for AS. best (Grein, i. 96), which is an obvious contraction of bet-ist. γ. Goth. baita, baita, best; from the same base BAT. Some compare it with Skt. bhadra-s, excellent; bhand, to be fortunate, or to make fortunate; but wrongly (Uhlenbeck). ¶ The Gothic forms have been given above, as being the clearest. The other forms of better are: Du. beter, adj. and adv.; Icel. betri, adj., better; Dan. bedre; Swed. bättre; G. besser. Other forms of best are: Du. and G. best; Icel. besti, adj., best; Dan. bedst; Swed. bäst. See also Batten (1), Boot (1).

BETWEEN, in the middle of. (E.) ME. bitwene, Rob. of Glouc. p. 371, l. 7654; Gower, C. A. l. 9; prol. 189; AS. be-twunum, earlier be-twunnum, Grein, i. 96. β. AS. be, prep.; and twunum, dat. pl. of twon, double, twin, as in 'bi-sæm twunnum, between two seas'; Grein, ii. 557. β. Twun is an adj. allied to AS. twai, two; and twunum answers to Goth. twainnum, dat. pl. of twainai, two each. Cf. L. bini; also G. zwischen, between, from zwei, two. See Two.

BETWIXT, between. (E.) Formed (with excrement t) from ME. betwixe, betwixen; Chaucer, C. T. A. 2132. AS. betwuxa, betwuxa, betwuxa, Grein, i. 96. From be, by; and twix*, answering to twiuk in Goth. twiuk-nai, two each; allied to AS. twai, two. A similar word is OFrisic bitwixka, for bitwixka, between; from bi, by, and twiuk, twiuk, between, which is allied to twai, two. Cf. G. zwischen, between, from OHG. zwiue, zwiuk, two-fold; allied to OHG. zwei, twice and G. zwei, two. See Two.

BEVEL, sloping; to slope, slant. (F.) Shaks. has: 'I may be straight, though they themselves be bevel,' i. e. crooked; Sonnet 121. Cotgrave has: 'Biveau, m. a kind of squire [carpenter's rule] or square-like instrument, having moveable and compass branches; or, the one branch compass and the other straight: some call it a bevel.' Now, as F. -eau stands for OF. -el, it is clear that E. bevel represents an OF. buevel*, or more probably bevel*, which is not, however, to be found; though baveu, baveu occur in Hatzfeld, s. v. biveau. Godefroy cites a verb baver, 'biaiser,' to slope. We find, too, the Span. bavai, a bevel, accented on the e. The etym. of the OF. word is unknown.

BEVER, a potation; see Beaver (3) above.

BEVERAGE, drink. (F.-L.) Shaks. has beverage, Winter's Tale, i. 2. 346; and see Maundeville's Travels, ch. xii, p. 141. Cotgrave has: 'Bverage, Bverage, drinke, beverage.'—OF. beverage, drink (Supp. to Godefroy); with which cf. OF. beverie, the action of drinking.—OF. bevre, boivre (see bevre in Supp. to Godefroy); to drink; with OF. suffix -age, equiv. to L. -aticum.—L. bibere, to drink. ¶ Cf. Ital. beveraggio, drink; Span. bebaje, drink.

BEVY, a company, esp. of ladies. (F.-L.) Spenser has: 'this bevy of ladies bright,' Shep. Cal. April, 118. On which E. K. has the note: 'Bevy; a bevy of ladies is spoken figuratively for a company or troupe; the term is taken of larks. For they say a bevy of larks, even as a covey of partridge, or an eye of pheasants.' Spelt beue (= beue) in Skelton, Garl. of Laurel, 771; and in the Book of St. Albans (1486), leaf f6: 'A bevy of Ladies. A bevy of Roos (roes). A bevy of Quailis.'—F. bevie, which Mr. Wedgwood cites, and explains as 'a brood, flock, of quails, larks, roebucks, thence applied to a company of ladies generally;' cf. 'Beve des heyrnonis,' a bevy of herons; Wright's Vocab. i. 151. Florio's Ital. Dict. has: 'Beva, a beanie' [bevy]; and mod. Ital. beva means 'a drink.' β. Origin uncertain; but the Ital. points to the original sense as being a company for drinking, from OF. bevre, Ital. bevere, to drink. Cf. Ital. beverare, to water cattle (Torriano). See Beverage.

BEWAIL, to wail for, lament. (E. and Scand.) ME. biwailen, biwailen; K. Alisander, ed. Weber, 4395. From the prefix be-; and ME. wailen, to wail, of Scand. origin. See Wail.

Beware, to be wary, to be cautious. (E.) This is now written as one word, and considered as a verb; yet it is nothing but the two words be ware run together; the word ware being here an adjective, viz. the ME. war, for which the longer term wary has been substituted in mod. E. 'Be war thefor' = therefore be wary, Chaucer, C. T. 4539 (B 119). 'A ha! felawes! be war of swiche a lape!' = aha! sirs, beware (lit. be ye wary) of such a jest; Chaucer, C. T., 13369 (B 1239). The latter phrase cannot be mistaken; since beuk is the imperative plural of the verb. So also: 'Whi nolden hit be war?' Polit. Songs, p. 217. Cf. AS. war, adj., wary, cautious. See Wary.

Bewilder, to perplex. (E.) Dryden has the pp. bewilder'd; tr. of Lucretius, bk. ii. l. 11. Made by prefixing be- to the prov. Eng. wildern, a wilderness, shortened to wilder by the influence of the longer form wilderness, which would naturally be supposed as compounded of wilder- and -ness, whereas it is rather compounded of wildern- and -ness, and should, etymologically, be spelt with double n. For examples of wildern, a wilderness, see Halliwell's Dictionary, and Layamon's Brut, l. 1238. β. Thus bewilder (for bewildern) is 'to lead into a wilderness,' which is just the way in which it was first used. Dryden has: 'Bewilder'd in the maze of life' (as above); and Addison, Cato, i. 1. 49, has: 'Puzzled in mazes, . . . Lost and bewildered in the fruitless search.' γ. There is thus no reason for supposing it other than a purely native word, though other languages possess words somewhat similar. Cf. Du. verwildern, to grow wild, verwildert, uncultivated; Dan. forvilde, to lead astray, bewilder, perplex; passive forvildet, to go astray, lose one's way; Swed. fwilla, to puzzle, confound; Icel. wilr, bewildered, astray; willa, to bewilder. ¶ The Scandinavian words show that the peculiar sense of E. bewilder has a trace of Scandinavian influence. See Wilderness. Der. bewilder-ment (modern).

Bewitch, to charm with witchcraft. (E.) ME. biwischen, bewischen; spelt biwischen (unusual) in Layamon, ii. 597, where the later MS. has twischen. From prefix be- or bi-; and AS. wiccian, to be a witch, to use witchcraft, in Thorpe's Ancient Laws of England, ii. 274, sect. 39, from AS. wicea, f., a witch. See Witch. Der. bewitch-ment, bewitch-ery.

Bewray, to disclose; properly, to accuse. (E.) In A. V. Matt. xxv. 75; and, for numerous examples, see Eastwood and Wright's Bible Wordbook. ME. besurien, buresyen; Chaucer has buresye, to disclose, reveal. C. T. 6530 (D 948), and also the simple verb surye in the same sense, C. T. 3593. β. Prefix be-, and AS. wrgan (for wur-gan), to accuse; 'agnounen nine wrgan,' they began to accuse him, Luke, xxiii. 2. So also OFris. biwrgan, to accuse. Cf. Icel. rægia (orig. urragia), to slander, defame; Swed. roja, to discover, betray; Goth. wrgan, to accuse; G. rügen, to censure. These are denom. verbs, formed from a sb. which appears as Goth. wurk, an accusation; Icel. ríg, a slander; cf. G. rüge, censure. Fick, iii. 310. Perhaps allied to AS. wearg, a criminal, Goth. gawargjan, to condemn.

BEY, a governor. (Turkish.) 'The By . . . in their language a Duke;' Hakluyt, Voy. ii. pt. i. p. 168. —Turk. big (pron. nearly as E. bay), a lord, a prince; Rich. Dict., p. 310. Cf. Persian 'baig, a lord; a Mogul title; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 102.

BEYOND, on the farther side of. (E.) ME. beyonde, biyonde, beyownden; Maundeville's Travels, pp. 1. 142; 314. AS. begondan, Matt. iv. 25.—AS. be-, and gond, gond, prep., across, beyond; with adv. suffix -an. See gond in Grein, i. 497; and cf. AS. be-gonnan, beyond; Sweet, O. E. Texts, p. 535. And see Yon, Yonder.

BEZEL, the sloping edge of a chisel; the sloping facets of a cut gem; the part of a ring in which the stone is set, and which holds it in. (F.-L.) Also spelt basil. It occurs in Cotgrave's Dict., who explains F. biseau by 'a bezel, bezeling, or scuing [i. e. skewing]; such a slopeness, or slope form, as is in the point of an iron leaver, chizle, &c.' The E. basil is generally used of the sloping edge to which a chisel is ground; the application to the ring relates to the sloping edge or rim of metal round the stone. The F. biseau had an older spelling bisel (noted by Roquefort), from which E. bezel and basil are corruptions.—OF. bisel, which Roquefort explains by 'en pente; angle imperceptible;' the true sense being, apparently, 'a sloping edge;' cf. Span. bisel (accented on a), a basin, bezel; the edge of a looking-glass, or crystal plate. [Looking-glasses sometimes have a slanted border, so as to be thin at the edge.] β. Origin unknown; perhaps (as Diez remarks) it contains the L. bis, double. Körting, § 1326, Supp., suggests biis-al*; see Bias.

BEZIQUE, a kind of cards. (F.-Pers.) Spelt bazique in Macmillan's Mag., Dec. 1861, p. 138. An error for F. basique, also spelt béz (Littre). The former is prob. from Pers. bazickah, sport, a game; the latter may be the Pers. bāzi, play.—Pers. bāzidan, to play. Cf. Pers. bāzgar, a juggler, which perhaps suggested the form bezique. (Doubtful.)

BEZOAR, a kind of stone. (F.-Port.—Arab.—Pers.) Bezoar-stone is in Ben Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, v. 4.—MF. bezoar, 16th cent. spelling of F. bézoard, according to Brachet. Cotgrave has: 'Bezoard, a Bezar stone.—Port. bezoar; see Brachet, who remarks that the word was introduced from India by the Portuguese; and cf. Span. bezaar in Pineda. — Arab. bāḏārah (with b for p). — Pers. pād-zahr, the bezoar-stone, also called zahr-dārā; Palmer's Pers. Dict. coll. 105, 328. So called because it was a supposed antidote against poison. — Pers. pād, expelling; and zahr, poison; Rich. Dict. pp. 228, 315, 790. And see Yule; and Hom. § 273.

BEZONIAN, a beggarly fellow. (F.—Ital.) In 2 Hen. IV, v. 3. 118. Formerly bisonian; formed with suffix. — (Jan from F. bisogne, spelt bisogne in Cotgrave, 'a filthy knave . . . bisonian'. — Ital. bisogni, pl., 'new-levied soldiers such as come . . . needy to the wars'; Torriano. — Ital. bisogno, want; of doubtful origin.

BI-, prefix. (L.) Generally Latin; in bias, it is F., but still from L. — L. bi-, prefix = dui-; cf. L. bellum for duellum. — L. duo, two. Cf. Gk. bi-, prefix, from duo, two; Skt. dvi-, prefix, from dva, two; AS. twi-, prefix, from twā, two. See Fick, i. 625. See Two. In L. bi-ni, two each, bi- is for bis, twice. In ME. the prefix bi- occurs as another spelling of the prefix be-; see Be.

BIAS, an inclination to one side, a slope. (F.—L.) Spelt biais in Holland's Pliny, bk. xxvii. c. 4 (on the Aloe, l. 2). — F. biais, a slant, a slope. — L. acc. bifacem, used by Isidore of Seville in the sense of squinting, of one who looks sidelong. This is not wholly satisfactory; but see P. Toynbee, Hist. Gr. § 273.

BIB, a cloth on an infant's breast. (I.) Used by Beaumont and Fletcher, The Captain, iii. 5. It must have meant a cloth for imbibing moisture, borrowed, half jokingly, from the ME. bibben, to tipple, imbibed, used by Chaucer, C. T. 4160 (A 4162): 'This miller hath so wisely bibbed ale.' This, again, must have been borrowed directly from L. bibere, to drink, and may be imagined to have been also used jokingly by those familiar with a little monkish Latin. Hence wine-bibber, Luke, vii. 34, where the Vulgate has bibens unum. — Skt. pibāmi, I drink; Olrish ibim, for pibim, I drink. Der. from the same source; bibber, bib-ud.

BIBLE, the sacred book. (F.—L.—Gk.—Egypt.) ME. bible, byble; Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 244; P. Plowman, B. x. 318. — F. bible. — Late L. biblia, fem. sing.; for L. biblia, neut. pl. — Gk. βιβλία, a collection of writings, pl. of βιβλίον, a little book; dimin. of βιβλος, a book. — Gk. βύβλος, the Egyptian papyrus, whence paper was first made; hence a book. Of Egypt. origin; cf. Paper. Der. *bibl-*ic-al.

BIBLIOGRAPHY, the description of books. (Gk.) Modern. From Gk. βιβλίον, for βιβλίον, a book; and γράφω, to write. See Biblo. Der. *bibliograph-*ic-al; and from the same source, *bibliograph-*er.

BIBLIOLATRY, book-worship. (Gk.) Used by Byrom, Upon the Bp. of Gloucester's Doctrine of Grace (R.). From Gk. βιβλίον, for βιβλίον, a book; and λατρεία, service; see Idolatry.

BIBLIOMANIA, a passion for books. (Gk.) Modern. From Gk. βιβλίον, for βιβλίον, a book; and μανία, also of Gk. origin; see Mania. Der. bibliomania-c.

BICE, a pale blue colour; green bice is a pale green. (F.) The true sense is 'grayish.' Borrowed from F. bis, fem. bice, which Cotgrave explains as 'brown, dusky, blackish.' He gives too: 'Roche bise, a hard, and *bleu*ish rocke, or quarry, of stone.' Cf. F. bis blanc, whitey-brown; OF. azur bis, grayish blue; vert bis, grayish green. Spelt bise in Skelton, Garlande of Laurell, l. 1158. The word was found also in Italian as bigio, grayish. Origin unknown; see Dier.

BICKER, to skirmish. (E. or F.) ME. bikere, P. Plowman, B. xx. 78; biker, sb., a skirmish, Rob. of Glouc. p. 538; l. 11147; but it is most commonly a verb. Apparently formed, with frequentative suffix -er, from the verb biken, to thrust with a pointed weapon, King Allisander, 2337; which may be a variant of ME. beken, to peck; from OF. bequer, to strike with the beak (see Beak), or from AS. becen, a pickaxe. Cf. Du. bikken, to notch a mill-stone; EFries. bikern, to hack, gnaw, from bikken, to hack, bikke, a pickaxe.

BICYCLE, a two-wheeled velocipede. (Hybrid: L. and Gk.) A hybrid substitute for two-wheel; in use since 1868. Coined from Bi- and Cycle.

BID (1), to pray. (F.) [Bid, to pray, is nearly obsolete; but used in what is really a reduplicated phrase, viz. 'a bidding prayer.' To 'bid beads' was, originally, to 'pray prayers.' See Bead.] ME. bidden, to pray, P. Plowman, B. vii. 81. AS. biddan, to pray (in common use) of conj. 5; pt. t. bæd, pp. beden. — Du. bidden, to pray; Ollg. pittan, G. bitten, to pray, request. These are strong verbs, and so are Icel. biðja, Swed. bedja, Dan. bede, to pray, beg, and Goth. biðjan, to pray, ask, notwithstanding the weak form of the infinitive. Teut. type bedjan-. It has been suggested that the Teut. bedjan- (2nd grade bad*) was a new strong verb substituted for beidan-* (2nd grade baid*), from the Idg. root BHEIDH, to which we may refer Gk. βιβω, and L. fides, but not bid (2). Brugm. i. § 589; ii. § 890. See Bide.

BID (2), to command. (E.) [Closely connected as this word appears to be with E. bid, to pray, it is certainly from a different root, and can be traced more easily. It has been assimilated to bid in spelling, but should rather have taken the form bede.] ME. bede, Chaucer, C. T. 8236 (E 360). AS. bedan, to command (common) of conj. 2; pt. t. bæd, pp. boden. — Du. bieden, to offer; Icel. biðja; G. beten; Goth. biðan, only in comp. ana-biðan, to command, four-biðan, to forbid. Allied to Skt. bodhaya, to cause to know, inform, causal of budh, to awake, understand; Gk. βιβωμαι, βιβωμαι, I enquire, learn, understand. Teut. type beidan-*; from the root BHEUDH, to awake, observe; Fick, i. 162; Brugm. i. § 213. Confused in E. with bid (1). Der. *bidd-*er, bidd-ing.

BIDE, to await, wait. (E.) ME. bide, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 307. AS. bidan, Grein, i. 122; of conj. 1; pt. t. bæd, pp. biden. — Du. beiden; Icel. biða; Swed. bida; Dan. bie; Goth. beidan; OHG. pitan (prov. G. beiten). Teut. type beidan-*; from the root BHEIDH; cf. L. fidere, to trust. Brugm. i. § 202. See also Abide.

BIENNIAL, lasting two years. (L.) 'The Duke is there but biennial'; Howell, Letters, vol. i. let. 41 (1621). — L. biennalis, the same as biennus, adj., for two years. [The second i in biennial is due to confusion with the ab. biennium, a space of two years.] — L. bi-, two, double; and annalis, lasting for a year, which becomes annalis in composition. — L. annus, a year. See Annual. Der. *biennial-*ly.

BIER, a frame on which a dead body is borne. (E.) ME. beere, Prompt. Parv. p. 32; beere, Layamon, 19481. AS. bær, Grein, i. 78. — AS. bær, 3rd grade of beran, to bear. — Du. baar; OHG. bära (G. bahre); allied to Icel. barar, fem. pl.; and to L. fer-e-trum; Gk. φίερρον. See Bear (1). The present spelling is due to F. bière, a bier.

BIESTINGS, BEESTINGS, the first milk given by a cow after calving. (E.) Very common in provincial English, in a great number of differing forms, such as biastins, biastins, &c. AS. bysting, byst (for bist*), thick milk; from AS. bicost, first milk after calving. We find, in Voc. 127. 35, and 129. 2, byst*, bysting, flicce meole = biest, biestings, thick milk. — Du. bies, biestings; G. biestmilch, biestings. All from a Teut. base beust-*.

BIFFIN, a large rosy winter apple. (F.—L.; with E. suffix.) Prov. E. beefin; Suffolk. I have also heard them called beefing apples (correctly). 'As red as a beefin from her own orchard'; Godwin, Caleb Williams (1794), p. 63. Beefing refers to the beef-like colour. From beef; with suffix -ing (N. E. D.). See Beef.

BIFURCATED, two-pronged. (L.) Pennant, British Zoology, has 'a large bifurcated tooth'; Richardson. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, h. ii. c. 6. § 2, has the sb. bifurcation. — Late L. bifurcatus, pp. of bifurcare, to part in two directions. — L. bifurcus, two-pronged. — L. bi-, double; and furca, a fork, prong. See Fork.

BIG, large. (Scand.) ME. big, Chaucer, Prol. 546; Havelok, 1774; bigge, 'rich, well-furnished, Prick of Conscience, ed. Morris, 1460; see also Minot's Poems, Edward at La Hogue, l. 83. Being used by Minot and Hampole, it was probably at first a Northern word, and of Scandinavian origin; cf. Agelric Bigga, Kemble, C. D., vi. 191. β. Allied to prov. E. bug, fine, bug, boastful; so that the base is byg-, mutated from bug-, weak grade of Teut. beugan-*, to bow or bend; see Bow (1); from the notion of swelling out. Cf. Norw. bugge, a strong man (prov. E. a big bug); Dan. bugne, to bulge; also Swed. dial. bogt, (1) a bend, (2) strength.

BIGAMY, a double marriage. (F.—L. and Gk.) 'Bigamie is . . . twice-wifing'; Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, i. 449. — F. bigamie. — L. bigamia. 'Bigamy (bigamia)', . . . is used for an impediment to be a clerk, Anno 4 Edw. l. 5; Blount's Law Dictionary. A hybrid compound; from L. prefix bi-, twice, q. v., and Gk. -γάμια, from γάμος, marriage; imitated from Gk. bigamia, a double marriage, which is from Gk. bi-, twice, and a form -γάμια, derived from γάμος, marriage. The Gk. γάμος, marriage, is from γα-, weak grade of GEN-*, to beget. Brugm. i. § 437 (2). Der. *bigam-*ist.

BIGGIN, BIGGEN, a night-cap. (F.) In Shak. 2 Hen. IV, iv. 5. 27. — MF. begin, 'a biggin for a child'; Cot. He also gives beginner, to put on a biggin. Palsgrave has: 'Biggyne, a woman that lyveth chaste'; and 'Byggen, for a chylde heed'; for both words he gives F. beginne. Doubtless named from a resemblance to the caps worn by the nuns called Béguines, who, as Cotgrave remarks, 'commonly be all old, or well in years.' See Beguine. Biggin also occurs as a spelling of piggin.

BIGHT, a coil of a rope; a bay. (E.) ME. byght, a bend; Gawain and the Grene Knight, l. 1349. AS. byht, as in wateres byht, a bight (bay) of water; Grein, i. 151. Cf. Dan. and Swed. bugt, used in both senses, viz. (1) the bight of a rope; and (2) a bay; also G. bucht, a bay. β. The AS. byht (for buhit*) is from AS. bug-, weakest grade of bug-an, to bend; with mutation of n to y. See Bow (1).

BIGOT, an obstinate devotee to a particular creed, a hypocrite. (F.) In Blount's Gloss. (1656) we find: 'Bigot, an hypocrite, &c.' as in Cotgrave. — F. bigot, which Cotgrave explains thus: 'An old Norman word (signifying as much as de par Dieu, or our for God's sake [he means by God] and signifying) an hypocrite, or one that seemeth much more holy than he is; also, a scrupulous or superstitious fellow.' a. The word occurs in Wace's Roman du Rou, ii. 71, where we find: 'Mult ont Francis Normanz laidiz E de mefaiz e de mediz, Sovent lor dient reproveris, E clament bigoz e draschiers,' i.e. the French have much insulted the Normans, both with evil deeds and evil words, and often speak reproaches of them, and call them bigots and dreg-drinkers (Dietz); see Drachier in Godefroy. Roquefort quotes further from the Roman du Rou, fol. 228, in which the word occurs again: 'Sovent dient, Sire, por coi Ne tolez la terre as bigos;' i.e. they often said, Sir, wherefore do you not take away the land from these barbarians? b. The origin of the word is unknown. The old supposition that it is a corruption of by God, which is an English phrase, is mere 'popular etymology,' and inconsistent with the facts. Bigot occurs already in the 12th century, 'in the romance of Girart de Roussillon, as the proper name of some people, apparently of the south of Gaul; N. E. D. It is not, however, a corruption of Visigoth, as has been absurdly suggested. 'Hue le Bigot' occurs in Wace, Roman de Rou, l. 8571. Mr. Wedgwood's guess that it arose in the 13th century is disproved at once by the fact that Wace died before A.D. 1200. y. At the same time, it is very likely that this old term of derision may have been confused with the term beguin, which was especially used of religious devotees. See Beguin. And it is a fact that the name was applied to some of these orders; some Begutta of the order of St. Augustine are mentioned in a charter of A.D. 1518; and in another document, given by Ducange, we find: 'Regardus et Begutta et Begutta sunt viri et mulieres tertii ordinis;' and again Begutta are mentioned, in a charter of A.D. 1499. This transference of the nickname to members of these religious orders explains the modern use of the term. Dor. bigot-ry.

BLJOU, a trinket, jewel. (F.-C.) Modern; and mere French. = F. bijou. Perhaps of Celtic origin; cf. Breton bizon (Corn. bzon), a ring with a stone. - Bret. biz, W. bys, a finger; Stokes-Fick, p. 175.

BILBERRY, a whortleberry. (Scand. and E.) 'As blue as bilberry,' Shak. Merry Wives, v. 5. 49. This form is due to the Jutland bilbær (Keilberg), Dan. bilbær, the bilberry; where bær is a berry. Cf. M.Dan. bille, a boss, protuberance (Kalkar); perhaps allied to Boll (2); from bhl, weak grade of Teut. bhel-, to swell; cf. Goth. ubswellan, to swell up. We also find Swed. dial. biljon, biljen, bölen, pl. bilberries. ¶ In the North of England we find bleaberry or bleaberry, i.e. a berry of a dark, livid colour; cf. our phrase 'to beat black and blue.' Blue is the Icel. blár, dark livid, Dan. blau, Swed. blå, dark-blue; whence Icel. Málar, Dan. blåmar, Swed. blåmar, a blackberry. See Blue. Hence both bil- and blau- are Scandinavian; but -berry is English.

BILBO, a sword; BILBOES, fetters. (Span.) Shak. has both bilbo, Merry Wives, i. 1. 165, and bilboes, Hamlet, v. 2. 6. Both words are derived from Bilboa or Billao in Spain, 'which was famous, as early as the time of Pliny, for the manufacture of iron and steel.' Several bilboes (fetters) were found among the spoils of the Spanish Armada, and are still to be seen in the Tower of London. See note by Clark and Wright to Hamlet, v. 2. 6.

BILE (1), a secretion from the liver. (F.-L.) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1708. - F. bile, which Cotgrave explains by 'choller, gall'; &c. - L. bilis, bile, anger. L. bilis is for bidis*; Brugm. i. § 877; cf. W. bual, Bret. beul, bile; Stokes-Fick, p. 175. Dor. bili-ary, bili-ous.

BILE (2), a boil; Shak. Cor. i. 4. 31. (F.) ME. byle, Prompt. Parv. See Boll (2).

BILGE, the belly of a ship or cask. (F.-C.) It means the protuberant part of a cask or of a ship's bottom, i.e. the belly, and is merely another form of bulge, adapted from OH. bulga, mod. F. houge, which still means 'bulge' of a cask, &c. b. Hence the vb. to bilge, said of a ship, which begins to leak; but it occurs still earlier in a transitive sense, to stave in a ship's bottom. This verb to bilge is also written to bulge; see examples in Richardson, s.v. bulge; and Kersey's Dict., s.v. bilged. y. Bilge-water is water which enters a ship when lying on her bilge, and becomes offensive. See Bulge.

BILL (1), a chopper; a halberd; sword. (E.) ME. bil, sword, halberd, Layamon, i. 74; 'Bylle of a mattoke, ligo, marra,' Prompt. Parv. p. 36. AS. bil, bill, a sword, axe, Grein, i. 116. + OSax. bil, OHG. bill, n. Teut. type biljom*, neut. Cf. G. биле, fem. a pick-axe. Cf. Skt. bil, bhil, to break, to divide, Benfey, p. 633; which is probably related to Skt. bhid, to cleave. See Bite.

BILL (2), a bird's beak. (E.) ME. bile, Owl and Nightingale, 79. AS. bile; Voc. 318. 13. Teut. type biliz*? Allied to Bill (1).

BILL (3), a writing, account. (F.-L.) ME. bill, a letter, writing; Chaucer, C. T. 9811 (E 1937). - AF. bill, Polit. Songs, p. 231. l. 11; found in F. in the dimin. billot. - Lat. bill, a writing, with dimin. billota; bullata is also found, with the same meaning, and is the dimin. of L. bull. b. It is certain that bill is a corruption of L. bull, meaning 'a writing; a schedule' in medieval times; but esp. and properly 'a sealed writing,' from the classical L. bull, a stud, knob; later, a round seal. See Bull (2), Bullet, Bulletin.

BILLET (1), a note, ticket. (F.-L.) Shak. has the vb. to billet, to direct to one's quarters by means of a ticket; to quarter; Cor. iv. 3. 48. Spelt bylet, Prompt. Parv. = AF. billate, l., Stat. Realm, i. 338 (1353); cf. F. billet, m.; dimin. of AF. bill, a ticket, note, writing. See Billet (3). We sometimes use billet-doux for 'love-letter'; see Pope, Rape of the Lock, l. 118, 138. It is mere French, and means, literally, 'sweet letter'; from F. billet, letter, and doux (L. dulcis), sweet.

BILLET (2), a log of wood, block. (F.) In Shak. Measure, iv. 3. 58. Spelt bylet, Prompt. Parv. = F. billate, 'a billet of wood; also, a little bowle'; Cot. Cf. F. billot, a billet, block, or log of wood; id. Dimin. of F. bill, a log of wood; in Cotgrave, 'a young stock of a tree to graft on.' This F. bill corresponds to Med. L. bill, billus, a branch, trunk of a tree; of unknown origin.

BILLIARDS, a game with balls. (F.) Shak. has billiards, Ant. and Cleop. ii. 5. 3. - F. billard, billart, 'a short and thick truchon, or cudgell; . . . a billard, or the stick wherewith we touch the ball at billiards'; Cot. He also has 'a Bill, to play at billiards'; and 'a bill, a small bowl or billiard ball; also, a young stock of a tree to graft on; but these may be two distinct words, formed by suffix -ard, from F. bill, signifying 'a billiard ball,' as explained by Cotgrave, and answering to Ital. biglia, 'a billiard ball' (Naretti); which Dietz derives from MHG. bickel, a pick-axe, also a die to play with which is doubtful. Korting, § 1307.

BILLION, a million of millions. (F.-L.) From F. billion, 'a million of millions.' Cot. A coined word, to express 'a double million; from L. bi-, double; and -illion, the latter part of the word million. So also trillion, to express 'a treble million,' or a million times a billion. ¶ The mod. F. billion now means 'a thousand millions.'

BILLOW, a wave. (Scand.) Not in very early use. It occurs in Gascoigne's Jocasta, Act iii. chorus, l. 24. - Icel. bylgja, a billow; Swed. bylg; Dan. bylge; + MHG. bulge, a billow, also a bag; OIIG. bulga. The Icel. bylgja has mutation of u to y; and is derived from bulg, weak stem of the root which appears in AS. belgan, to swell, esp. to swell with anger; a billow means 'a swell,' a swelling wave. Cf. Prov. G. (Hamburg) bulgen, a billow (Richey). From BIHELGH*, to swell; see Belly. Dor. billow-y.

BIN, a chest for wine, corn, &c. (C.) ME. binne, bynne, Chaucer, C. T. 595 (A 593). AS. binna, a manger, Luke, ii. 7. 16. + Du. ben, a basket; G. benne, a sort of basket. Said to be ultimately of Celtic origin; cf. F. banne, a tilt of a cart, from I. banna, a car of osier, body of a cart, noticed by Festus as a name of Gaulish origin. And cf. W. ben, a cart. Celtic type bennā*: Stokes-Fick, p. 168. ¶ Sometimes confused with bing, which is a distinct word.

BINARY, twofold. (L.) In Holland's Plutarch, p. 665. - L. binarius, consisting of two things. - L. bin, two each. - L. bi-, double, for his, twice. See Bi-, prefix.

BINNACLE, a box for a ship's compass. (MSpan.-L.) Modern; a singular corruption of the older form bitacle, due to confusion with bin, a chest. Only the form bitacle appears in Todd's Johnson, as copied from Kersey's Dict., viz. 'a frame of timber in the steerage of a ship where the compass is placed.' Spelt bitable in Phillips (1658). MSpan. bitacula (Minsheu); Port. bitacola; Span. bitacora. Cf. F. habitable, a binnacle; prop. an abode. - L. habitable, a little dwelling, whence the Port. and Span. are derived by loss of the initial syllable. - L. habitare, to dwell; frequentative of habere, to have. See Habit. ¶ The 'habitable' seems to have been originally a sheltered place for the steersman. The earliest E. quotation has the spelling bitable; Naval Accounts for 1485, ed. A. Opeheim, p. 56.

BINOCULAR, suited for two eyes; having two eyes. (L.) 'Most animals are binocular;' Derham, Phys. Theol. (1713), bk. viii. c. 3, note a. Coined from bin- for L. bin, two each; and oculus, an eye. See Binary and Ocular.

AS. brid, bridd, a bird; but especially the young of birds; as in earnnes brid, the young one of an eagle, Grein, i. 142. The manner in which it is used in early writers suggests the idea that it was considered as 'a thing bred;' but it can hardly be connected with AS. brēdan, to breed, as the Teut. type would be brīdjoz* or brēdjoz*. Der. bird-bolt, bird-cage, bird-call, bird-catcher, bird-time, bird's-eye, &c.

BIRETTA, a clerical cap. (Ital. — L. — Gk.) Spelt berretta in Hall's Sat. iv. 7. 52, ed. 1598. — Ital. berretta (Baretto); beretta (Forriano), a cap; cf. Late L. birrētum, orig. a scarlet cap. — Late L. birrus, hurrus, reddish; see Bureau.

It is chiefly found at Schneeberg in Saxony. The F. bismuth, like the E. word, is borrowed from German; and this word is one of the very few German words in English. — G. bismuth, bismuth; more commonly wismut, also spelt wismut, wismuth; of these, wismut first occurs, in Georg Agricola (died in 1555), who also has the L. form bismutium (Weigand). Origin unknown.

BISON, a large quadruped. (F. or L. — Gk. — Teut.) In Minshen, ed. 1627. Also in Cotgrave, q.v. Either from F. bison (Cot.) or from L. bison (Pliny). — Gk. βίον, the wild bull, bison; Pausanias, ed. Bekker, 10. 13 (about A. D. 160). Borrowed from Teutonic; cf. AS. wesend, a wild ox, Bosworth; Icel. visundr, the bison-ox; OHG. wisunt, G. wisent, a bison. ¶ The word is Teutonic rather than Greek, and only borrowed by the latter. See OHG. wisunt in Schade.

In Holland's Pliny, bk. xviii. c. 25. — Late L. bissextilis annus, the bissextile year, leap-year. — L. bissextus, in phr. bissextus dies, an intercalary day, so called because the intercalated day (formerly an extra day after Feb. 24) was likewise called the sixth day before the calends of March (March 1); so that there were two days of the same name. — L. bi-, twice; and sex, six.

BISSON, purblind. (E.) Shak. has bisson, Cor. ii. 1. 70; and, in the sense of 'blinding,' Hamlet, ii. 2. 529. ME. bisen, bisne, purblind, blind; Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, ii. 472, 2822. OE. bisene, pl. blind, Matt. ix. 27, in the Northumb. version, as a gloss upon L. caeci. β. Perhaps derived from the prefix bi-, be-, with a privative sense, as in E. be-head, and the AS. sb. siēn, syn, sin, power of seeing, sight, allied to Goth. siuns, OSax. siun, Icel. sjón, syn, Dan. syn, sight; so that bi-sēne might mean 'sightless.'

BISTRE, a dark brown colour. (F. — G.?) Bister, Bistre, a colour made of the soot of chimneys boiled; Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. — F. bistre; of uncertain origin. Perhaps from G. biesder, meaning (1) bistre, (2) dark, dismal, gloomy (in prov. G.); Flügel. It seems reasonable to connect these. Cf. also Du. bijster, confused, troubled, at a loss; Pomeran. bister, bewildered, dark. [Dan. bister, grim, fierce, Swed. bister, fierce, angry, grim, Icel. bistr, angry, knitting the brows, may be unrelated.]

AS. bitol, dimin., as a gloss to frænum in Ps. xxxi. 12 (Spelman). † Du. gebit; Icel. bitill (dimin.); Swed. bett; Dan. bid; G. gebiss. Compare these forms with those in the article above.

BITCH, a female dog. (E.) ME. biche, bicche, Wright's Vocab. i. 187. AS. bicea (Hosworth). † Icel. bikja; MDan. bikke; allied to Icel. grey-baka, a bitch (Noreen).

BITE, to cleave, chiefly with the teeth. (E.) ME. bite, biten, pt. t. bat, boit, P. Plowman, B. v. 84. AS. bītan; pt. t. bāt, pp. bīten. Grein, i. 123. † Du. bijten, to bite; Icel. bita; Swed. bita; Dan. bide; OHG. pīzan; G. beissen; Goth. beitan. Teut. type bēitan-, pt. t. bait, pp. bītanaz*. Allied to L. findere, pt. t. fidī, to cleave; Skt. bhid, to break, divide, cleave. — ✓ BHEVID, to cleave. Der. bite, sb.; Icel. bit-er, bit-ing; bitt-er, q.v.; bit, q.v.

BITTER, obnoxious to the taste. (E.) ME. biter, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 82. AS. biter, bitor, bitter, Grein, i. 120. † Du. bitter; Icel. bitr; Swed. and Dan. biter; OHG. pītar (G. bitter); Goth. baitrs (rather an exceptional form). β. The word orig. meant 'sharp' or 'biting'; and is derived from AS. bit-, weak grade of bītan, to bite. Goth. baitrs is from bait-, second grade of bītan. See Bite. Der. bitter-ly, bitter-nass, bitter-s; also bitter-sweet, Prompt. Parv. p. 37.

BITTERN, a bird of the heron tribe. (F. — Late L.) ME. bitore, bytour, Chaucer, C. T. 6554 (D 972). — F. butor, 'a bitor'; Cot.; whence Low L. butōris, a bittern. Prob. named from its cry; cf. L. būtire, būtire, to cry like a bittern; whence also L. būtio, said to mean a bittern, though it is a variant of būleo, a buzzard. See Boom (1). β. The mod. L. name botaurus is due to a fanciful derivation from L. bōs taurus; taurus being used by Pliny, b. x. c. 42, for a bird that bellows like an ox, which is supposed to be the bittern. ¶ On the suffixed -n see Mätzner, i. 177; and see Marten. We actually find viserne for visor; Three Met. Romances, ed. Robson, p. 15.

BITTS, a naval term. (Scand.) The bitts are two strong posts standing up on deck to which cables are fastened. [The F. term is biltes, but this may have been taken from English.] The word is properly Scand., and the E. form contracted; in fact, the oldest form is beetes (1593); in Arber's Eng. Garner, v. 509. Prob. suggested by Swed. betings, a bit (nant. term); cf. betingsbult, a bit-pin; Dan. beding, a slip, bitts; betingsbult, a bit-bolt; bedingsknee, a bit-knee; &c. [It has found its way into Du. and G.; cf. Du. beting, betinghout, a bit; G. bätting, a bit; bättingholzer, bitts.] β. The word probably arose from the use of a noose or tether for pasturing horses, or, in other words, for bitting them. Cf. Swed. bēta, to pasture a horse; whence betingsbult, as if a pin for tethering a horse while at pasture. Cf. Icel. betings, grazing; bēta, to graze cattle, also, to yoke horses to a vehicle. See Bait. ¶ The word bait is Scand., showing that the Du. and G. words are borrowed. The E. word, on the other hand, may be native; cf. AS. ge-būte, a bridle, bītan, to rein in; bätting, a rope for fastening; all from bät, mutation of bät, and stem of bätan, to bite.

BITUMEN, mineral pitch. (L.) Milton has bituminous; P. L. x. 562. [Shak. has the pp. bitumend, Peric. iii. 1. 72. — F. bitume (Cotgrave).] — L. bitumen, gen. bituminis, mineral pitch; used by Virgil, Geor. iii. 451. Der. bituminous, bituminous.

BIVALVE, a shell or seed-vessel with two valves. (F.—L.) In Johnson's Dict. — F. bivalve, bivalve; both, adj. and sb. — L. bi, double; and valva, the leaf of a folding-door; gen. used in the pl. valvae, folding-doors. See Valve.

BIVOUCAC, a watch, guard; especially, an encampment for the night without tents. (F.—G.) Oddly spelt 'bivouac or bivouac', in Phillips, ed. 1706. Borrowed from F. bivouac, also spelt bivouac, bivouac, in Richelieu (1680); see Hatzfeld. — G. bewache, a guard, a keeping watch; introduced into F. at the time of the Thirty Years' War, 1618-1648 (Brachet). — G. bei, by, near; and wachen, to watch; words cognate with E. by and watch respectively. β. Or rather, from the Swiss bewacht (in Stalder, ed. 1812, ii. 426), a term 'used in Aargau and Zurich to denote the patrol of citizens (Schaar-wache) added (bei-gegeben) to assist the ordinary town-watch by night at any time of special commotion. This remaining of a large body of men under arms all night explains the original sense of bivouac;' N. E. D. Cf. Dietz, s. v. bivac, p. 525.

BIZARRE, odd, strange. (F.—Span.) In Dryden, Pref. to Maiden Queen. Merely borrowed from F. bizarre, strange, capricious. 'It originally meant valiant, intrepid; then angry, headlong; lastly strange, capricious;' Brachet. — Span. bizarro, valiant, gallant, high-spirited. In Mahn's Webster, the word is said to be 'of Basque-Iberian origin; i. e. from Basque bizarra, a beard.' The transference of sense would be like that in Span. hombre de bigote, a man of spirit, usually referred to bigote, a moustache. But this is certainly risky. Hatzfeld notes that F. bizarre was also spelt higuerre (see Cotgrave), and that its sense was influenced by F. bigarrer, to diversify. See Korting, § 1446.

BLAB, to tell tales. (E.) Often a sb.; Milton has: 'avoided as a blab;' Sams. Agon. 495; but also blabbing; Comus, 138. ME. blabbe, a tell-tale; see Prompt. Parv. p. 37; and Chaucer, Troil. iii. 300 (v. r. labbe). The verb more often occurs in early authors in the form blabber, ME. blabber; see Prompt. Parv. p. 37. 'I blabber, as a chylde dothe or [ere] he can speke;' Palsgrave. 'I blabber;' P. Plowman, A. v. 8. All are (like blab) imitative verbs, and may be considered as E. Similar are Dan. blabbe, to babble, to gabble; an Old Norse form blabba is cited by Rietz; Swed. dial. blabba, blaffra, to wrattle, Rietz; G. plappern, to blab, babble, prate; Gael. blabhar, a stammerer, stutterm; blabhadh, babbling, garrulous; blabair, a babbler; MDu. labben, to babble; Dan. dial. blaffra, to babble. See Blab, Blab, Blubber.

BLACK, swarthy, dark. (E.) ME. black, Chaucer, C. T. 2132 (A 1130). AS. blac, blac, Grein, i. 124. Cf. AS. blac, Icel. blak, ink; Dan. blak, sb., ink; Swed. bläck, ink, bläck, to smear with ink; Swed. dial. blaga, to smear with smut (Rietz). So also OHG. black, ink. ¶ Origin obscure; connexion with Du. blaken, to burn, scorch, is uncertain; so also that with L. flagrare, Gk. φλέγω. Connexion with black is probable; see N. E. D., and Noreen, Gr. § 149 (2); and OHG. blak in Schade. Der. black, black; black-ly, black-ish, black-ness, black-en; also blackamoor (spelt blackmoor in Beaumont and Fletcher, Mons. Thomas, v. 2), black-ball, black-berry, black-bird, black-cock, black-frier, black-guard, q.v., black-ing, black-lead, black-letter, black-maid, black-rood, black-smith, black-thorn, &c.

BLACKGUARD, a term of reproach. (Hybrid; F. and F.) From black and guard, q.v. A name given to scullions, turnspits, and the lowest kitchen menials, from the dirty work done by them. In the Accounts of St. Margaret, Westminster, p. 10, under the date 1532, we find: 'item, received for iiij. torches of the black guard, viijl.' See Brand's Popular Antiquities, ed. Ellis, ii. 316. In Like Will to Like (1568), p. in Dodsley's Old Plays, ed. Hazlitt, iii. 323, we find: 'Thou art served as Harry Hangman, captain of the black guard.' 'They are taken for no better than rakehells, or the devil's black guards;' Stanhurst, Desc. of Ireland, ed. 1808, vi. 68. 'A lamentable case, that the devil's black guards should be God's soldiers;' Fuller, Holy War, bk. i. c. 12. 'Close unto the front of the chariot marcheth all the sort of weavers and embroiderers; next unto whom goeth the black guard and kitchenry;' Holland, Ammanius, p. 12. 'A lousy slave, that within this twenty years rode with the black guard in the Duke's carriage, 'mongst spits and dripping-pans;' Webster, The White Devil, A. i. See Trench's Select Glossary.

BLAND, gentle, mild, affable. (L.) [The ME. verb blanden, to flatter (Shoreham's Poems, p. 59), is obsolete; we now use blandish.] The adj. bland is in Milton, P. L. v. 5; taken rather from L. directly than from F., which only used the verb; see Cotgrave. — L. blandus, caressing, agreeable, pleasing. Brugm. i. § 413 (9). Der. bland-ly, bland-ness; also blandish, q.v.

The first syllable is supposed to be for blasphē*, i.e. hurtful, allied to Blasphē, hurt; the latter syllables are due to σπῆ, I say. Blaspheme is a doublet of blame. See Blame and Fama. Der. blasphem-y (ME. blasphemie, Ancren Riwe, p. 198; a F. form of L. blasphemia, from Gk. blasphemia); blasphem-er, blasphem-ous, blasphem-ously. BLATANT, noisy, roaring. (E.) Best known from Spenser's 'blatant beast;' F. Q. vi. 12 (heading); also blatant, id. vi. 1. 7. The suffix -ant is a fanciful imitation of the pres. part. suffix in French. Cf. prov. E. blate, to bellow, to roar; blate, noise (E. D. D.). Of imitative origin. Cf. bleat; and Gk. παράλιν (base φλάσ), to bluster, splutter.

BLAY, a bleak (small fish). (E.) Cotgrave has F. able, 'a blay, or bleak, fish.' AS. blæge. †Du. blai; G. bleike. Allied to Bleak (2).

BLAZE (1), a flame; to flame. (E.) ME. blase, a flame, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 212; blazen, to blaze, id. B. xvii. 232. AS. blæse, blase, a torch, John, xviii. 3; also a flame; in comp. hæl-blæse, a bright light, Grein, i. 77. Teut. type blason-*, cf. We also find AS. blaz; 'facula, blaze', Mone, Quellen, 402. 61. Cf. MHG. blas, a torch; also G. blasse, Icel. blási, Swed. bläs, a 'blaze' or white mark on a horse (or in E., on a tree). Cf. Blazon (1) and Blare.

BLAZON (1), a proclamation; to proclaim. (Scand.) Shak. has blazon, a proclamation, Hamlet, i. 5. 21; a trumpeting forth, Sonnet 106; also, to trumpet forth, to praise, Romeo, ii. 6. 26. This word is a corruption of blaze, in the sense of to blaze abroad, to proclaim. The final n is due to confusion with blazon in the purely heraldic sense; see below. †Blazon, to proclaim, from ME. blasen, is from a Scand. source, see Blaze (2); whilst the heraldic word is French, but from a Teutonic source; see below.

BLAZON (2), to portray armorial bearings; an heraldic term. (F.—Teut.) ME. blasen, blasoun, a shield; Gawain and Grene Knight, l. 828. — F. blason, 'a coat of arms; in the 11th century a buckler, a shield; then a shield with a coat of arms of a knight painted on it; lastly, towards the fifteenth century, the coats of arms themselves;' Brachet (who gives it as of Teutonic origin). β. [Burguy remarks that the Provençal blez had at an early period the sense of glory, fame; just as the Span. blason means honour, glory, as well as blazonry; cf. Span. blasonar, to blazon, also, to boast, brag of.] But the earliest sense, both in F. and E., is simply 'shield'; and the reference may be to its brightness or to bright marks on it; cf. Icel. blási, Swed. blis, a 'blaze' or white mark on a horse. There is thus, perhaps, a connexion with Blaze (1). Korting, § 1460. † Notice blāsan*, or dyscray arms, describo; and blāsan* of arms, describo; Prompt. Parv. p. 38. Shields probably bore distinctive marks of some kind or other at a very early period. Der. blazon-ry.

BLEACH, vb., to whiten. (F.) ME. blechen, to bleach, Ancren Riwle, p. 324, l. 1. AS. blēcan; Ælfred, tr. of Beda, ed. Smith, i. 1. 1. 20. — AS. blāc; see Bleak (1). †Icel. bleikja; Dan. blege; Swed. bleka; Du. bleeken; G. bleichen. Teut. type blāikan-*. From the adj. bleak, wnn, pale (below). Der. bleach-er, bleach-ery, bleach-ing. BLEAK (1), pale, exposed. (Scand.) ME. bleyke, 'pallidus'; Prompt. Parv. p. 39; bleik, Havelok, 470. — Icel. bleikr, pale, wan; Dan. bleg; Swed. blek, pale, wan. †AS. blāc; Du. bleek, pale; OHG. pleik, pale; G. bleich. Teut. type blāikan-; from blāik, 2nd grade of blēkan-* (AS. blēcan), to shine. Cf. Slavonic base blig-*, as in blisk- for blig-* sk, to shine; Miklosich. Der. bleak, sb., see below; bleach, q.v.

BLEAK (2), a kind of fish. (Scand.) Spelt bleak about A.D. 1613; Eng. Garner, ed. Arber, l. 157; bleke in Palsgrave (1530). Named from its bleak or pale colour. See above. Cf. Low G. bleken, a bleak. Cf. Blay.

BLEAR ONE'S EYE, to deceive. (E.) This is closely connected with blear-eyed. Shak. has 'bleared thin eye' = dimmed thin eye, deceived; Tam. Shrew, v. 1. 120. So too in Chaucer, and in P. Plowman, B. prol. 74. β. The sense of blear here is 'to dim', as with weeping. See Blear-eyed.

BLEAR-EYED, dim-sighted. (E.) ME. 'blereyed, lippus'; Prompt. Parv. p. 39; blere-nyed, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 324. Cognate with Low G. bleer-oged, having weak and inflamed eyes, variant of blarr-oged, the same; from blarren (Pomeran. blaren), to blubber. See Blare.

BLEAT, to make a noise like a sheep. (E.) ME. bleten, used also of a kid; Wyclif, Tobit, ii. 21. AS. blētan, to bleat, said of a sheep, Ælfrie's Gram., ed. Zupitza, p. 129; OMerc. blētan, Corp. Glos. 282. †Du. blaten, to bleat; OHG. plāzan, to bleat. Teut. type blētan-*. Cf. Russ. blejate, to bleat; L. flere, to weep.

BLEB, a small bubble or blister. (E.) We also find the form blub, in the same sense. Rich. quotes blubs from More, Songs of the Soul, conclusion. Jamieson gives 'Bruiks, bylis, blubhis, and blisteris'; qu. from Roul's Cursing, Gl. Compl. p. 330. The more usual form is blubber, ME. bluber; 'bluber upon water, bouteillie,' Palsgrave. 'Bloubre, blubry, burbulium, Prompt. Parv. p. 40. 'At his mouthe a blubber stode of some' [foam]; Test. of Crescide, by R. Henrysoun, l. 192 (Thynne's edition). β. By comparing blubber, or blubber, with bubble, having the same meaning, we see the probability that they are imitative, from the action of forming a bubble with the lips. See also Blubber, Blab, Blub.

BLED, to lose blood. (E.) ME. bled, P. Plowman, B. xix. 103. AS. blēdan, to bleed (Grein). — AS. blōd, blood. See Blood. † The change of vowel is regular; the AS. f is the mutation of ð. Cf. feet, geese, from foot, goose; also deem from doom.

BLEMISH, a stain; to stain. (F.—Scand.) ME. blemishen; Prompt. Parv. 'I blemyshe, I hynder or hurte the beautye of a person'; Palsgrave. — OF. blesmir, blemir, pres. part. blemis-sant, to wound, soil, stain; with suffix -ish, as usual in E. verbs from F. verbs in -ir. — OF. blesme, bleme, wan, pale. Origin uncertain; if the s in blesme is unoriginal, it may be (as Diez says) from Icel. blami, a bluish or livid colour. — Icel. blár, livid, bluish; cognate with E. blue. The orig. sense, in that case, may have been to render livid, to heat black and blue. See Blue. † The Icel. blami is in the Suppl. to Vigfusson; Asen gives Norw. blame, a bluish colour, and Kalkar has MDan. blam, the mark of a bruise, p. 330.

BLENCH, to shrink from, start from, flinch. (E.) [Sometimes spelt blanch in old authors; though a different word from blanch, to whiten.] ME. blenche, to turn aside, P. Plowman, B. v. 589. AS. blencan, to deceive; Grein, l. 127. †Icel. blekja (for blekja*), to impose upon. Origin doubtful; but apparently a causal form of blink; thus to blench meant originally to 'make to blink', to impose upon; but it was confused with blink, as if it meant to wink, and hence to flinch. See Blink. † Cf. dreneh, the causal of drink.

BLEND, to mix together. (Scand.) ME. blenden, Towneley Mysteries, p. 225; pp. blent, Sir Gawain and the Grene Knight, l. 1610. From the stem of the pres. t. (1 p. blend, 3 p. blendr) of Icel. blanda, to mix; Swed. blanda; Dan. blende. †Goth. blandan sik, to mix oneself with, communicate with; OHG. plantan, blantan, to mix. β. The Goth. blandan is a str. vb. of the 7th conjugation. † The AS. blendan means to make blind, Grein, l. 127. See Blind.

BLESS, orig. to consecrate. (E.) ME. blesen, Chaucer, C. T., E. 553, 1240; bletsen, Layamon, 32157. AS. blētsan, to bless (Grein); blēsan, Vespasian Psalter, lii. 9, v. 13; ONorthumb. bloedsia, Matt. xxiii. 39, Jo. viii. 48; Durham Ritual, p. 117. These forms point to a Teut. type blētsan-*, to reddens with blood, from blōd, blood. See Blood. † In heathen time it was no doubt primarily used in the sense of consecrating the altar by sprinkling it with the blood of the sacrifice; † I. Sweet, in Anglia, iii. 1. 150 (whose solution I here give). This is generally accepted. Der. bles-ing, bles-ed, blessedness.

BLIGHT, to blast; mildew. (E.) The history of the word is very obscure; as a verb, blight occurs in The Spectator, no. 457. Cotgrave has: 'Brulure, blight, burnt-corn (an herb);' where 'blight' means 'smut in wheat'; though it seems to be confused with the herb named blight. β. The word has not been traced, and can only be guessed at. Perhaps it answers to an AS. blīht*, OMerc. bleht*, and so to Icel. blett, a spot, stain; just as E. right answers to AS. riht, OMerc. reht, and Icel. reitr (for reitr*). If so, we may refer it to blīleg*, Gk. φλέγω, to burn; just as right is from REG*. † Comparison with AS. blecra, in Sweet's O.E. Texts, p. 548, is not quite safe, because blecra is a gloss to L. utiligo; and though this L. word is by Sweet translated by 'blight,' the proper sense of it is a tetter, or cutaneous eruption (Lewis).

BLIND, deprived of sight. (E.) ME. blind, bynd, Prompt. Parv. p. 40. AS. blind, Grein, l. 128. †Du. blind; Icel. blindr; Swed. and Dan. blind; OHG. plint, G. blind. Teut. type blindaz*; from an Idg. base blēn-*; whence also Lith. blęsti-s, to become dim (as the sun). Brugm. i. § 493. Der. blind-fold.

BLINDFOLD, to make blind. (E.) From ME. verb blind-folden, Tyndale's tr. of Lu. xii. 64. This ME. blindfolden is a corruption of blindfalden, to blindfold, whence blindfold, used by Palsgrave; and, again, blindfalden (with excrement d) is for an earlier form blindfellen, Ancren Riwle, p. 106. — AS. blind, blind; and fyllan, to fill, to strike. Thus it meant 'to strike blind.' See Fell (1). † The popular form had reference to folden a bandage over the eyes.

BLINDMAN'S BUFF. (E.) 'To play at blindman's-buff'; Randolph, Works, p. 394 (1651), ed. Haslitt (cited by Palmer). It is mentioned earlier, in the Prolog. To the Return from Parnassus (1606). And, in 1598, Florio explains Ital. binda by 'a play called hoodman blind, blind hob, or blindman's buff.' Here buff is the F. buffe, 'a buffet, blow, cuff, box, whirrel, on the ear,' &c.; Cotgrave. From OF. bufe (a word widely spread); see further under Buff (2). The explanation is given by Wedgwood as follows:— 'In West Flanders buf is a thump; buffen, to thump, buf spelen, a game which is essentially blindman's buff without the bandaging of the eyes. One player is made the butt of all the others, whose aim is to strike him on the back without his catching them. When he catches the boy who gave him the last buffet, he is released and the other takes his place. See De Bo, West-Flemish Dict. See also Koolman, East-Frisian Dict., who quotes the phrase dat gied up'n blinden buf, that is done (lit. goes at hap-hazard (lit. at blind buff). And see buf in Diez.

BLINK, to wink, glance; a glance. (Scand.) Shak. has 'a blinking idiot'; M. of Ven. ii. 9. 54; also 'to blink (look) through'; Mid. Nt. Dr. v. 178. Probably of Scand. origin; cf. Norw. blinka, to blink with the eyes, blink, a glimpse; MDan. blinkjet, with blinking eyes (Kalkar). ME. blenken, commonly 'to shine, to glance'; (Gawain and the Grene Knight, ed. Morris, 799, 2315. The AS. blencun meant 'to deceive' (perhaps 'to cause to blink'). Allied to AS. blanc, white (as in blanca, a white horse); see BLANK. Cf. also Du. blinken, Low G. blenken, to shine.

BLISS, happiness. (E.) ME. blis, Chaucer, C. T. Group B, 33. AS. blis, bliss (Grein); a contraction from AS. blids or blidh, happiness, Grein, i. 130. = AS. blīde, happy. See BLITH. OSax. blizza, blid-sea, happiness. Teut. type blid-sū*, f., for blid-tū*; the suffix being -tū, as in L. lati-tia. The sense was influenced by bliss, which is unrelated. Der. bliss-ful, bliss-ful-ly, bliss-ful-ness.

BLITE, a plant-name. (L.) (Gk.) In Turner's Herbal (1551). = L. blitum. = Gk. βλίτον, a kind of pot-herb.

BLISTER, a little bladder on the skin. (F. = Teut.) ME. blister, in The Flower and The Leaf, wrongly ascribed to Chaucer, l. 408. Also blester, as in Cursor Mundi, 6011. = OF. blestre, 'tumeur'; Godefroy. Of Teut. origin; from Icel. blíst (dat. blístri), the blast of a trumpet, the blowing of a bellows; also, a swelling, mortification (in a medical sense). No also Norw. blaester, a blast, a kind of tumour; cf. Swed. blåsa, a bladder, a blister. The root appears in Du. hazen, Icel. blása, Swed. blåsa, to blow. See BLAST, BLAZE (2). Der. blister, verb.

BLITHE, adj., happy. (E.) ME. blithe, Chaucer, Prol. 846; Havelock, 651. AS. blīde, sweet, happy; Grein, i. 130. = Icel. blidr; Swed., Dan. blid; Du. blide; OSax. blīdi, bright (said of the sky), glad, happy; Goth. blēths, merciful, kind; OHG. blidi, glad. Teut. types blithoz*, blithjoz*. Der. blithe-ly, blithe-ness, blithe-some, blithe-some-ness.

BLLOAT, to swell. (Scand.) Not in early authors. 'The history of the word is obscure. 'The bloat king' in Hamlet, iii. 4. 182, is an editorial alteration of 'the bloot king'; it means 'effeminate' rather than bloated. We find 'bloat him up with praise' in the Prolog. to Dryden's Circe, l. 25; but it is not certain that the word is correctly used. However, bloated is now taken to mean 'puffed out', 'swollen', perhaps owing to a fancied connexion with blow; but the ME. form was blout, soft (hence puffy, swollen), Havelock, 1910. β. The word is connected with the Icel. blötna, to become soft, to lose courage; blautr, soft, effeminate, imbecile; cf. Swed. blöt, soft, pulpy; also Swed. blåta, to steep, macerate, sop; Dan. blød, soft, mellow. [These words are not to be confused with Du. blout, naked, G. bluss.] The Swedish also has the phrases lägga i blöt, to lay in a sop, to soak; blötna, to soften, melt, relent; blöfisk, a soaked fish. The last is connected with E. blotter. See BLASTER. γ. Further allied to Icel. blandr, soft; AS. blacp, G. blode, weak. Cf. Gk. φλυδ-άω, I become soft or flabby. See FLUID.

BLLOATER, a prepared herring. (Scand.) 'I have more smoke in my mouth than Would blote a hundred herrings;' Beaumont and Fletcher, II. Princess, ii. 5. 'Why, you stink like so many blloat-herrings, newly taken out of the chimney;' Ben Jonson, Masque of Augurs, 17th speech. There can hardly be a doubt that Mr. Wedgwood's suggestion is correct. He compares Swed. blöt-fisk, soaked fish, from blöta, to soak, steep. Cf. also Icel. blautr-fiskr, fresh fish, as opposed to harðr-fiskr, hard, or dried fish; whereon Mr. Vigfusson notes that the Swedish usage is different, blöfisk meaning 'soaked fish'. Thus a blooter is a cured fish, a prepared fish. They were formerly 'steeped for a time in brine before smoking;' N. E. D. See BLIAT.

BLOND, fair of complexion. (F.) In Evelyn's Diary, July 25, 1683. Caxton has blonde (N. E. D.). Not in Johnson. Blonde-lace is a fine kind of silken lace, formerly of the colour of raw silk; a blonde is a beautiful girl of light complexion. = F. 'blond, m., blonde, f., light yellow, straw-coloured, flaxen; also, in hawkes or stags, bright tawny, or deer-coloured;' Cot. Origin unknown. β. Referred by Diez to Icel. bláundun, mixed; cf. AS. blonden-feas, with hair of mingled colour, gray-haired. But the Late L. form is blundus (whence also Span. blondo, Ital. blondo), prob. of Teut. origin, and allied to Skt. bradh-na-s, reddish, pale yellow (Kluge). Cf. OSlav. broni, white.

BLOOD, gore. (E.) ME. blod, blood, Chaucer, C. T. 1548 (A 1546). AS. blōd (Grein). = Du. bloed; Icel. blōð; Swed. blod; Goth. blōth; OHG. bluot; G. blut. Teut. type blō-dōm*, neut. Doubtfully referred to the root of Blow (2), blood being considered as the symbol of flourishing life; cf. L. florēre, to flourish; see Curtius, i. 375. Der. blood-hound, blood-shed, blood-stone, blood-y, blood-i-ly, blood-i-ness; also bleed, q.v.

BLOOM, a flower, blossom. (Scand.) ME. blome, Havelock, 63; but not found in AS. = Icel. blóm, m., blómi, m., a blossom, flower; Swed. blomma; Dan. blomme. Cf. OSax. blōmo (Heliand); Du. bloem; OHG. blomo, m., bluoma (G. blume), f.; Goth. blōma, a flower. Teut. type blō-mon*, m., from blō*, to blow, flourish; cf. L. flō-s, a flower, flō-rēre, to flourish. The E. form of the root is blow; see Blow (2). ¶ The truly E. word is blossom, q.v.: the corresponding AS. blōma, 'a bloom', is mod. E. bloom, but only in the secondary sense of 'a mass of hammered iron'.

BLOSSOM, a bud, small flower. (E.) ME. blosme, blossum; Prompt. Parv. p. 41. But the older form is blōstme, Owl and Nightingale, 437; so that a t has been dropped. AS. blōstma [misprinted bōstma], Grein, i. 131. = Du. bloesem, a blossom; cf. MHG. bluost, a blossom. β. Formed, by adding the suffixes -t and -ma, to the base blōs (cf. L. flō-rēre, for flō-rē*); extended from blō in AS. blōwan, to flourish, bloom. ¶ When the Idg. suffix -mon (> AS. -ma, Icel. -m) alone is added, we have the Icel. blómi, E. bloom. When the suffix -t alone is added, we have the MHG. bluost. See Blow, to flourish; and see Bloom.

BLOT (1), a spot, to spot. (F. = Teut.) ME. blot, blotte, sb., blotten, vb. 'Blotte vpon a boke, oblitum; Blottyn bokys, oblittero.' Prompt. Parv. p. 41. = MF. blotter, 'to blot, stain, blemish, defile;' Cot. Apparently from MF. blotte, also bloutre, 'a clod, or clot of earth'; Cot. The same as OF. bloustre, blotte, bloutre, a clot of earth turned up by the plough-share, Roquefort; see bloute in Godefroy. See Blotch.

BLOT (2), at backgammon. (Du.) A blot at backgammon is an exposed piece. The expression 'made a blot', with reference to the game of tables, occurs in Dryden, Wild Gallant, 1. 3. It corresponds, as Mr. Wedgwood well points out, to the Dan. blot, hare, naked; cf. the phrase give sig blot, to lay oneself open to commit or expose oneself. Cf. Swed. blöt, naked; blotta, to lay oneself open. = Du. blot, naked; blotstellen, to expose. Calisch, in his Du. Dict., has: 'Ik kan niet spelen zonder mij blot te geven (at chess, draughts, &c.), I cannot play without unguarding myself.' The word is Dutch; from which the Dan. and Swed. forms were perhaps borrowed; the cognate G. word is blots; which see in Kluge.

BLOTCH, a pustule, a blot. (F. = Teut.) The sense 'pustule' is the older. Dryden has 'their blotch'd and blister'd bodies'; Moscs, bk. ii. 328. = OF. blache, 'tumeur'; Godefroy, s. v. blote, also bloustre. Prob. of Teut. origin; cf. MDu. bluyster, a blister; Hexham. See Diez.

BLOUSE, a loose outer garment. (F.) Modern. = F. blouse, a smock-frock. Of unknown origin.

BLOW (1), to puff. (E.) ME. blowen; in Northern writers, blaw; very common; Chaucer, Prol. 567 (A 565). AS. blāwan, Grein, i. 131. = OHG. blāhan, G. blāhen, to puff up, to swell. = L. flāre, to blow. = WHL. flō, to blow; Brugmann, ii. § 664. ¶ The number of connected words in various languages is large. In English we have bladder, blast, blaze (to proclaim), blazon, blare (of a trumpet), blister, &c.; also statulent, inflare.

BLOW (2), to bloom, flourish as a flower. (E.) ME. blowe, Rob. of Glouc. ed. Hearn, p. 352, l. 7232. AS. blōwan, to bloom, Grein, i. 131. = Du. bloeyen, to bloom; OHG. bluojan (G. blühen). Cf. L. flō-rēre, Fick, iii. 222; thus flō-rēre is co-radicate with blow. See Bloom, Blossom, Blood, Blade. From the same root BHLQ, to flourish, are flōurish, flōur, flōwer.

BLOW (3), a stroke, hit. (E.) ME. blowe; 'blowe on the cheke, ponce; bloue with ones lyst, sufflet;' Palgrave. The AS. form does not appear; but we find MDu. blawen, pt. t. blau, to strike, Kilian; and Du. blowen, to dress flax. [The MDu. word is native and genuine, as the strong pt. t. blau, i. e. struck, occurs in a quotation given by Onkenmans.] = G. blāuen, to beat with a beetle; cf. blāuel, a beetle; OHG. blāwen, to beat; Goth. bliggwan, to beat. Teut. type blirwan-, or blenwan-, to strike. The history of the word is obscure. Almost the earliest quotation is 'He gat a blow,' Wallace,

i. 348 (ab. 1470). It looks as if the Du. word had been borrowed, and made to coincide in form with Blow (1).

BLUBBER, a bubble; fat; to bubble or swell up; to weep copiously. (E.) Of imitative origin; thus (1) blubber, ME. blober, a bubble, spelt blouber in Prompt. Parv., is an extension of bleb or blob, a blister; see extracts a. v. bleb. (2) The fat of the whale consists of bladder-like cells filled with oil. (3) A blubber-tipped person is one with swollen lips; also spelt blubber-tipped, and in the Digby Mysteries, p. 107 (ed. Furnivall, p. 90), blabrytipped; so that it was probably more or less confused with blabber, q. v. (4) To blubber, to weep, is ME. bloberen. Palsgrave has: 'I blober, I wepe, je pleure.' But the older meaning is to bubble, as in: 'The borne [bourn] blubred therinne, as hit boyled hade'; Gawain and the Green Knight, l. 2174. Cf. EFries. blubber, a bubble, a blob of fat; blubbern, to bubble. See bleb, blob.

BLUDGEON, a thick cudgel. (F.?) Rarely used; but given in Johnson's Dictionary. It has a short history; the N. E. D. says it occurs in Bailey's Dict., ed. 1730; but it is not in ed. 1731. The Corn. blogen (with g as y), a bludgeon, occurs in the Corn. miracle-play De Origine Mundi, l. 2709 (14th cent.?). See Phil. Soc. Trans. 1869, p. 148; prob. taken from E. It is prob. of F. origin. Godefroy has bloquet, blachet, as dimin. of blac, a block of wood. This suggests a form blochon* as a possible source, likewise from blac.

BLUE, a colour. (F.—OHG.) ME. bleu, bleu; Chaucer, C. T., F. 644; Rom. Rose, 1578.—AF. bleu, bleu; OF. bleu, bleu.—OHG. blān, blue, livid; G. blau, a-Icel. blár, Swed. blå, Dan. blau, livid [whence ME. blō, livid, P. Plowm. B. iii. 97]; also blān, blue (O. E. Texts, p. 588). Teut. type blawaz*. Cognate with I. flannus, yellow. With the sense 'livid' compare the phr. 'to beat black and blue.' See Notes on E. Etym., p. 11. Der. bluish, blue-bell, blue-buffs.

BLUFF (1), downright, rude. (Dutch?) Not in early authors. Rich. cites 'a remarkable bluffsness of face' from 'The World, no. 88; and the phrase 'a bluff point', i. e. a steep headland, now shortened to 'a bluff' from Cook's Voyages, bk. iv. c. 6. Origin uncertain; but a sailor's word, and prob. corrupted from Dutch. Cf. MDa. blaf, flat, broad; blaffert, one having a flat broad face; also, a boaster, a libertine; Oulemans. And Mr. Wedgwood quotes from Kilian the phrases 'blaf aensicht, facies plana et ampla; blaf van voorhoofd, fronto, i. e. having a broad forehead, though Hexham says 'the flat of a forehead.' y. If the MDa. blaffert, having a flat broad face, is the same word as when it has the sense of 'boaster,' we can tell the root. The mod. Du. blaffen, a boaster, signifies literally a barker, yelp, noisy fellow; from blaffen, to bark, to yelp. See below.

BLUFF (2), to impose upon by boastful demeanour, to crow by bragging. (Low G.) Modern; and partly a cant word. Perhaps the same as bluff*, to blind-fold, in Kay's N. Country Words (1691). Cf. Low G. bluffen, to bluff; verbluffen, to confuse; Bremen Wirt. (1767); EFries. blaffen, to yell, also to bluff; allied to MDa. blaffen, to mock (Hexham); EFries. blaffen, to bark, yelp. Of imitative origin. See Bluff (1).

BLUNDER, to flounder, to act stupidly. (Scand.) ME. blondren, to pore over a thing, as in 'we blondren euer and pouren in the fyr'; Chaucer, C. T. 16138 (G 670). Blondren and hasty; Trevisa, ii. 169. 'I blonder, je perturie.' Palsgrave's F. Dict.—Norw. blundra, to close the eyes. Formed, with frequentative suffix -ra (for -era), from Icel. blunda, to doze, slumber; so that it meant 'to keep dozing'; to be sleepy and stupid. Cf. Swed. blunda, to shut the eyes; Dan. blunde, to nap; Jutland blunde, to doze, to blink. We find also Icel. blundr, Dan. and Swed. blund, a doze, a nap. The sense of 'confusion' suggests a relationship to Blind.

BLUNDERBUSS, a short gun. (Hybrid; F.—L. and Du.) Used by Pope, Dunciad, iii. 150. For blunderbus; see quot. (dated 1617) for 'harguesbuss, plantin-buss, alias blunder-buss, and musketoon'; Sir D. Scott, The Brit. Army, i. 405. This is from Du. planten, as in het geschut planten, 'to plant ordnance'; Hexham; and Du. buss (below). Planten is from F. planter, L. plantāre; see Plant. β. But doubtless confused with Du. donderbus, a blunderbuss; which should rather have been turned into thunderbus—Du. donder, thunder; and buss, a gun, orig. a gun-barrel; cf. G. donnerbüchse, a blunderbuss; from donner, thunder, and büchse, a box, gun-barrel, gun. Thus it meant 'thunder-box'; see Thunder and Box (1). See Palmer, Folk-Etymology.

BLUNT, not sharp. (E.—ME. blunt (of edge), Prompt. Parv. p. 41; 'blont, nat sharpe'; Palsgrave's F. Dict. 'Unwis mann iss blunnt and blind'; Ormulum, 10954. Cf. also Blunderer, or blunt worker [worker], hebefactor, hebeficus; Prompt. Parv. Origin unknown; but perhaps for blund*, from the weak grade allied to Goth. blandan, to mix; which see in Uhlenbeck. Allied, perhaps, to Icel. blunda, to doze; so that the orig. sense is 'sleepy, dull.' See Blunder, Blend, Blind. Der. bluntly, bluntness.

BLUR, to stain; a stain. (Scand.) Shak. has both sb. and verb; Lucrece, 222, 522. Levins has both: 'A blirre, deceptio; and 'to blirre, fallere.' Blur is (1) to dim; (2) metaphorically, to delude. Of uncertain origin; cf. Swed. dial. blura, to blink, partially close the eyes; Swed. dial. blira, to blink; blirra for augn, to quiver (be dim) before the eyes, as in a haze caused by heat; Bavar. plerr, a mist before the eyes. Distinct from bluar, but perhaps confused with it.

BLURT, to utter rashly. (F.) Shak. has blurt at, to deride, Per. iv. 3. 34. We commonly say 'to blurt out', to utter suddenly and inconsiderately. The Scot. form is blirt, meaning 'to make a noise in weeping,' esp. in the phr. to blirt and greet, i. e. to burst out crying; Jamieson. This shows that it is of imitative origin, and allied to blare, to make a loud noise. Cf. Swed. dial. blura, to speak fast and confusedly. See 'Blorryn or wepyn, or blieren, plora, flao,' in Prompt. Parv. p. 40. The orig. sense of blurt is to blow violently.

See Blare, Bluster.

BLUSH, to grow red in the face. (E.) ME. bluchen, blusshen, to glow; 'blusshit the sun,' the sun shone out; Destruction of Troy, ed. Panton and Donaldson, l. 4665. AS. bliscan, only found in the gloss: 'Kutlare, bliscan,' Mone, Quellen, p. 355; cf. abliscan (= ab-liscan), to blush, Levit. xxvi. 41. Allied to Du. blozen, to blush; Hamburg blüsen, to blush (Kichey); Dan. blusse, to blaze, flame, burn in the face; Swed. blussa, to blaze. β. All these are verbs formed from a sb., viz. AS. blis, in comp. hel-blis, a fire-blaze (whence blisce, a torch); Du. blis, a blush; Dan. blis, a blaze, a torch; Swed. blis, a torch. All from blus*, weak grade of Teut. root blens*, to glow. Hence also Low G. blusieren, to glow.

BLUSTER, to blow noisily; to swagger. (F.) Shak. has blustering, tempestuous, sail of leather, Lucrece, 115. Palsgrave has: 'I bluster, Je souffie;' and 'This wynde blusterveth.' It was doubtless associated with blast, but is probably a native word, as blustorous, blusterly, &c., are found in many dialects. Cf. EFries. blustern, to be tempestuous (esp. of wind); blüster, blüster, a breeze; blüsen, to blow hard; blüse, a wind; Hamburg blenster, a roaring fire (Kichey). Of imitative origin; cf. Blart.

BOA, a large snake. (L.) A term borrowed from Latin. In Cockeram's Dict., pt. iii. (1623). The pl. boæ occurs in Pliny, Nat. Hist. viii. 24, where it means serpents of immense size. Prob. allied to L. bis, an ox, in allusion to the size of the reptile.

BOAR, a quadruped. (E.) ME. boar, boor, P. Plowman, B. xi. 333. AS. bir, Allric's Glossary, Nomina Ferarum. + Du. beer; OUG. ber, MIG. bēr, a boar. Teut. type bairaz*, m.

BOARD (1), a table, a plank. (E.) ME. bord, a table, Chaucer, C. T., E. 3. AS. borð, a board, the side of a ship, a shield (Grein) + Du. board, board, shield; Icel. borð, plank, side of a ship; Goth. baurd, in comp. fiut-baurd, foot-board, footstool. Allied to AS. brad, Du. berd, G. brett, a board. Teut. type baird-om*, n. brad-om*, n. ¶ In the phrases 'star-board,' 'lar-board,' 'over-board,' and 'put it in 'on board,' the sense of 'side of a ship' is intended; but it is merely a different use of the same word; and not derived from F. board, although this has reinforced the E. usage. The F. board itself is of Teut. origin. We also find board in Gaelic, Irish, Welsh, and Cornish; all borrowed from E. Der. board, to live at table; board-ing-house, board-ing-school; also board-ing, a covering of boards.

BOARD (2), vb., to go on board a ship; also to accost. (F.—Teut.) Though the sb. board is E., the verb is borrowed from F., and does not appear in ME. It is common in Shak. in both senses; board, to accost, is in Spencer, F. Q. ii. 2. 5, ii. 4. 24, &c.; see board in Nares. 'At length herself boardeth Æneas thus'; Surrey, tr. of Æneid, iv. 304 (l. 395 of the E. version). 'I boards a shyppe or sucie lyke, Jabarde une navire, Palsgrave. Short for aboard, which occurs in Cotgrave.—F. aborder, 'to approach, accost, aboard, board, or lay aboard'; Cot.—F. a, to (< L. ad); and board, edge, brim, side of a ship, from Icel. borð, Du. boord, board, side of a ship; see Board (1).

BOAST, a vaunt. (F.—Scand.) ME. boist, vain-glory; Will. of Palerne, ed. Skeal, 1141. 'The oldest sense is, 'clamour, noise.' 'Now ariseth cry and boast'; King Alisaunder, 5290. [The phonology shows (see N. E. D.) that boast represents AF. boist.]—AF. boist, a boast; Wright's Vocab. l. 161, l. 12; as is more clearly shown in MS. Gg. i. 1, fol. 287, back, col. 1, in the Camb. Univ. Library. Of Scand. origin; from a Norw. base baust—represented by Norw. bansta, to act with violence (Ross). Cf. bausten, bold and reckless (id.); baut, proud, blustering (id.); allied to Norw. baut, boastfully, bautsa, to bounce out, &c.; further allied to EFries. bāsen, to be boisterous; see Boisterous. Der. boast-er, boast-ful, boast-ful-ly, boast-ful-ness, boast-ing, boast-ing-ly.

BOAT, a small ship. (E.) ME. boot, Wyclif, Mark, iv. 1. AS. bāt, Grein, p. 76. Teut. type bairaz*, m. A word peculiar to E.; whence Icel. batir, Swed. båt, Du. boot, are directly or indirectly borrowed. Der. boat-swain (below).

BOAT-SWAIN, an officer in a ship who has charge of the sails, rigging, &c. (E. and Scand.). The earliest quotation in the N. E. D. gives the spelling boat-swain (ab. 1450). But it occurs as bait-swain in late AS., in the Leofric Missal, fol. 1, back; see Earle, A. S. Charters, p. 354, l. 5. Here bait is the AS. form of boat; but swain represents ONorse swain*, Icel. svain, a servant, a lad; the AS. cognate form being swin. See Swain.

BOB, to jerk about, to knock. (E.) 'Against her lips I bob;' Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 49; 'beaten, bobbed, and thumped;' Rich. III. v. 3. 334. Bobet, a cuff, a blow, occurs in the Prompt. Parv. Usually assumed to be of imitative origin. Cf. Swed. dial. bobba, to knock against. 'A bob of cherries, i.e. a cluster of cherries, Towneley Mysteries, p. 118, may be explained from Gael. babag, a cluster; or from the verb bob, to move like a thing hanging down.

BOBBIN, a wooden pin on which thread is wound; round tape. (F.) Holland has 'spindles or bobins;' P. Mutarch, p. 994. — F. 'bobine, a quill for a spinning wheel; also, a skein or hank of gold or silver thread;' Cot. Origin unknown.

BOBOLINK, an American singing bird. (Imitative.) At first called Bob Lincoln, or Bob o' Lincoln; see N. E. D. A free imitation of the bird's cry.

BODE, to foreshow, announce. (F.) ME. boden, Gower, C. A. i. 153; bk. i. 382. bodien, Layamon, 2390. AS. bodian, to announce, Grein, i. 131. — AS. bod, a message, Grein; cf. boda, a messenger, id. Cf. Icel. boda, to announce; bod, a bid. From AS. bod, weak grade of AS. brodan, to command, bid. See Bid (2).

BODICE, stays for women. (E.) Bodice is a corruption of bodies, like penice for penies; it was orig. used as a pl. Hence, in Johnson's Life of Pope: 'he was invested in bodice made of stiff canvass;' ed. 1854; iii. 46. Marston has 'a pair of bodies to a woman's petticoat;' Malcontent, iii. 1. And Mr. Wedgwood quotes, from Sherwood's Dictionary (appended to Cotgrave, ed. 1632, 1660): 'A woman's bodies, or a pair of bodies; corset, corpeset.' See Body.

BODKIN, orig. a small dagger. (F.?—Du.?) MF. boydekin (trissyllable), a dagger; Chaucer, C. T., B 3892, 3897. In Chaucer, C. T., A 3960, MS. Cm. has boytekin. Origin unknown. I merely suggest that it may come from an OF. form boitequin* (AF. beitequin*). Cf. MDu. beitelken, 'a small beetle,' Hexham. For the MDu. beitel also meant 'a punce to engrave with,' Hexham; and the same as mod. Du. beitel, a chisel; so that beitelken also meant 'a small chisel' or 'small punch.' See beitel in Franck. Cf. Low G. bietel, a kind of chisel, Berghaus; Norw. beitel, a chisel.

BODY, the material frame of man or any animal. (F.) ME. bodi, Owl and Nightingale, 73; Layamon, 4908. AS. bodig, body. — OHG. potak; MHG. botch. Of unknown origin. 'The Gael. bodhaig is unrelated (Machain). Der. bodily, bodiless, bodice.

BOER, a Dutch colonist in S. Africa. (Du.) Du. boer, cognate with h. boor; see Boor.

BOG, a piece of soft ground; a quagmire. (C.) 'A great log or marsh;' North's Plutarch, p. 480. Also in Dunbar, OF James Dog, l. 15 (1505). 'Nouthir busk ne bog;' Hennysoun, Wolf and Wedder, l. 77. — Irish bogach, a morass; lit. softish; — ach being the adjectival termination, so that bogach is formed from bog, soft, tender, penetrable; Irish bocce, soft. Gael. bogan, a quagmire; cf. Gael. bog, soft, moist, tender. From Celtic type bukkos*, soft; for bugnos*, allied to Skt. bhug-nas, bent, pp. of bhuj, to bow, bend. From the weak grade bhug* of bheugh* or bheughit. See Bow (1). See Stokes-Fick, p. 180.

BOGGARD, BOGGART, a spectre. (C.; with F. suffix.) Levinus has: 'A boggarde, spectrum.' From bog, variant of *Bug (1); with suffix -art, — ard (F. — ard as in OF. bastard). See below.*

BOGGLE, to start aside, swerve for fear. (C.?) Shaks has it, All's Well, v. 3. 232. Origin unknown; but there is a presumption that it is connected with Prov. Eng. boggle, a ghost, Scotch boyle, a spectre; from the notion of scaring or terrifying, and then, passively, of being scared. Cf. W. bug, a goblin; bugwut, a threat; bugweth, to scare; bugylyt, to threaten; bugylus, intimidating, scaring. Cf. bug in bug-hear. See Bug (1).

BOHEA, a kind of tea. (Chinese.) In Somerville, The Incurious Hencher, l. 28; Pope, Rape of the Lock, l. 620. So named from the Boken hills. 'The Bow-y tcha (Bohea tea) takes its name from a mountain called Bow-y, situated in the province of Fo-ken;' Engl. Cycl. s. v. Ten. Also called Wu-i Hills, or Bu-i in the Fo-ken dialect. Cf. bù-i-té, Bohea tea; Douglas, Dict. of Amoy dialect. Fo-ken is Fukien in Black's Atlas, on the S. E. coast of China.

BOIL (1), vb., to bubble up. (F.—L.) ME. boille, boilen; also 'boyle, boyle, to break forth or boil, Exod. xvi. 20, Hab. iii. 16; Wyclif's Bible (Glossary). — OF. boillir, to boil. — L. bullire, to bubble. — L. bulia, to bubble. See Bull (2). Der. boiler.

BOIL (2), a small tumour. (L.) Spelt byle in Shaks. Cor. i. 4. 31 (1623). ME. bile, byle, buile, F. Plozman, B. xx. 83. AS. byl, Voc.

245. 15; pl. býlas, Voc. 199. 25. Cf. Du. buil, a boil; G. beule, MHG. biule, OHG. bulla. All from Teut. base būl-, weakened grade of Teut. root bhen-, to swell; whence also Goth. uf-bauljan, to puff up. Icel. beyla, a hump. Orig. sense 'a swelling.'

BOISTEROUS, wild, unruly, rough. (F.—Scand.) Shaks has boisterous, frequently. But it is an extended form. ME. boistous, Chaucer, C. T. 17160 (H 211); also boystous—rudis; Prompt. Parv. p. 42. The forms are numerous, and the senses various; see N. E. D. Just as E. cloister is from L. claustrum, so the AF. boist- is from Norw. baust-; for which see under Boast. From the weaker grade būst- we have EFries. būsterig, boisterous (as wind), būster, a storm, from būsen, to be noisy or stormy; Jutland busten, harsh.

BOLD, daring. (E.) ME. bold, bald; P. Plozman, A. iv. 94; B. iv. 107. AS. beald, bald, Grein, i. 101; also balp- (in comp.); O. E. Texts, p. 293. — Icel. baltr; MDu. bald (Oudemans), whence Du. bout; Goth. balths, bold, in derived adv. balthaba, boldly; OHG. pald. Teut. type balthaz*. Der. boldly, bold-ness; also bawd, q. v.

Morris, B. 622. — Icel. bolr, bulr, the trunk of a tree; Swed. bål, a trunk, body; Dan. bul, trunk, stump, log; G. bohle, a plank, board. Prob. allied to Gk. φάλαγγς, a log, trunk (Kluge). See Balk (1). Der. bul-wark.

BOLERO, a lively Spanish dance. (Span.—L.?) 'She mingles in the gay bolero;' Byron, orig. draught of Song to Inez; Childre Harold, c. 1 (notes). — Span. bolero, a lively dance; also, the dancer of it. Applied as an adj. to a child who runs from school; and prob. allied to bola, a bowl, the game of bowls; cf. e-currir la bola, to run away. — L. bulia, a bubble, a ball; see Bowl (1).

BOLLED, swollen. (Scand.) In the A. V.; Exod. ix. 31. Pp. of ME. bollen, to swell; which occurs in bollep, P. Plozman, A. v. 99; and in the sb. balling, swelling, P. Plozman, B. vi. 218, A. vii. 204. A more orig. form of the pp. is bolued, whence the various readings bolnyp, bolnyth, for bollep, in the first passage. — Dan. bulne, to swell; Swed. bulna, to swell; Icel. bulgna; inchoative forms from bolg-, weak grade of Teut. belgan-*, to swell, whence Icel. belga, to inflate. Cf. AS. belg-an (pp. belgen), to swell with anger. See Bellow, Billow.

BOLSTER, a sort of pillow. (E.) ME. bolster, Prompt. Parv. p. 43. AS. bolster; Grein. — Icel. bolstr; OHG. polstar (Stratmann, Schade). In Dutch, bolster is both a pillow, and a shell or husk. β. The suffix may be compared with that in hol-ster; see it discussed in Koch, Engl. Grammatik, iii. 46. Teut. type bul-stroz*, from Teut. bul-, weak grade of beul-, to puff up; see Boil (2). See Franck. BOLT, a stout pin, of iron, &c.; an arrow for a cross-bow. (E.) ME. bolt, a straight rod, Chaucer, C. T. 3264. AS. bolt, a cross-bow bolt; cf. catapultas*, speru, bolitas; Voc. 508. 14 (Late L. catapultia meant a bolt as well as a catapult). — MDu. bolt, a bolt for shooting, a kind of arrow (Oudemans), whence Du. hout, a bolt, in all senses; OHG. polz, whence G. bolzen, a bolt; MSwed. bulst. Teut. type boltz*, m. Origin unknown.

BOLT, BOUT, to sift meal. (F.—L.—Gk.) Shaks has bolt, Winter's Tale, iv. 4. 375; also bolter, a sieve, 1 Henry IV, iii. 3. 81. ME. bulted (written bultedd) occurs in the Ormulum, l. 992. Palsgrave has: 'I boulte meale in a boulter, Ie bulle.' — OF. buleter (Supp. to Godfrey); later bulter (Palsgrave); bulter, to bould meal (Cotgrave); mod. F. bulter. β. In OF. we also find bulelet, a sieve (Supp. to Godfrey), also spelt burelet (Littre), showing that bulter is a corruption of bureter; cf. Ital. burattello, a bolter; see proofs in Burguy and Brachet. Bureter* meant 'to sift through a kind of cloth;' Florio has Ital. burattino, 'a kind of stuff called Burato'; also a bolter; buratto, a bolter or sieve. γ. The OF. bureter* is thus derivable from OF. (and F.) bure, a coarse woollen cloth; Late L. burra (the same). — L. burra, reddish (from its colour). — Gk. ῥυπῶν, reddish. — Gk. ῥῡπ, fire. See Bureau.

BOLUS, a large pill. (L.—Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706; and Coles (1684). Phillips also explains it as a clod of earth, lump of metal, &c. — Late L. bolus (not L. bolus), which is merely a Latinised form of Gk. βόλος, a clod, lump of earth, a lump (generally). Cf. Cotgrave has bolus as a F. word.

BOMB, a shell for cannon. (F.—Span.—L.—Gk.) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1708; and in Evelyn's Diary, Mar. 16, 1687. In older writers, it is called a bombard or bombard. See Bombard. — F. bombe, a bomb. — Span. bomba; Minshew (1623) has 'bomba de fuego, a ball of wilde-fire.' — L. bombus, a humming noise. — Gk. βόμβος, a humming or buzzing noise; perhaps onomatopoeic. See Broom (1).

BOMBARD, to attack with bombs. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'To Bombard or Bomb, to shoot bombs into a place;' also 'Bombard, a kind of great gun;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. In older authors, it is a sb., meaning a cannon or great gun (as in Caxton, tr. of Reynard, c. 25), and, jocularly, a large drinking vessel; see Shaks. Temp. ii. 2.

21. — F. bombarde, 'a bombard, or murdering piece'; Cot. — Late L. bombardaria, kind of catapult. — L. bombus, a humming noise (above). ¶ Cf. ME. bombard, a trumpet; Gower, C. A. iii. 358; bk. viii. 2482. Der. bombard-ment, bombard-ier, q. v.

BOMBARDIER (F. — L. — Gk.) Cotgrave has: 'Bombardier, a bombardier, or gunner that useth to discharge murdering peeces', and more generally, any gunner.' See Bombard.

BOMBAST, originally, cotton-wadding; hence padding, affected language. (F. — L. — Gk.) 'Bombast, the cotton-plant growing in Asia; also, a sort of cotton or fustian; also, affected language'; Kersey's Dict. (1708). 'White Bombast [cotton] cloth'; Hakluyt, Voy. ii. pt. 1. 232. — OF. bombace, cotton (Godfrey); with added t. — Late L. bombacem, acc. of bombax, cotton; a corruption of L. bombyx. — Gk. Bómbyx, silk, cotton; orig. a silkworm. Cf. 'to talk fustian.' Der. bombast-ic; and see below.

BOMBASINE, BOMBASINE, a fabric, of silk and worsted. (F. — L. — Gk.) Borrowed from F. bombasin, which Cotgrave explains by 'the stuffe bombasine, or any kind of stuffe that's made of cotton, or of cotton and linnen'. — Late L. bombacinus, made of the stuff called 'bombax'. — Late L. bombax, cotton; a corruption of L. bombyx, a silk-worm, silk, fine cotton. — Gk. Bómbyx, a silk-worm, silk, cotton. See above.

BOND, a tie. (Scand.) In Chaucer, C. T. 3096 (A 3094), where it rhymes with hand — hand. A mere variation of band; just as Chaucer has bond, for land, hand. See Band (1). Der. bond-ed, bond-man; but not (in the first instance) bond-man, nor bond-age; see Bondage.

BONDAGE, tenure of a cottar; service of a cottar; servitude. (F. — Scand.) ME. bondage, servitude, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 71. — AF. bondage, explained by Roquefort as 'villaine tenure', i.e. a tenure of a lower character. — Low L. bondagium, a kind of tenure, as in 'de toto tenemento, quod de ipso tenet in bondagio'; Monast. Anglie. 2 par. fol. 609 a, qu. in Blount's Nomo-lexicon. A holder under this tenure was called a bondman, or in earlier times bonde [AF. bunde, as in Statutes of the Realm, i. 211], AS. bōnda, which merely meant a boor, a householder. β. That the word bondage has been connected from early times with the word bond, and the verb to bind, is certain; hence its sinister sense of 'servitude'. γ. It is equally certain that this etymology is wholly false, the AS. bōnda having been borrowed from Icel. bōndi, a husbandman, a short form of būandi, a tiller of the soil; from Icel. būa, to till; so that AS. bōnda is allied in sense and origin to E. boor. See Boor.

BONFIRE, a fire to celebrate festivals, &c. (E.) Fabyan (continued) has: 'they sang Te Deum, and made bonfires'; Queene Marie, an. 1555. Several other quotations in R. show the same spelling. β. The origin, from bone and fire, is certain, but was obscured by the regular shortening of the stressed vowel, as in knowledge, Monday, &c.; whence arose numerous futile guesses. γ. The Lowland Scotch is banefire, in Acts of James VI (Jamieson); and the Catholicism Anglicum (1483) has: 'A bonafire, ignis ossium.' This makes it 'bone-fire', as being the only form that agrees with the evidence; and this explanation leaves the whole word native English, instead of making it a clumsy hybrid. ¶ Note the following passage. 'The English nuns at Lisbon do pretend that they have both the arms of Thomas Becket; and yet Pope Paul the Third . . . pitifully complains of the cruelty of K. Hen. 8 for causing all the bones of Becket to be burnt, and the ashes scattered in the winds; . . . and how his arms should escape that bone-fire is very strange.' The Romish Horseleech, 1674, p. 82. See also my Notes on E. Etymology, p. 13. It is remarkable that the Picard equivalent of bonfire is fu d'os (Coiblet). Cf. bonfire in E. D. D.

BONITO, a fish of the tunny kind. (Span. or Port. — L.) Described in Eng. Garner, ed. Arber, v. 133 (ab. 1565). 'A bonito-fish'; Minshew (1627). — Span. bonito, 'a fish called a tunnie'; Minshew's Span. Dict. (1623); whence, probably, Arab. baynis, 'the fish called bonito'; Rich. Dict. p. 312. [Here the final s of baynis is not the usual, but the 4th letter of the alphabet which, according to Palmer, is properly sounded as E. tk in both.] β. Yule says the name is Portuguese; from Port. bonito, fine. The Span. bonito also means 'fine'; dimin. of Span. bueno, good. — L. bonum, acc. of bonus, good; see Bounty. ¶ The Arab name is adapted from Spanish or Portuguese.

BONNET, a cap. (F. — Low L. — Hind. ?) 'Lynnen bonnettes vpon their heades'; Bible, 1551, Ezek. xlv. 18; and so in A. V. ME. bonet; written bonat in Barbour, Bruce, ix. 506 (but rhyming with ser). — OF. bonet, bonnet, the name of a stuff, of which caps were made (stressed on the latter syllable); F. bonnet, a cap; Cot.

[Brachet says it was originally the name of a stuff; 'there were robes de bonnet; the phrase chapel de bonnet [cap of stuff] is several times found; this was abridged into un bonnet.' Cf. E. 'a beaver' for 'a beaver hat'.] — Low L. bonnita, the name of a stuff, mentioned A. D. 1300. Origin unknown. Perhaps of Indian origin; cf. Hind. bandit, woollen cloth, broad cloth (Forbes).

BONNY, handsome, fair; blithe. (F. — L. ?) Shak. has 'blithe and bonny'; Much Ado, ii. 3. 69; also, 'the bonny beauty'; a Hen. VI. v. 2. 12. Levins has: 'Bonny, scitus, facetus', 102. 32. A comparison of the word with such others as bellinios, bonelli, bonitatus (all in Spenser, Shep. Kal. August), suggests a connexion with F. bonus, fair, fem. of bon, good; from L. bonus, good. The ME. bonie (in King Alisaunder, l. 3903) is less easily connected with OF. bone, fem. of bon; but the suffix is prob. F. -y (AS. -ig). Cf. jolly, in which F. final -i is written as E. -y. Der. bonni-ly. See Bounty.

BONZE, a Japanese priest. (Port. — Japanese — Chinese.) Spelt bonzee in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, Vol. 393, 394 (directly from Jap. bonzi). — Port. bonzo, a bonze, — Japan. bonzi or bonchō. — Chin. fan seng, 'a religious person'; Yule. — Sir T. Wade also regards it as the Japan. form of fan seng.

BOOBY, a stupid fellow. (Span. — L.) In Beaum. and Fletcher, Illum. Lieutenant, iii. 7. 9. In Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 11, we find: 'At which time some boobies perched upon the yard-arm of our ship, and suffered our men to take them, an animal so very simple as becomes a proverb.' [The F. boobie, in the Supplement to the Dict. de l'Académie, is only used of the bird, and may have been borrowed from English. The name probably arose among the Spanish sailors.] — Span. bobo, a blockhead, dot; a word in very common use, with numerous derivatives, such as bobon, a great blockhead, bobote, a simpleton, &c.; cf. Port. bobo, a mimic, buffoon. [Related to F. baube, stuttering (Cotgrave), and to OF. baubi, foolish, orig. pp. of baubir, to mock at. — L. balbus, stammering, lisping, inarticulate. [Cf. Span. bobear, to talk foolishly, bolada, silly speech.] + Gk. Bábapagos, lit. inarticulate. See Barbarous.

BOOK, a volume; a written composition. (E.) ME. look, Chaucer, C. T. B 190. AS. bōc, Grein, i. 134. + Du. boek; Icel. bók; Swed. bok; Dan. bog; OIG. bnoh, MHG. buoch, G. buch. β. A peculiar use of AS. bōc, a beech-tree (Grein, i. 134); because the original books were written on beechen boards or bark. The Icel. bókstaf properly meant 'a beech-twig', but afterwards 'a letter'. So, in German, we have OIG. puocha, buocha, MHG. buoch, a beech-tree, as compared with OIG. buoch, MHG. buoch, a book. The mod. G. forms are buche, beech; buch, a book. Cf. Goth. bōka, a letter; pl. bōkōs, a writing. AS. bōc, a 'charter', occurs A. D. 808 (O.E. Texts). See Beech. Der. book-ish, book-keeping, book-case, book-worm.

BOOM (1), vb., to hum, buzz. (E.) ME. bommen, to hum. 'I bomme as a bombyll bee (i.e. bumble-bee) dothe or any flye'; Palsgrave. Not recorded in A.S.; cf. Du. bommen, to give out a hollow sound, to sound like an empty barrel. The MDu. bommen meant 'to sound a drum or tabor'; and MDu. bom meant 'a tabor'; Oudemans. Allied to bump, to make a noise like a bittern, which is the Welsh form; see Bump (2). ¶ That the word begins with b both in O. Low G. and in Latin (which has the form bombus, a humming), is due to the fact that it is imitative. See Bomb.

BOOM (2), a beam or pole. (Dutch.) Boom occurs in Kersey (1708); and in North's Examen (R.) — Du. boom, a beam, pole, tree. + E. beam. See Beam. Many of our sea-terms are Dutch. Der. jib-boom, spanker-boom.

BOOMERANG, an Australian missile weapon. (Australian.) See quotations in E. E. Morris, Austral English. Given as the native name at Port Jackson in 1827; derived from booma, to strike (with suffix -arang), by J. Fraser, Aborigines of New S. Wales, p. 69.

BOON, a petition, favour. (Scand.) ME. bone, boone, Chaucer, C. T. 2271 (A 2269); and in the Ancren Riwle, p. 28. — Icel. bōn, a petition; Dan. and Swed. bōn, a petition, + AS. bēn, a petition; whence bene in Wordsworth. [Note that the vowel shows the word to be Scandinavian in form, not A.S.] Teut. type bōniz*, f. β. β connects it with the root ban, appearing in our E. ban; iii. 201. See Ban. γ. The sense of 'favour' is somewhat late, and points to a confusion with F. bon, L. bonus, good. δ. In the phrase 'a boon companion', the word is wholly the F. bon.

BOOR, a peasant, tiller of the soil. (Dutch.) In Shak. Merry Wives, iv. 5. 1; and Beaum. and Fletcher, Beggars' Bush, iii. 1. — Du. boer (pronounced boor), a peasant, lit. 'a tiller of the soil'; see the quotations in R., e.g. the quotation from Sir W. Temple. — Du. bosnen, to till. β. In Mid. Eng. the term is very rare, but it is found, spelt bower, in Lydgate, Chorle and Bird, st. 51; and it forms a part of the word neigh-boor, showing that it was once an English word as well as a Dutch one. Cf. AS. gēwūr (rare, but found in the Laws of Ine, § 6), a tiller of the soil; AS. būan, to till, cultivate; OIG. būwan, to cultivate (whence G. bauer, a peasant, a boor); Goth.

bauan, to cultivate; all closely related to the word be. From ✓BHEU, to dwell; Pick, i. 161; Benley, s.v. būā; Streitberg, § 90. See Bo. Der. boar-ish, boar-ishly, boar-ishness.

BOOT (1), a covering for the leg and foot. (F. - Late L.) Chaucer has bates, Prolog. 203, 275. - OF. boite, bolte, a boot. - Late L. boota, a boot; also spelt buda; cf. Span. and Port. bota. [In Eng. the word is even extended to mean the luggage-box of a coach; cf. F. botte (5) in Littre, and see N.E.D.] The old boots were often large and ample, covering the whole of the lower part of the leg. ¶ A connexion between boot and bute is sometimes assumed, but they are now known to be distinct; boot = Late L. boota; bute = Late L. bulta.

BOOT (2), advantage, profit. (F.) Chiefly preserved in the adj. bootless, profitless. ME. bofe, boote, common in early authors; the phr. to bote is in Langtoft, p. 163, &c. AS. būt, Grein, i. 135; whence AS. bētan, to amend, help. + Du. boete, penitence; boeten, to mend, kindly, atone for; Icel. búti (bait), advantage, cure, bæta, to mend, improve; Dan. bød, amendment, bøde, to mend; Swed. bøt, remedy, cure, båta, to fine, mull; Goth. būta, profit, būtan, to profit; OHG. puaza, puaza, G. büsse, atonement, G. büssen, to atone for. (In all these the sh. is older than the verb.) Teut. type būta*, fem.; and bāt*, second grade of būt*; cf. Icel. bati, advantage; and see Better. Der. boot-less, boot-lessly, boot-lessness. ¶ The phrase to boot means 'in addition', lit. 'for an advantage'; it is not a verb, as Bailey oddly supposes; and, in fact, the allied verb takes the form to beet, still used in Scotland in the sense of 'to mend a fire' (AS. bētan, to help, to kindle).

BOOTH, a slight building. (Scand.) ME. bothe, in comp. tol-bothe, a toll-house, Wyclif, St. Matt. ix. 9; also bothe, which seems to occur first in the Ormulum, l. 15817. - MDan. būth (Kalkar; Juliarud local pronunciation būwud), Feilberg; Dan. bød; cf. Icel. búð, a booth, shop; Swed. bod, + G. bude, a booth, stall. Teut. type bū-būth*, fem.; and bū-*, to dwell, as in Icel. bū-a; see Boor. β. Further related to Irish and Gael. both, bōthan, a hut, W. bād, a residence; Lith. būta, būtais, a house. [But W. būth, a booth, Gael. būth, a shop, are from E.] Cf. Skt. bhavanam, a house, a place to be in, from bhū, to dwell, be.

BOOTY, prey, spoil. (F. - Low G.) Not in very early use. One of the earlier examples is in Hall's Chron. Henry VIII. an. 14. § 49, where it is spelt butie. Palgrave has buty, to translate F. butin. Caxton has both butye and butyn in his Boke of Chesse, bk. ii. ch. 4; 'Alle the butyn and gayne', Troy-book, l. 277, back. Formed (with loss of n, as in haughty) from F. butin, 'a booty, prey, or spoyle taken'; Cot. [The F. oo is due to the influence of boot (2).] - MDu. bute, Du. buit, booty, spoil, prize; buit maken, to get booty, take in war; cf. Icel. býti, Swed. büte, Dan. bytte, exchange, barter, booty, spoil. Allied to Celtic boudi-*, as in Irish buid, victory, W. budd, gain, profit. Stokes-Pick, p. 175. [The G. bute, booty, is merely borrowed from Low G., as shown by its unaltered form.] ¶ Cotgrave's explanation of butiner as 'to prey, get booty, make spoil of, to boot-hale', clearly shows how the Eng. spelling was affected by confusion with boot, advantage, profit.

BORAGE, a plant with rough leaves. (F. - Arab.) ME. borage, Liber Cure Cocorum, ed. Morris, p. 47; also bouarge, as in Cotgrave, who gives: 'Bourroche, Bourraiche, bouarge.' - F. bourraiche; OF. borraice (Litzfeld); cf. Late L. borrago, a name supposed to refer to its rough leaves, as if from Late L. borra, burra, rough hair, whence F. bourre, Ital. borra. But now (as in Litzfeld) thought to be from (unauthorised) Arab. abū rashh, a sudorific plant; from abū, a father (hence, producing), and rashh, sweating, as in Rich. Dict., p. 734. Cf. Span. borraja, 'borage'; Münch. (Litzfeld; who thinks the Low L. borrago to be taken from the F.)

BORAX, bilobate of soda; of a whitish colour. (Low L. - Arab. - Pers.) Cotgrave gives borax, borrais, and boras as the French spellings, with the sense 'borax, or green calth'; a hard and shining mineral. Borax is a Low Latin spelling; Ducange also gives the form boracum. The latter is the more correct form, and taken directly from the Arabic. - Arab. būraq (better būrag), borax; Rich. Arab. Dict. p. 205. - Pers. būrah, borax (Vullers). See Devic.

BORDER, an edge. (F. - Low L.) - Teut. ME. bordure, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, bk. i. pr. 1, l. 2. - F. bordure (Cotgrave); OF. borderie (Suppl. to Godeffroy); cf. Span. bordadura. - Low L. borderia, an edging. - Low L. bordāre (Ital. borderare, Span. borderar, F. border), to edge. - Du. boord, border, edge, brim, bank; which is cognate with AS. bord in some of its senses. See Board. Der. border, vb.; border-er.

BORE (1), to perforate. (E.) ME. borien, Aylenote of Inwynt, p. 66. AS. borian, Bosworth, with a ref. to Affric's Glossary; he also quotes 'wyrn þe borað treow,' a worm that perforates wood. + Du. boren, to bore, pierce; Icel. bora; Swed. borra; Dan. bore; OHG. porūn (G. böhren). Teut. Type borūn*, to perforate; from boraz*, sb., a bore, gimlet, as seen in AS. bor, Icel. borr, Swed. borr, Dan. bor, a bore, gimlet. + I. forāre, to bore; Gk. φάρε, in φάρε-αγέ, a raving, φάρε-αγέ, the pharynx, gullet; Brugm. i. § 510. - ✓BHER, to cut. Thus bore is co-radicate with perforate and pharynx. Der. bor-er.

BORE (2), to worry, vex. (E.) Merely a metaphorical use of bore, to perforate. Shak. has it in the sense, to overreach, trip up: 'at this instant Ie bore me with some trick'; Ilen VIII. i. 1. 128. Cf. 'baffled and bored'; Kauman, and Fletcher, Span. Curate, iv. 5.

BORE (3), a tidal surge in a river. (Scand.) Used by Burke, On a Regicide Peace, letters 3 and 4 (R.). An old prov. F. word, of Scand. origin. ME. se-bare, sea-billow, surge; E. Metr. Hom., ed. Small, p. 135, l. 24. - Icel. bára, a billow caused by wind; Norw. baara, a billow, swell in the sea; Du. baar, a billow, also a pier; Effries. bär; Low G. bare. Lit. 'a thing borne along'; all from Teut. bār-*, 3rd grade of heran-, to bear. See Bier. Doublet, bier.

BOREAS, the north wind. (L. - Gk.) In Shak. Troil. i. 3. 38. - 1. Boreas, the north wind. - Gk. Bopias, Boppas, the north wind. β. Perhaps it meant, originally, the 'mountain-wind'; cf. Ital. tramontana, mountain-wind. Cf. OSlav. and Russ. gora, Skt. giri-s, a mountain; Curlius, i. 434. Der. boreal.

BOROUGH, a town. (E.) ME. burgh, burgh, P. Plowman, B. vi. 308; also borue, in the sense 'a place of shelter' (cf. F. burrow), Will. of Palerne, l. 1889; burge, burie, borue, borue, Layamon, 2168, 3553, 9888. AS. burh, burg, Grein, i. 147; forming byrig in the gen. and dat. sing., whence the mod. E. bury in the sense 'town.' + Du. burg; Icel. borg, a fort, castle; Swed. and Dan. borg, a fort, castle; Goth. burgs, a town; OHG. pure (G. burg), a castle. β. Teut. type burg*, f.; from burg*, weak grade of borgan-*, AS. heorgan, to defend, protect, Grein, i. 107; Goth. hairgan, to hide, preserve, keep. - ✓BIRKGI, to protect. Benley (p. 635) suggests a connexion with Skt. brhan, large. See below; and see Burgess, Barrow (1).

BORROW, to receive money on trust. (E.) ME. borwen, Chaucer, C. T. 4525 (B 105). AS. borgan, to borrow, Matt. v. 42 (by usual change of AS. g to ME. w); the lit. meaning being 'to give a pledge.' - AS. borg, a pledge, more frequently spelt borh in the nom. case; common in the AS. laws. + Du. borg, a pledge, bail, security; MIIG. and G. borg, security. (Merely a borrowed word in Icelandic, and perhaps also in Swed. and Danish.) From borg- = burg, weak grade of borgan-*, to protect; cf. AS. borgen, pp. of AS. heorgan, to protect, secure. See Borough. Der. borrow-er.

BOSH, nonsense; foolish talk. (Turkish.) From Turk. hosh, empty, worthless; introduced by Jas. Morier, in his novel of Ayesha, 1834; where he explains bosh by 'nothing'.

BOSOM, a part of the body. (E.) ME. bosom, Chaucer, C. T. 7575 (B 1993). AS. bōm, Grein, i. 134. + Du. boezem; OHG. puosam; G. bosun. Origin unknown. The Teut. type is bōs-moz, m., from ldg. root bhas*. Hence it may mean 'swelling,' from Skt. root bhas*, to puff, swell, whence bhas-ira, bag, sack, pouch; see babhasati (2) in Uhlenbeck.

BOSS, a knob. (F. - OHG.) ME. bos(er)* of a boeler (buckler); Chaucer, C. T. 3266. - F. bosse, a hump; OF. bace; cf. Prov. bassa; Ital. bozza, a swelling. β. It has been supposed that just as E. bump means (1) to strike, and (2) a hump, a swelling, with other similar instances) the root of the word is to be found in the OHG. bōzan, to strike, beat; cognate with E. beat. See Beat, and see further under Botch (2). Doublet, botch (2).

BOTANY, the science that treats of plants. (F. - Gk.) 'Botanical, belonging to herbs.' Coles (1682). The sb. botany is formed by analogy, being derived from the F. adj. botanique, a form which appears in Cotgrave, and is explained by 'herall, of, or belonging to herbs, or skill in herbs.' The mod. F. botanique is both adj. and sb. Thus botany is short for 'botanic science.' - Gk. Botanikos, botanical, adj., formed from Botān, a herb, plant. - Gk. Bōtān, to feed (stem βο-); cf. Botōn, a grazing animal. Der. botanic, botanic-al, botanic-al-ly, botan-ist, botan-ise.

BOTARGO, a cake made of the roe of the sea-mullet. (Ital. - Arab.) 'Sturgeon, mullet, caviare, and butargo.' Capt. Smith, Works, ed. Arber, p. 240 (1614-15). - Ital. botargo, 'a kind of salt meat made of fish vssd in Italy in Lent.' Florio. - Arab. butarkak; the same (Devic). The Arab. word is thought to be composed of the Coptic indef. art. bu, and the Gk. τάρκος, dried fish (Journal des Savants, Jan. 1848, p. 45).

BOTCH (1), to patch; a patch. (E.) Wyclif has boschen, to mend, a Chron. xxiv. 10. Prob. a native word, but not found in A. S. Oudemans gives a parallel form botsen (mod. Du. boten), to strike; with its variant buisen, meaning both (1) to strike or beat, and (2) to repair. The notion of repairing in a rough manner follows from that of fastening by beating. So also MDu. buisen, botens, 'to push or to smite'; botens, botens, 'to clout or patch'; Hexham. Der. botch-er, botch-y.

BOTCH (2), a swelling. (F.-G.) Used by Milton, 'botches and blains'; P. L. xii. 180. The Prompt. Parv. has: 'Boche, botche, sore; neus.' Here teh is for ech or eh. The spelling botches is in P. Plowman, B. xx. 83.—O. North F. boche, a botch, a boil; Norm. dial. boche (Moisy); Picard boche; for OF. bocce, a swelling; thus botch is a doublet of boss. See Boss. ¶ Oudemans gives butse as M. Du. for a boil, or a swelling, with the excellent example in an old proverb: 'Naar den val de butse' = as is the tumble, so is the botch.

BOTH, two together. (Scand.) Not formed from AS. bā þā, lit. 'both the,' but borrowed from the Scandinavian; cf. Lowland Scotch baith; spelt bape and bepe in Havelok, 1680, 2543.—Icel. bíðir (bā-ðir), adj. pron. dual; neut. bæði, bíði; Swed. båda; Dan. baade; cf. G. beide, both. β. AS. has only the shorter form bā, both; cognate with Goth. bai, both; cf. ba in L. am-bo; -þo in Gk. ἀμφω; and -bhāu in Skt. u-bhāu, both. See Fick, i. 18. γ. The Icel. ðir is for þeir, they, the; so that bo-þ (= bo the) was orig. two words; cf. Goth. ba þu skipa, both the ships; Luke, v. 7. See Noreen, Gr. § 122. For numerous examples of various forms of the word, see Koch, Engl. Gram. ii. 107.

BOTHER, to harass; an embarrassment. (F.?) There is no proof that the word is of any great antiquity in English. It first occurs in the writings of Irishmen, viz. T. Sheridan, Swift, and Sterne (N. E. D.). It may be a mere variant of potter, which is, at any rate, an older word. See further under Potter.

BOTS, BOTTS, small worms found in the intestines of horses. (F.?) Shak. has bots, i. Hen. IV. ii. 1. 11. Fitzlerbert has bottes (Husbandry, § 102); whence Gael. bottus, a belly-worm, is borrowed. The Sc. form is bats, pl. Cf. WFlm. botse, a thick worm (De Bo).

BOTTLE (1), a hollow vessel. (F.—Late L.) ME. botel; Chaucer, C. T. 7513 (D 1931).—OF. botelle, botelle (Supp. to Godefroy); cf. AF. butille, a bottle (note to Vie de Saint Auban, ed. Atkinson, i. 677).—Late L. buticula, buticula, double dimin. of Late L. butis, butia, a cask, butt. See Butt (2).

BOTTLE (2), a bundle of hay. (F.—OHG.) ME. botel, Chaucer, C. T. 16963 (I 14).—OF. botel; cf. botelle, botte de foin ou de paille; Roquefort. A dimin. of F. botte, a bundle of hay, &c.—OHG. bōzo, þīzo, a bundle of flax.—OHG. bōzan, þīzan, to beat, cognate with E. beat; perhaps from the beating of flax. See Beat.

BOTTOM, the lower part, foundation. (F.) ME. botym, botum, botun, botume; also botume; see Prompt. Parv. p. 45; botum, Gawain and the Grene Knight, ed. Morris, i. 2145. AS. botm, Grein, p. 133.—Du. botem; Icel. botn; Swed. botten; Dan. bund; OHG. podam (G. boden), þ-lundus; Gk. ῥῆπος; Skt. (Vedic) budhna-s, depth, ground; Benfey, p. 634; Fick, iii. 214; Brugm. i. § 5 103, 704. The word appears also in Celtic; cf. Irish bun, the sole of the foot; Gaelic bun, solc, foundation, bottom; W. bun, stem, base, stock. Der. bottom-less, bottom-ry. From the same root, fund-ament.

BOUDOIR, a small private room, esp. for a lady. (F.) Modern, and mere French.—F. boudoir, lit. a place to sulk in.—F. bouder, to sulk. Root uncertain; but perhaps from the same source as E. pout, verb. Cf. Limousin ja las boudos, to pout; fa de pots, to grumace (Mistral).

BOUGH, a branch of a tree. (E.) ME. bough, Chaucer, C. T. 1982 (A 190). AS. būg, bōh, Grein, i. 134. [The sense is peculiar to English; the original sense of AS. būg was 'an arm,' esp. the 'shoulder of an animal.']+Icel. būger, the shoulder of an animal; Dan. boug, bow, the shoulder of a quadruped; also, the bow of a ship; Swed. bog, shoulder, bow of a ship; OHG. puar, buog (G. bug), the shoulder of an animal; bow of a ship; Gk. ῥῆπος, the fore-arm; Skt. bāhu, the arm. Teut. type būguz*; Idg. type būghus*. Brugm. i. § 184. See Bow (4).

BOUGHT, s., the light of a rope, &c.; see But, Bight.

BOULDER, a large round stone. (Scand.) Marked by Jamieson as a Perthshire word; chiefly used in Scotland and the N. of England. ME. bulder-ston, Havelok, 1790. Mr. Wedgwood says: 'Swed. dial. buller-sten, the larger kind of pebbles, in contrast to klappersten, the small ones. From Swed. bullra, E. dial. holder, to make a loud noise, to thunder.' Klappersten means 'a stone that claps or rattles.' See his article; and see Rietz. β. But I may add that the excrement d occurs in Danish; cf. Dan. buldre, to roar, to rattle; bulder, crash, uproar, turmoil. (Danish puts ld for ll, as in falde, to fall.) So also F. Fries, buldern, to rumble; bulder-wagen, a wagon that rumbles through the streets; Du. bulderen, to roar (as cannon). All these verbs are frequentative; from bull- (as in MHG. bullen, to roar), weak grade of Teut. bellan*, to roar. See Bell, Bellow, Bull (1).

BOULEVARD, a promenade, with rows of trees. (F.—Teut.) Well known in Paris; orig. a promenade laid out on a demolished fortification.—MF. bonlevert, boulevard, boulevard, 'a bulwark'; Cot. = Du. bulwerk; see Bulwerk.

BOUNCE, to jump up quickly. (E.) ME. bunsen, bounsens, to strike suddenly, beat; Ancr. Riwle, p. 188. So also Low G. bunsen, to beat, knock, esp. used of knocking at a door; Bremen Wörterbuch, i. 164; Du. bonzen, to bounce, throw; Norw. bunsa, to bounce up (Ross). β. The word is clearly connected with bounce, a blow, bump, used also as an interjection, as in 2 Hen. IV. iii. 2. 304. Cf. Du. bons, a bounce, thump; Swed. dial. bunns, immediately (Rietz); G. bumps, bounce, as in bumps ging die Thür—bounce went the door; Icel. bops, bump! imitating the sound of a fall. The word is probably imitative, and intended to represent the sound of a blow. See Bump (1).

BOUND (1), to leap. (F.—L.—Gk.) Shak. has bound, All's Well, ii. 3. 314.—F. bondir, to bound, rebound, &c.; but orig. to resound, make a loud resounding noise; see Brachet.—L. bombitāre, to resound, hum, buzz; whence Folk-L. bombitire*, = L. bombus, a humming sound.—Gk. βόμβος, a humming sound. See Boom (1).

BOUND (2), a boundary, limit. (F.—C.?) ME. bounde, Chaucer, C. T. 7922 (E 46); earliest form bunne, Layamon, 1313.—OF. bonne, a limit, boundary, also spelt boude; AF. bounde; also sometimes spelt bodue (which see in Burguy and in the Supp. to Godefroy).—Late L. bodina, bonna, a bound, limit. Origin uncertain; some suggest a Celtic origin; from Bret. bōden, a clump of trees (which might mark a boundary); cf. Bret. bōd, a tuft. The Late L. bonna answers well to Bret. boun, a boundary, occurring in the compound men-boun, a boundary-stone; but this would separate bodina from bonna (yet the OF. bodue meant 'boundary-stone'; Godefroy, Supp.). The suggestion of Thurneysen (p. 91) does not help us. ¶ We may note that bound is a doublet of bounn, a boundary. See Bourn (1). Der. bound, vb., bound-ary, bound-less.

BOUND (3), ready to go. (Scand.) In the particular phrase 'the ship is bound for Cadiz', the word bound means 'ready to go'; formed, by excrement d, from ME. boun, ready to go. 'She was boun to go'; Chaucer, C. T. 11807 (F 1503). 'The maister schipman made him boun And goth him out'; Gower, C. A. iii. 322; bk. viii. 1407. 'Whan he saw that Robert . . . to wend was alle boun'; Langtoft, p. 99.—Icel. būinn, prepared, ready, pp. of vb. būn, to till, to get ready; Norw. buen; from the same root as Boor, q. v.

BOUNDED, pp., as in 'bounded duty'. (E.) The old pp. of the verb to bind. See Bind.

BOUNTIFUL, goodness, liberality. (F.—L.) Chaucer has bountee, C. T. B 1647, E 157, 415.—OF. bonte, bontet, goodness.—L. acc. bonitatem, from nom. bonitas, goodness.—L. bonus, good; Old L. duonus, good; perhaps allied to Vedic Skt. dāvas, honour; Brugm. ii. § 67. Der. bonnif-ful, bonnif-ful-ness, bounte-ous, bounte-ous-ness.

BOUQUET, a nosegay. (F.—Late L.) In Todd's Johnson (1831). Mere French.—F. bouquet, 'a nosegay or posie of flowers'; Coigrave.—OF. (Norm. and Picard) bosquet, properly 'a little wood' (Supp. to Godefroy); the dimin. of OF. bos, F. bois, a wood; Brachet quotes from Mme. de Sévigné, who uses bouquet in the old sense.—Late L. boscum, buscum, acc. of boscus, buscus, a wood. See Bush.

BOURD, a jest; to jest; obsolete. (F.) Used by Holinshed, Drayton, &c.; see Nares. ME. bourde, doorde. 'Boorde, or game, ludus, focus'; Prompt. Parv. p. 44. The verb is used by Chaucer, C. T. 12712 (C 778).—OF. bourde, a game; bourder, to play. Of unknown origin. Diez took OF. bourder to be a contraction of OF. bohorder, to tourney, joust with lances, hence to amuse oneself; but this is no longer accepted.

BOURGEOIS; see Burgeon.

BOURN (1), a boundary. (F.) Well known from Shak. Hamlet, iii. 1. 79; K. Lear, iv. 6. 57.—F. 'borne, a bound, limit, meere, march; the end or furthest compass of a thing'; Cot. From OF. badne, a bourn, limit, bound, boundary (Supp. to Godefroy). Thus bourne is a doublet of bound. See Bound (2).

BOURN, BURN (2), a stream. (F.) 'Come o'er the bourne, Bessy, to me'; K. Lear, iii. 6. 27. ME. bourne, P. Plowman, prol. l. 8. AS. burna, a stream, fountain; Grein, i. 149.—Du. bron, a spring; Icel. brunnr, a spring, fountain, well; Swed. brunn, a well; Dan. brønd; Goth. brunna, a spring, well; OHG. prunno (G. brunnen), a spring, well. Some think the Goth. brunna is from brinnan, to burn; see Uhlenbeck, and Stokes-Fick, p. 172. The connexion is seen in the comparison of a bubbling well to boiling water; and is remarkably exemplified in the words well and torrent, q. v. See Burn.

BOUSE, BOOSE, BOUZE, BOOZE, to drink deeply. (Dutch.) ME. bousen, Satire on Kildare, l. 45; in E. E. Poems, ed. Furnivall, p. 154. Spenser has: 'a bousing-can' = a drinking vessel; F. Q. i. 4. 22. Coigrave uses bouse to translate F. boire.—MDu. būsen*, MDu. buisen, buisen, to drink deeply; Oudemans. Cf. MDu. būze, būzer, a drinking-vessel with two handles (Oudemans); clearly the same word as the modern Du. buis, a tube, pipe, conduit, channel. Cf. also OF. buse, buisse, a conduit; G. bansen, to bouse.

BOUT, a spell (of work), &c.; properly, a turn, turning, bending. (Low G.) Formerly bought: Milton has bout, L'Allegro, 139; Spenser has bought, F. Q. i. 1. 15; i. 11. 11. Palsgrave (1530) has: 'Bought of the arme.' Levins has: 'Bought, plica, ambages, 217. 31.—Low G. bugt, a bend, turn; also, a gull, bay, bight (as a naut. term); Norw. bugt, EFries. bucht, a turn; cf. Icel. búga, a bend, a serpent's coil (the sense in which Spenser uses bought). All from Teut. bug*, weaker grade of būgan*, to bow. See Bow (1) and Bight.

¶ Wedgwood suggests the possibility that 'in the expressions of a drinking-bout, a bout of fair or foul weather,' we have to do with a different word. Cotgrave gives: 'par boutées, by fits, or pushes, not all at once, fits, now and then;' which just answers to L. by bouts. As boutée is merely the fem. pp. of bouter, to thrust, to bout, it would seem that such a bout is a bout, i.e. a thrust. Cf. Span. bote, a thrust, Ital. botta, 'a blow', a stroke, a time; Florio. Wedgwood further remarks that 'the Du. but or botte, a stroke or blow (ictus, impulsus)—Kilian, as well as the nasalised boute, is used in the dialect of West Flanders exactly as E. bout. Een bot regen, eene botte wind, vorst: a bout of rain, wind, frost. Bij botte, botten; by bouts or intervals. Eene botte, or boute goed, nat droog, weeder: a bout of good, wet, dry weather. De knukkele is bij botten: a bout of the chincough comes in fits; see De Ho. West Flem. Dict. So also the Koolman, in his East Fries. Dict., gives the form bot, as in elk bot ween rügend, every time that it rains. But this is accidental, and only accounts for a form bot, not bout (which means a turn).

BOW (1), vb., to bend. (E.) ME. bugen, būwen, bowen, bouwen, (E.) bown, būcto, curvo: Prompt. Parv. p. 46. Very common. AS. būgan, to bend (gen. intransitive). Grein, i. 149. +Du. buigen, to bend (both trans. and intrans.). Teut. būgan*, to bow; also beugan*, as in Goth. būgan (tr. and intr.); OHG. piogan, G. beugen. Allied to L. figere, to turn to flight, give way; Gk. φύγω, to flee; Skt. bhuj, to bend. = BHEUGH*, to bend, to turn aside. Also in the form BIEUG; Brugm. i. §§ 658, 701. Der. bow (a weapon), bow-man, bow-yeer (= bow-war, bow-maker), bow-string, bow-window, &c.; also bight, bought, bout.

BOW (2), a bend. (E.) 'From the boue [bend] of the ryuer of Humber anon to the ryuer of Thysse' [Tees]; Trevisa, tr. of Higden, ii. 87. From the verb above.

BOW (3), a weapon to shoot with. (E.) Chaucer has boue, Frol. 108. AS. boga; Grein, i. 132. +Du. bog; Icel. bogi; Swed. buge; Dan. bue; OHG. bugo, boga; G. bogen. Teut. type bug-on*, m., from bug*, weaker grade of beugan*, to bend; see Bow (1). Der. bow-yeer, Palsgrave, and Prompt. Parv.

BOW (4), as a naut. term, the 'bow' of a ship. (Scand.) In Kersey (1658) and see quotation under Bowline.—Icel. bigr; Dan. bog, Swed. bog; the 'shoulder' of a ship; the same word as the bough, or 'arm' of a tree. So also MDu. boech, Low G. boog. See Bough. ¶ Not from Bow (1). Der. bow-line, bow-sprit.

BOWEL, intestine. (F.—L.) ME. boue, Gower, C. A. ii. 265; bk. v. 4137.—OF. boele, f., Godefroy; and boel, m., Godef. Suppl. mod. F. boyau.—L. botellum, acc. of botellus, a sausage, also, intestine; dimin. of botulus, a sausage.

Müller). β. The orig. sense is a dwelling-place, a place to be in; from AS. būan, to dwell. Teut. types bū-on*, n., bū-roz*, m. See Boor. Der. bower-y, bur-ly, q. v.; byre, q. v.

BOWIE-KNIFE, a large knife, esp. in America. (Personal name.) Mentioned by Dickens, in 1842; Amer. Notes, ed. 1850, p. 32. Named from Col. Jas. Bowie.

BOWL (1), a round ball of wood for a game. (F.—L.) The Prompt. Parv. has: 'Boule, bolus;' p. 46; and again: 'Boulyn, or play wythe bowlys, bolo.' Spelt bowle in Lydgate and Hoccleve. The spelling with ou points to the old sound of ou (as in sup), and shows that, in this sense, the word is French.—F. 'boule, a bowle, to play with;' Cot.—L. bulia, a bubble, a stud; later, a metal ball affixed to a papal bull, &c. See Bowl (2), Bull (2), and Ball (1). Der. bowl, vb.; bowl-er, bowl-ing-green.

BOWL (2), a drinking-vessel. (E.) The spelling has been assimilated to that of Bowl, a ball to play with; but the word is English. ME. bolle, P. Plowman, B. v. 369; pl. ballen, Layman, ii. 406. AS. bolle, a bowl; Grein, i. 132. +Icel. bolli, a bowl; OHG. bolle, MHG. bolle, a bowl. β. Teut. type būlon*, for būl-non*, to puff up, weak grade of būl*, to swell; cf. Goth. uf-bauljan, to puff up. Called bowl from its rounded shape. See Bolster.

BOWLDER; see Boulder.

BOWLINE, naut. term. (E.) Often wrongly defined; see

N. E. D. So called because it fastens the weather-edge of a square sail to the ship's bow; but the word is now usually wrongly pronounced, and associated with bow (1). So also in the case of bowline. ME. boulyne, Rob. of Brunne, in notes to Layman, iii. 395. 'Hale the boulyne!' Pilgrim's Sea Voyag. ed. Furnivall, i. 25. From bow (4) and line; cf. Norw. and Swed. boglin, bowline, from bog, bow of a ship; Du. boeglijn, from boeg, bow of a ship. See Bow (4) and Line.

BOW WINDOW, a bowed window. (E.) At one time discredited in literature, because it was once asserted to be an incorrect form of bay-window, a word used by Shak. Yet it is a distinct word, and not a mere corruption of it. (1) A bay-window is a window forming a recess in the room; see Bay (3). (2) A bow-window is a specific kind of bay-window, viz. one of semi-circular form. The etymology is from bow (2), a bend.

BOX (2), a case to put things in, a chest. (L.—Gk.) ME. box, Chaucer, C. T. 4394 (A 4390). AS. box; Matt. xvii. 7. (Not a native word).—L. boxus, anything made of box-wood; Late L. boxis, a box.—L. boxus, box-tree; from Gk. xyfos (above); cf. Gk. xyfos, a case of box-wood. See Box (1). Thus box is closely allied to pyre, q. v. ¶ Hence flow a great many meanings in English; such as (1) a chest; (2) a box at the theatre; (3) a shooting-box; (4) a Christmas box; (5) a seat in the front of a coach (with a box under it formerly); &c. N.B. The orig. Christmas-box was an actual box of earthenware, in which apprentices collected pence from customers at Christmas; it was then broken to get at the contents; Brand, Pop. Antiq. ed. Ellis, i. 494.

BOX (3). (L.—Gk.) In the phr. 'to box the compass,' the word is applied to going round the compass-box, naming all the points in order. From Box (2).

BOX (4), to fight with fists; a blow. (E.) 'Box, or buffet; alapa,' Prompt. Parv. p. 46; 'many a bloody box;' Chaucer, Good Women, 1388. The vb. is from the sb., which seems to have been imitative of the sound of a blow. Cf. Low G. baake, a beating, a blow; baaken, to strike. Also NFries. bakke, Silt bokke, a blow (Outzen); MHG. buc, a blow; EFries. bāken, bāken, Du. beuken, Low G. baken (Lübben), to beat; Wflém. bokken, to hit hard. (Du. and G. boxen are from E.) Der. box-er.

Du. boef, a knave, a villain; MDu. boef, a boy, youngling (Oudemans); Icel. búfi, a knave, a rogue. +MHG. buebe (G. bube); Iavaian bueh, bua, bui, a boy. Cf. AS. Būfa, a personal name; Pomernan. houe, a boy. Der. boy-ish, boy-ish-ly, boy-ish-ness, boy-hood. ¶ The Gael. boban, a term of affection for a boy, bobing, a fellow, a boy, a term of affection or familiarity, are words that have no relation here, but belong to E. babe. See Babe.

BOYCOTT, to combine with others in refusing to have dealings with a certain person. (E.) From the treatment accorded to Capt. Boycott, of Lough Mass House, co. Mayo, Ireland, in Dec. 1880.

BRABBLE, to quarrel; a quarrel. (E.) Shak. has brabble, a quarrel, Tw. Nt. v. 68; and brablier, a quarrelsome fellow, K. John, v. 2. 162. An imitative word, like babble, blab. Cf. Du. brabbelen, to confound, to stammer; whence brabbelaar, a stammerer, brabbel-taal, nonsensical discourse; brabbeling, stammering, confusion. Compare Blab and Babble. Der. brabbl-er.

BRACE, that which holds firmly, a clasp, cramp; to hold firmly. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'A drum is ready braced;' K. John, v. 2. 169. 'Brace of a balke, uncus;' Prompt. Parv.—OF. brace, brasse, fem., originally the two arms (Bartsch); then a measure of five feet, formed by the extended arms; see Godefroy and Cotgrave. = L. brachia, pl. of brachium, the arm; treated as a fem. sing.—Gk. brachion, the arm. See below. Der. brace, vb., to tighten, orig. to hold fast; brace-let, em-brace.

BRACELET, an ornament for the wrist or arm. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'Ispie a bracelet bounde about mine arme;' Gascoigne, Dan Bartholomew's Dolorous Discourses, l. 237 (p. 117). = F. bracelet (Cot.); dimin. of OF. bracel, an armlet (Godefroy). = L. brachiū, an armlet (see Brachet, s. v. bracel). = L. brachium, the arm.—Gk. Brachion, the arm. Cf. Irish brac, W. braich, Bret. bréach, the arm; from L.

BRACH, a kind of hunting-dog. (F.—G.) Shak. has brack, Lear, iii. 6. 72, &c. ME. brache, Gawain and the Grene Knight, ed. Morris, l. 1142; shortened from AF. brachet (Suppl. to Godefroy); OF. braguet. Dimin. of OF. brac (acc. bracan; see Littré), a hunting-dog, hound.—OHG. bracco, MHG. bracke (G. bracke), a dog who hunts by the scent. β. The origin of OHG. bracco is unknown; some take it to be from the root seen in L. frägräre, to emit an odour; but this is only a guess. γ. There is a remarkable similarity in sound and sense to ME. racke, a kind of dog; cf. Icel. rakki, a dog, a lapdog; MSwed. racka, a bitch, which can hardly be disconnected from MSwed. racka, to run; but the resemblance seems to be accidental.

BRACK, BRACKISH, somewhat salt, said of water. (Dutch.) 'Water . . . so salt and brackish as no man can drink it;' North's Plutarch, p. 471 (R.); cf. brackishness in the same work, p. 610. Gwain Douglas (ed. Small, ii. 237) has brake = brackish, to translate salvo, 'Enaid v. 237' = Du. brak, brackish, briny; no doubt the same word that Kilian spells brack, and explains as 'fit to be thrown away'; Oudemans, i. 802. According to Franck, it may well be a later spelling of MDu. wrack; Hexham has: 'wrack, or brack, brack, or saltish'; also 'wracke, shipwrack'; and cf. Du. wracken, to reject, blame. = Du. wrak, orig. 2nd grade of wreken, to wreak, orig. to drive. See WRECK, WREAK. [So also Du. wrang, sour, is allied to wringen, to wring; Franck.] Der. brackish-ness.

BRACKEN, fern. (E.) ME. bracken, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1675. 'A brakun, filix; a brakenbuske, filicarium;' Cath. Angl. AS. braccan, pl.; Kemble, C. Cf. also Icel. brúki, fern. ¶ Bracken the shorter form brake, often used as synonymous with fern; thus, in the Prompt. Parv. p. 47, we have 'Brake, herbe, or ferme (sic for ferme), Filix'; also 'Brakebushe, or fernebrake, Filicetum, filicarium;' and see Way's note. See also Brake (2).

BRACKET, a kind of corbel, a support consisting of two pieces of wood or iron joined at an angle; &c. (F. = Span. = C.) A technical word. Earliest spelling bragget. Baret (1580) has: 'a bragget or staite cut out of stone or timber . . . to beare up the sommer [beam] or other part.' Coles (1684) has 'brackets, braggetts, peeces supporting the ship's gallery.' Minshew (1627) has: 'bragget, a corbell.' Cotgrave has: 'Brague, a kind of mortaise, or joining of peeces together;' and 'Braguelte, a cod-piece,' i.e. the front part of a pair of breeches. = Span. braguetta, the same; also, 'a projecting mould in architecture.' Cf. MF. bragues, breeches; Span. bragas, breeches; from the notion of a fork. = L. brāca, breeches; said to be of Celtic origin. Cf. OF. braccon, branch or fork of a tree, also a bracket, support, joint; allied to MItal. bragani, 'great breeches'; Florio.

Parv. p. 53, where it is explained as 'a hedlese nayle.' = Icel. bradr, a spike; Swed. bradd, a frost-nail; Dan. brødd, a frost-nail. + AS. brord, a spike or spire or blade of grass, which see in Bosworth; and the second r in brord stands for an older z. Cf. also AS. brēw, brāw, m., eye-lid; MItal. bravuen, eye-brows, branne, 'the edge of any thing;' Hexham. Distinct from Brow (1), q.v.

Plowman, A. vii. 142 (B. vi. 156), and the vb. to brag is to be regarded rather as Scand. than French.] = MDan. brage, to crack, also to speak great words (Kalkar); Norw. braka, to snap, also to prate, chatter (Ross); Icel. braka, to crack. Cf. Jutland brag, a noise (Feilberg); AS. gebræc, a crash, noise. From Teut. brak-, 2nd stem of brekan-, to break; cf. L. frag-or, noise. Hence also MF. bracuer, 'to flout, brag'; Cot. See Stokes-Fick, p. 220. ¶ The Lowland Scottish bragwort is a corrupt form, due to an attempt to explain the Welsh suffix -ot.

BRAHMIN, BRAHMAN, a person of the upper caste among Hindoos. (Skt.) Spelt brachman in Ben Jonson, The Fortunate Isles. But the word appears early in Middle English. 'We were in Dragmanis bred,' we were born in Brahman-land; Romance of Alexander and Dindimus, 175. In the Latin original, the men are called Bragmanni, i.e. Brahmanas. The country is called 'Bramande'; King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 5916. = Skt. brāhmaṇa, base of brāhmā, m., a brahman, holy man; cf. also Skt. brahman-, base of brāhma, n., a prayer; 2, the practice of austere devotion. . . 7, the brahmanical caste; 8, the divine cause and essence of the world, the unknown god. BRAID (1), to weave, entwine. BRAKE (1), a machine for breaking hemp; a name for various mechanical contrivances. (MDu.) ME. brake, explained by 'pinsella, vibra, rastellum'; Prompt. Parv. p. 47, note 3. Cf. 'bowes of brake', cross-bows worked with a winch, P. Plowman, C. xxi. 293. One of the meanings is 'a contrivance for confining refractory horses'; connecting it at once with MDu. brake, a clog or fetter for the neck; bracke, 'a brake to beate flax.' Hexham; brake, an instrument for holding by the nose (Oudemans). Cf. Low G. brake, an instrument for breaking flax; braken, to break flax; Bremen Wörterbuch, i. 132. Thus the word is MDu. from which source also comes the F. 'braquer, to brake hemp;' Cotgrave. Comparison of Du. brak, a breach, breaking, with Du. vlasbrak, a flax-brake, shows that braken, to break flax, is from brak, and grade of Du. breken, to break. See Break.

BRAKE (2), a bush, thicket; esp. of fern. (E.) Shk. has 'hawthorn-brake;' M. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 4, and 77. 'Brakebush or fernebrake, filicetum;' Prompt. Parv. AS. brac (f.), f. (?); we find searbracca, acc. pl. (?), in Birch, Cart. Saxon. ii. 295. Cf. Efric. brāk, thick bush, underwood. + Low G. 'Brake, weidenbusch' = willow-bush, in the Bremen Wörterbuch, i. 131. The notion seems to be allied to that of 'broken' ground, with the over-growth that springs from it. Cf. OHG. brācha, MItal. brāche, land broken up, but unsown. It may then be referred to the prolific √BHREG, to break. See Break, Brook. See also Bracken.

BRAMBLE, a rough prickly shrub. (E.) ME. brembil, Wyclif, Ecclesi. xliii. 21. AS. brimel, brembel; Gloss. to Cockayne's Leechdoms, vol. iii. ME. branche, Rob. of Glouc. p. 193, l. 3985. = F. branche, a branch. = Late L. branca, the claw of a bird or paw of a beast of prey. ¶ See Diez, who suggests that the Late L. branca is probably a very old word in vulgar Latin, as shown by the Ital. derivatives brancare, to grip, branciare, to grope; and by the Wallachian form brăncă, a forefoot; cf. also MSpan. branca, a paw (Minshew); OProv. branca, a branch; Walloon branke, a branch. Der. branch, vb., branch-let, branch-let, branch-less.

BRAND, a burning piece of wood; a mark made by fire; a sword. (E.) ME. brond, burning wood, Chaucer, C. T. A. 2338; a sword,

Will. of Palermo, l. 1244. AS. brand, brond, a burning, a sword; Grein, i. 135. Icel. brandr, a fire-brand, a sword-blade (from its flashing); Du. brand, a burning, fuel (cf. MDu. brand, a sword; Oudemans); Swed. and Dan. brand, a fire-brand, fire; OHG. brant, a brand, a sword. [The sense is (1) a burning; (2) a fire-brand; (3) a sword-blade, from its brightness.] β. From Teut. brann*, and grade of brennan*, to burn. See BURN.

BRAND- or BRANT-, as a prefix. (Scand.) In brant-fox, a kind of Swedish fox, for which the Swedish name is brundfår. Also in brantgoose or brandgoose, Swed. brandgås. The names were probably at first conferred from some notion of redness or brownness, or the colour of burnt wood, &c. The word seems to be the same as Brand, q. v. β. The redstart (i. e. red-tail) is sometimes called the brantail, i. e. the burnt tail; where the colour meant is of course red. γ. The prefix is probably of Scandinavian origin. See Brindled.

BRANDISH, to shake a sword, &c. (F. - Scand.) In Shak. Macb. i. 2. 17; &c. MF. brandisier, to brandish a sword; Will. of Palermo, 3294, 2322. = F. brandir (pres. pt. brandissant), to cast or hurl with violence, to shake, to brandish; Cot. = AF. brand, a sword, properly a Norman F. form; it occurs in Vie de St. Auban, ed. Atkinson, ll. 1234, 1203, 1499, 1838. Of Scandinavian origin; from Icel. brandr; see Brand. β. The more usual OF. brant answers to the OHG. form.

BRANDY, an ardent spirit. (Dutch.) Formerly called brandywine, brandwine, from the former of which brandy was formed by dropping the last syllable. Brandywine occurs in Beaumont and Fletcher, Beggars Bush, i. 1. = Du. brandewijn, brandy; lit. burnt wine; sometimes written brandwijn. = Du. brandt, gebrandt (full form gebrandet), burnt; and wijn, wine. β. The Dutch branden, lit. to burn, also means to distil, whence Du. brander, a distiller, branderij, a distillery; hence the sense is really 'distilled wine', brandy having been originally obtained from wine by distillation.

BRANKS, an iron instrument used for the punishment of scolds, fastened in the mouth. (E.) Described in Jamieson's Dict.; hence the Lowland Sc. brank means to bridle, restrain. From the E. branks were borrowed Gael. brangus, brangas (formerly spelt brancas), an instrument used for punishing petty offenders, a sort of pillory; Gael. brang, a horse's halter; Irish branca, a halter. The form brank is probably due to a Celtic pron. of the E. word, of which the original form must have been prang (pl. prangs); whence both mod. E. prang and mod. F. pang, which see. + Du. pranger, pinchers, barmale, iron collar; G. pranger, a pillory. β. The root appears in Du. prangen, to pinch; cf. Goth. ana-pragan, to harass, worry (with gg sounded as ng). ¶ For the Gaelic br<pr in some cases, cf. Gael. bruidail, proud, from F. proud (MacLachl.) and see Brass.

BRAN-NEW, new from the fire. (E.) A corruption of brand-new, which occurs in Ross's Hellenore, in Jamieson and Richardson. The variation brant-new occurs in Burns's Tam O'Shanter: 'Nae cotillion brant-new frae France.' Kilian gives Mid. Dutch brandnieuwe, and we still find Du. vonkelnieuwe, lit. spark-new, from vonkel, a spark of fire. 'The brand is the fire, and brand-new, equivalent to fire-new (Shak.), is that which is fresh and bright, as being newly come from the forge and fire;' Trench, English Past and Present, Lect. viii. See Brand.

BRANT-, prefix; see Brand-.

BRASIER, BRAZIER, a pan to hold coals. (F. - Scand.) The former spelling is better; see Johnson's Dict. [Evidently formed from F. braise, live coals, embers. Cotgrave gives brasier, but only in the same sense as mod. F. braise.] = F. brasier, a vessel for receiving braise when quenched (Litttré). = F. braise, live coals. = Swed. brasa, fire; Norw. bras, flame. See Brass and Braze (1).

BRASS, a mixed metal. (E.) ME. bras (l. 61), Prompt. Parv. p. 47; Chaucer, Prolog. 366. AS. bras, Ælfie's grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 15. Icel. bras, soldier (cited by Wedgwood, but not in Cleasby and Vigfusson's Dictionary). Cf. Gael. prais, brass, pot-metal; Irish bras, brass; W. pras, brass; all borrowed words. Perhaps allied to Icel. brasa, to harden by fire; Swed. brasa, to flame; Dan. brase, to fry; Norw. brasa, to flame, also to solder. Cf. Swed. brasa, fire. Dor. brassy, brazy-en (ME. bracen, P. Plowman, C. xli. 293 = AS. bracen, Ælf. Gramm., as above), braz-tier; also braze (2), verb, q. v.; and cf. brasier (above).

BRASSART, the piece of armour on the upper part of the arm. (F. - L. - Gk.) Also brassard. = F. brasart (Cot.); brassard (Litttré); also brassat (Cot.). Formed with suffix -ard (-art) from F. bras, arm. = L. brachium, arm. = Gk. βραχίον, arm.

BRAT (1), a cloak, rough mantle. (C.) Usually a rag, clout, also, a child's apron or pinafore. Chaucer has brat for a coarse cloak, a ragged mantle, C. T. 16349 (ed. Tyrwhitt); some MSS. have bak, meaning a cloth to cover the back, as in P. Plowman, G. brat, a mantle, cloak, apron, rag; brat-speldith, a swaddling-cloth; Irish brat, a cloak, mantle, veil; bratog, a rag; OIrish brat, a rough cloak; cf.

W. breithyn, woollen cloth. (W. brat is from E.) See Stokes-Fick, p. 182. ¶ The O. Northumbrian brat, a cloak, a gloss to pallium in Matt. v. 40, was borrowed from the Celtic.

BRAT (2), a child; esp. 'a beggar's brat.' (C. 1) In Shak. Com. Errors, iv. 4. 39. Perhaps 'a rag'; and the same as Brat (1).

BRATTICE, a fence of boards in a mine. (F. - Teut. ?) ME. bratage, bratase, brutase (with numerous other spellings), a parapet, battlement, outwork, &c.; Rob. of Glouc., p. 536; l. 11095. 'Bratras, bratase, bratays of a walle, propugnaculum.' Prompt. Parv. p. 50. = OF. bratseche, a small wooden outwork, &c.; Prov. bertresca, Ital. bertesca. A difficult word; prob. formed from G. breit, a plank. Körtling, § 1564. See Board (1).

BRAVADO, a vain boast. (Span.) It occurs in Burton, Anat. of Melancholy, To the Reader; ed. 1845, p. 35 (see Todd). An E. substitution for bravada. = Span. bravada, a bravado, boast, vain ostentation. = Span. bravo, brave, valiant; also, fierce; cognate with F. brave. See Brave.

BRAVE, showy, valiant. (F. - Ital.) Shak. has brave, valiant, splendid; brave, vb., to defy, make fine; brave, sb., defiance; bravery, display of valour, finery; see Schmidt's Shak. Lexicon. = F. brave, brave, gay, fine, . . . proud, braggard, . . . valiant, hardy, &c.; Cot. = Ital. bravo, brave, fine, also a loafer (Florio). Cf. Span. and Port. bravo; Prov. bran. Of unknown origin; for unsatisfactory suggestions, see Körtling, § 1226. The Lowland Scottish form is brave. Der. brave-ry; also bravo, bravado, which see below and above.

BRAVO, a daring villain, a bandit. (Ital.) 'No bravos here profess the bloody trade;' Gay, Trivia, bk. iii. l. 151. = Ital. bravo, brave, valiant; as a sb., a cut-throat, villain; whence also the F. brave. See Brave. β. The word bravo! well done! is the same word, used in the vocative case.

BRAWL (1), to quarrel, roar. (E. ?) ME. brawle, to quarrel. 'Brawlere, litigator; brawlyn, litigo, jurgio;' Prompt. Parv. p. 48. Brawlyn, P. Plowman, B. xv. 233. Apparently a native word, of imitative origin; cf. prov. G. (Kurhessen) brallen, to cry out lustily; Du. brallen, to brag, boast; Dan. bralle, to jabber, chatter; G. prahlen, to boast, brag, bluster; ÆFries. pralen, to talk loudly, boast; NFries. prale (the same). Even G. brüllen, to roar, bellow, is of a similar character. Der. brawl-er, brawl-ing.

BRAWL (2), a sort of dance. (F. - Scand.) In Shak. Love's La. Lo. iii. 9, we have 'a French brawl.' Sir T. Elyot mentions 'the braule;' The Governour, bk. i. c. 22. § 4; see the dance described in the note in Croft's ed., i. 242. It is a corruption of the F. branle, MF. bransle, explained by Cot. as 'a totter, swing, shake, shooke, &c.; also a bravle or daunce, wherein many men and women, holding by the hands, sometimes in a ring, and otherwise at length, move all together.' = F. branler, to totter, shake, reel, stagger, waver, tremble (Cot.); now spelt branler. Contracted from OF. brandler, to shake, agitate; and Cotgrave gives brandler, to wag, shake, swing, totter; as well as braudf, brandishing, shaking, flourishing, lively. All from OF. brandir, to totter, tremble (Godefroy); a neuter use of brandir, to shake, brandish. Körtling, § 1545. See Brandish.

BRAWN, muscle; boar's flesh. (F. - OHG.) ME. brawn, muscle, Chaucer, Prolog. 546; brawn, boar's flesh, P. Plowman, B. xlii. 63, 91. = OF. brawn, a slice of flesh (Provençal bradon). = OIIG. brāto, brāto, brāton, acc. of MIIIG. brāte, a piece of flesh (for roasting). = OIIG. prātan (G. braten), to roast, broil. + AS. brædan, to roast. Teut. root brād-*. ¶ The restriction of the word to the flesh of the boar is accidental; the original sense is merely 'muscle,' as seen in the derived ad. Der. brawn-y, muscular; Shak. Venus, 625. Cf. Breath.

BRAY (1), to bruise, pound. (F. - Teut.) ME. brayen, brayin; 'brayyn, or stampyn in a mortere, tero;' Prompt. Parv. p. 47. = OF. breier (F. broyer); Roquefort. = OSax. brekan, to break; cognate with AS. brecan, to break. See Break.

BRAY (2), to make a loud noise, as an ass. (F. - C.) ME. brayen, brayin; 'brayyn in sonwde, barrio;' Prompt. Parv. p. 47. Palgrave has: 'I braye as deere doth, or any other beast, Je brays.' = OF. braye. = Low L. bragire, to bray, bragire, to cry as a child, squall. From a Celtic root; cf. Gael. bragh, a hurst, explosion; cognate with L. frag-or, noise, crash; and thus related to L. frangere and E. break (Thurneysen, p. 92). See Break.

BRAZE (1), to harden. (F. - Scand.) Shak. has brazed, hardened, Hamlet, iii. 4. 37; Lear, i. 1. 11. Generally explained to mean 'hardened like brass'; but it may mean simply 'hardened.' Cotgrave says that 'braser l'argent' is to re-pass silver a little over hot embers (sic la braise). = OF. braser, to burn, pass through fire (Godefroy); F. braser, to solder; Roquefort has: 'Braser, souder le fer.' = Icel. brasa, to harden by fire; Norw. brasa, to solder; Dan. brase, to fry; Jutland brase, to roast. See Brass, and see below.

BRAZE (2), to ornament with brass. (E.) Used by Chapman, Homer's Odys. xv. 113. In this sense, the verb is a mere derivative of the sb. bras. We find: 'aero, ie brasi;' Ælfric's Gr., ed. Zupitza, p. 215, l. 17.

BREACH, a fracture. (E.) ME. breche, a fracture, Gower, C. A. ii. 138; bk. v. 334. AS. breca, which appears in the compound hlāf-gēbrece, a fragment of a loaf, bit of bread; Grein, ii. 80. The more usual form is AS. brice = bryce, breaking; in the phr. 'on hlāfes brice, in the breaking of bread, Luke xxiv. 35; where bryce represents a Teut. type brukiz*, from the weak grade of bruka, to break (AS. brucan). Cf. OFries. bruka, a breaking (a common word); Eñries. brak, a breaking. ¶ ME. breche is also partly from OF. breche (F. brèche), a fracture. — G. brechen, to break. See BREAK.

BREAD, food made from grain. (E.) ME. breed, brad, Chaucer, Prol. 343. AS. brād, Grein, i. 140. +Du. brood; Icel. bræd; Swed. and Dan. brød; OHG. brūt (G. brød). β. Not found in Gothic. The orig. name for 'bread' was loaf (AS. hlāf); the sense of bread was orig. 'a fragment,' bit, or broken piece; cf. ONorthumb. brēad, a bit, morsel, John xiii. 27; pl. brædras, 'frusta pānis,' in the Blickling Glosses. Teut. type braudos*, neut. (-os-stem). Cf. L. frus-tum, a fragment.

BREADTH, wideness. (E.) This is a modern form. It occurs in Lord Berners' tr. of Froissart, spelt breadthe, vol. i. c. 131 (R.). β. In older authors the form is brade, as in Chaucer, C. T. 1972 (A 1970). AS. brādus; Grein, i. 137. y. Other languages agree with the old, not with the modern form; cf. Goth. brāids, Icel. breidd, G. breite; all from Teut. bradizō*, broad. The Dutch is breedte. See BROAD.

BREAK, to fracture, snap. (E.) ME. breke, Chaucer, Prol. 551. AS. breacan; Grein, i. 137. +Du. breken; Goth. brikan; OHG. brēchan (G. brachen). +L. frangere, to break. Teut. type brakan*-, strong vb.; pt. t. brak, pp. brakanaz*. From the 2nd grade we have Icel. braka, to crack; Swed. braka, to crack. Idg. √BIREG, to break with a noise. ¶ The original sense is 'to break with a snap;' cf. L. fragor, a crash; Gael. bragh, a burst, explosion. Der. breach, q.v.; break-age, break-er, break-fast, break-water, brake (1).

BREAM, a fish. (F. — OHG.) ME. breem, Chaucer, Prol. 350. — OF. bresme (F. brème). — MIHG. brāsem, G. brassen, a bream (Kluge). +Du. brasm, a bream. Perhaps related to MIHG. brē-en, to glitter. ¶ E. brasse, a kind of perch, is not from Du. or Low G., but from AS. bars; see BASS (2).

BREAST, the upper part of the front of the body. (E.) ME. brast, Chaucer, Prol. 115. AS. brēast; Grein, i. 141. +Icel. brjóst; Swed. bröst; Dan. bryst; Teut. type breustom*, n. +Goth. brusts, pl.; G. brust; Du. borst; Teut. stem brust-* (with weak grade). Origin unknown. Der. breast, verb; breast-plate, breast-work; breast-summer.

BREATH, air respired. (E.) ME. breeth, breith; dat. case breethe, brethe, Chaucer, Prol. 5. AS. bræð, breath, odour; Genesis, viii. 21. + OHG. brādam; G. broden, broden, brodel, steam, vapour, exhalation; Flügler's G. Dict. Bræth may have been likened to steam; prob. from the Teut. root brē-*, to heat; see BROWN and BROOD. Further relations uncertain. Der. breathes, breath-less.

BREECH, the hinder part of the body. (E.) ME. brech, breech, properly the breeches or breeks, or covering of the breech; in Chaucer, C. T. 12882 (C 948), the word breecch means the breeches, not the breech. Thus the present word is a mere development of AS. brēce, the breeches, pl. of brīc. Phillips (1658) notes: 'Breech (a term in Gunney) the aftermost part of a gun.' See BREECHES.

BREECHES, BREEKS, a garment for the thighs. (E.) ME. 'breche, or breke, braccæ, plur.' Prompt. Parv. p. 48; and see Way's note. Breeches is a double plural, the form brech being itself plural; as feet from foot, so is brech from brook. AS. brūc, sing. brīc, plural (Bosworth); +Du. broek, a pair of breeches; Icel. brók, pl. brákr, breeches; MIHG. brunck, breeches. All from a Teut. base brūk-* (pl. brūkiz*). Cf. L. bricr, clothing for the legs, said to be of Celtic origin; prob. from Celtic brīg-n-*, and cognate with the Teut. form. See BROGUES.

BREED, to produce, engender. (E.) ME. brede, P. Plowman, B. xl. 339. AS. brīdan, to nourish, cherish, keep warm (= L. fovere), in a gloss; Voc. 403. 39. Ælfric, Hom. ii. 10, has: 'hi brīdab heora brād, they nourish their brood. — AS. brīd, a brood (with mutation of ā to ē); +Du. broeden, to hatch, from broed, a brood; G. brüten, to hatch, from brut, a brood. See BROOD. Der. breed-er, breed-ing.

BREEZE (1), a gaffly. (E.) Well known in Shak. Troil. i. 3. 48; Ant. and Cleop. iii. 10. 14. Cotgrave has: 'Oestre lunonica, a gad-bee, horse-fly, dun-fly, brimsey, brisse.' ME. brise; Prompt. Parv. p. 49. AS. brīsa; Voc. 7. 20; 49. 42. ¶ The form brimsey is a distinct word; from Norw. brims, Dan. bræms, a gaffly; cf. Du. brème, G. brème, s. brème, OHG. brumo, all from Teut. brēm-*, as in OHG. brēman (pt. t. brām), to hum, cognate with L. fremer, to murmur. +Skt. bhramara-s, a large black bee; from Skt. bhram, to whirl, applied originally to 'the flying about and humming of insects,' Benfey, p. 670. See Fick, i. 702.

BREEZE (2), a strong wind. (F.) Brachet says that the F. brise, a breeze, was introduced into French from English towards the end of the 17th century. This can hardly be the case. The quotations in N.E.D. show that the E. word was at first spelt brize or brise, as in Hakluyt's Voyages, iii. 661; and in Sir F. Drake's The Worlde Encompassed. The earliest is ab. 1505, in Arber's Eng. Garner, v. 121: 'the brise . . . which is the north-east wind.' This shows that the E. word was borrowed from French, since brize is a French spelling. β. Again, Cotgrave notes that brize is used by Rabelais (died 1553) instead of bise or bize, signifying the north wind. +Span. brisa, the N. E. wind; Port. briza, the N. E. wind; Ital. brezza, a cold wind. Remoter origin unknown. Der. brez-y.

BREEZE (3), cinders. (F. — Scand.) Breeze is a name given, in London, to ashes and cinders used instead of coal for brick-burning. In Ash's Dict. 1775. Also spelt brize (N.E.D.), — MF. breze (Cot.); F. brise, live cinders. — Swed. brasa, fire; see BRASER.

BRENT-GOOSE, the same as BRANT-GOOSE; see BRAND.

BRESSOMER, for BREAST-SUMMER, a 'summer' or beam extending horizontally over a wide opening, to support a wall above (Hybrid; E. and F. — Late L. — Gk.) Cotgrave has: 'Contre-frontail, the brow-piece, or upmost part of a door; a haunce, or breust-summer.' See BREAST and SUMMER (2).

BREVE, a short note, in music. (F. — L.) [As a fact, it is now a long note; and, the old long note being now disused, has become the longest note now used.] Formerly also brief; Florio has: 'breue, a briefe in musike.' — MF. brief (F. bréf), brief, short. — L. brevis, short. Breve is a doublet of brief, q.v. Der. From the L. brevis we also have breu-er, lit. a short document, which passed into English from F. breuet, which Cotgrave explains by 'a briefe, note, breviate, little writing,' &c. Also breu-i-ar-y, breu-i-er, breu-i-ty; semi-breve. See Brief.

BREW, to concoct. (E.) ME. brew, pt. t., P. Plowman, B. v. 219; brewe, infin. Sæm. Sages, ed. Wright, l. 1490. AS. brēowan; of which the pp. gebræwen occurs in Ælfric's Orosius, ed. Sweet, p. 20, l. 19. +Du. brōwen; OHG. brīuwan (G. brauen); Icel. brugga; Swed. brugga; Dan. brugga. [Cf. L. dēfrutum, new wine fermented or boiled down; Thracian βρῦρον, a kind of beer.] — √BHREU, to decoct. Brugm. i. § 273, 727. Der. brew-er, brew-house, brew-ery.

BREWIS, BROWIS, pottage; see BROSE.

BRIAR, BRIER, a prickly shrub. (E.) ME. brere, Chaucer, C. T. 9699 (E 1823). (Omerc. brēr, Grein, i. 140; AS. bræmel-brær, Voc. 269. 38. ¶ ME. brere has become briar just as ME. frere has become friar. Der. briar-y.

BRIAR-ROOT, for pipes. (Hybrid; F. and E.) The root is that of the white heath; and briar is here a popular corruption of F. bruyère, heath. See N.E.D.

BRIBE, an undue present, for corrupt purposes. (F.) ME. brībe, brybe; Chaucer, C. T. 6966 (D 1378). — OF. brībe, a present, gift, but esp. 'a peccet, lumps, or cantill of bread, given unto a begger;' Cot. [Cf. brībours, i.e. vagabonds, rascals, spoilers of the dead, P. Plowman, C. xxiii. 263.] Allied to OF. brībe, to beg; Span. brība, idleness, brībar, to loiter about; Ital. brība, fraud; brībante, a vagabond. Origin unknown; not Celtic (Thurneysen). Der. brībe, verb; brīb-er, brīb-ery.

BRICK, a lump of baked clay. (F. — O. Low G.) In Fabyan's Chron. Edw. IV. an. 1476-7; and in the Bible of 1551, Exod. cap. v. Spelt brīque, Nicoll's Thucydides, p. 64 (R. i.). — F. brīque, a brick; also a fragment, a bit, as in prov. F. brīque de pain, a bit of bread (Brachet). — MDu. brīck, brīcke, a bit, fragment, piece; whence also Walloon brīquet, a large slice of bread. — Du. breken, to break, cognate with E. break. See BREAK. Der. brīck-bat, q.v.; brīck-kīn, brīck-ly-er.

BRICKBAT, a piece of a broken brick. (F. and E.) Used by Bacon; see Todd's Johnson. From brick and bat. Here bat is a rough lump; it is merely the ordinary word bat peculiarly used. See BAT.

BRIDE, a woman newly married. (E.) ME. brīde, bryde, Prompt. Parv. p. 50. Older spelling, brude; Layamon, B. ii. 43. AS. brīd; Grein, i. 147. +Du. brud; Icel. brúdr; Swed. and Dan. brud; Goth. brūths; OHG. brūt (G. braut). Teutonic type brādz*, f. Perhaps from an Idg. type mri-ti-*, bespoken, promised; cf. Zend. mraimi, Skt. bravimi, I speak; Uhlenbeck, s.v. brāths; Brugm. i. § 387, 401; and cf. Celtic root mri*, I say; Stokes-Fick, p. 221. Der. brīd-al, q.v.; brīde-groom, q.v.

Composed of bride and ale; the latter being a common name for a feast. (There were leet-ales, scot-ales, church-ales, clerk-ales, hid-ales, and bride-ales. See Brand's Pop. Antiquities.) The comp. brīd-calo occurs in the A. S. Chron. (MS. D.), under the date 1076. ¶ It is spelt brīde-ale in Ben Jonson, Silent Woman, ii. 4; but brīdall in Shak. Oth. iii. 4. 151. See Bride and Ale.

BRIDEGROOM, a man newly married. (E.) Tyndal has bridegrome; John, iii. 29. But the form is corrupt, due to confusion of groom, a groom, with gome, a man. In older authors, the spelling is without the r; we find brédgome in the Ayenbite of Inwytt, ed. Morris, p. 233, written A.D. 1340; so that the change took place between that time and A.D. 1525. AS. brýd-guma; Grein, i. 147; OHG. brudgumi; Icel. brúðgumi; Swed. brudgum; Dan. brudgom; OHG. bratigum (i. bratigum). β. The latter part of the word appears also in Goth. guma, a man, cognate with L. homo, a man. See Bride, Homage.

BRIDGE, a structure built across a river. (E.) ME. brigge, Chaucer, C. T. 3920 (A 3922); brig, Minot's Poems, vii. 78; brugge, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1187; brug, Kolb. of Glouc. p. 401 (l. 8285). AS. brýcg, brýcg (acc. brýge); Grein, i. 145; Icel. brýggja, Swed. brygga, Dan. brygge, a pier; Du. brug; OHG. prucea, G. brücke. Teut. type bruggja*, fem. Further allied to Icel. brá, a bridge; Dan. bro, a bridge, pavement; MSwed. bro, a bridge, a paved way. Perhaps allied to Russ. brevo, a beam, joist. Stokes-Fick, p. 184.

BRIDLE, a restraint for horses. (E.) ME. bridel, Ancien Riwle, p. 74. AS. bríðel, Grein, i. 142; for an earlier bríðel*; cf. AS. bríðils, a bridle, O. E. Texts, p. 44, l. 127. The stem is bréð-ll-*, from bréð-an, to pull, to twitch; see Braid. Parallel to G. züg-el, from zieh-en, to draw; Du. brídel; OHG. prídel, brídel, brítil; MHG. brítel; the F. bride being borrowed from this MHG. brídel. Similarly, the OHG. brítil is from OHG. brétan, cognate with AS. bréðan, to pull, weave, braid.

BRIEF (1), short. (F.—L.) Spelt brief in Barnes' Works, p. 347, col. 1, last line. In older English we find bref, breef, p. Plozman, C. xliii. 327; with the dimin. breve (brev), also, p. Plozman, C. i. 72. —OF. brief (so spelt in Cotgrave); mod. F. bréf, —L. brevis, short. —Gk. brévys, short. Der. briefly. And see below.

BRIEF (2), a letter, &c. (F.—L.) Cotgrave has: 'Brief, m. a writ, or brief; a short, mandamus, injunction, commission, &c.' From the adj. above. Der. brief-less.

BRIER, a ship. See Briar.

BRIER, a ship. See Briar.

BRIG, a ship. See Brigantine.

BRIGADE, a body of troops. (F.—Ital.) Milton has brigade, P. L. ii. 532. —F. 'brigade, a troop, crew, or company.' Cot. —Ital. brigata, a troop, band, company. —Ital. brigare, to quarrel, fight. See Brigand. Der. brigadier.

BRIGAND, a robber, pirate. (F.—Ital.) ME. brigand, Morte Arthure, 2096. Borrowed from F. brigand, an armed foot-soldier, which see in Cotgrave; who also gives 'Brigandier, to rob'; and 'Brigandage, a robbing, thievery.' —Ital. brigante, a busybody, intriguer; and, in a bad sense, a robber, pirate. —Ital. brigante, pres. part. of the verb brigare, to strive after, —Ital. briga, strife, quarrel, trouble, business; which see in Diez. ¶ No connexion with W. brigant, a highlander, from brig, a hill-top. Der. brigand-age; and see below.

BRIGANDINE, a kind of armour. (F.—Ital.) Brigandine, a kind of coat of mail, occurs in Jerem. xlii. 4, li. 3, A.V.; see Wright's Bible Word-book. —F. brigandine, 'a fashion of ancient armour, consisting of many jointed and scale-like plates.' Cot. So called because worn by brigands or robbers; see Brigand. ¶ The Ital. form is brigantina, a coat of mail.

BRIGANTINE, BRIG, a two-masted ship. (F.—Ital.) Brig is merely short for brigantine. Cotgrave has the latter, to translate the F. brigantin, which he describes. —F. brigantin. —Ital. brigantino, a pirate-ship. —Ital. brigante, an industrious, intriguing man; also, a robber, brigand. See Brigand.

BRIGHT, clear, shining. (E.) ME. bríght, Chaucer, C. T. 1064 (A 1062). AS. berht, berht (in common use); OS. berht, berakt (Heliand); Goth. berhts; Icel. bjart; OHG. perht, MHG. berht, shining. Teut. type berht-taz*, shining. Cf. W. berht, fair; Gk. phos-ós, white; Skt. bhargas, light. Der. bríghtly, bríghtness, bríght-en.

BRILL, a fish; Rhombus vulgaris. (E.) Spelt prille and brill in 1481-90 (N.E.D.). Of unknown origin; but Kalkar, in his M. Dan. Diet., s.v. butte, cites the G. pl. pfellen or pfillen, showing that the Low G. form was prob. prille. Cf. Bavar. pfille, a very small fish (Schmeller). Other K. forms were pearl, perl. Kalkar gives prill-mad, dainty meat, allied to prille, to poke, apparently with reference to its firmness; cf. Low G. prall, firm and fleshy, as e.g., a man's calf. The prill may have been named from the firmness of the flesh. ¶ Quite distinct from the Cornish brilli, mackerel; where brill-stands for brikel, a mackerel, formed by the dimin. suffix -el from Corn. brith, streaked, variegated, pied, speckled. [So in Irish and Gaelic, brac means both 'spotted' and 'a trout'; and in Manx, brack means both 'trout' and 'mackerel'.]

BRILLIANT, shining. (F.—L.—Gk.—Skt.) Not in early use. Dryden has brilliant, sb. meaning 'a gem'; Character of a Good Parson, last line but one. —F. brillant, glittering, pres. pt. of briller, to glitter, sparkle. —Late L. berylläre* (an unauthorised form), to sparkle like a precious stone or beryl (Brachet). —Late L. beryllus, beryllus, a gem, an eye-glass; see Diefenbach, Glossarium Latino-Germanicum; cf. berillus, an eye-glass, brillum, an eye-glass, in Du-cange. ¶ This etymology is rendered certain by the fact that in the G. brille, spectacles, is clearly a corruption of beryllus, a beryl; see Max Müller, Lectures on the Science of Language, ii. 583; 8th ed. 1875. See Beryl.

BRIM, edge, margin. (E.) ME. brim, brym, brimme, margin of a river, lake, or sea; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 1011, B. 365. AS. brymme (for brimme*?), a brim, border, margin. [The AS. brim, surf, sea, is prob. a different word.] Allied to Swed. bräm, border, edge; M.Dan. bræmme, bremme (Kalkar); Dan. bräm; MDu. breme; G. gebräm, border, verbrämen, to border. Cf. Icel. barmr, brim. Perhaps related to Barm (2). Cf. Brink. Der. brim-ful, brim-er.

BRIMSTONE, sulphur. (E.) Lit. 'burn-stone.' ME. brimston, brymston; brimston, brimston, Chaucer, Pro. 631 (A 629); also brimston, Wyclif, Gen. xix. 24; Deut. xxx. 23; cf. Icel. brennistein, brimstone. —ME. brim, burning (from the vb. brennen, to burn); and ston, a stone. β. So also the Icel. brennistein is from Icel. brenna, to burn, and stein, a stone. See Burn and Stone.

BRINDLED, BRINDED, streaked, spotted. (Scand.) Shak. has 'brinded cat'; Mach. iv. 1. 1; brindled being an extended quadriminutive form. ME. brindled; as in 'a grette brinded flye', in the Book of St. Albans, cd. 1496, p. 28; see N.E.D. Formed from brind, the pp. of brennen, to burn, the sense being 'branded'. Cf. prov. E. branded, brindled; also Icel. brind, in the comp. brindóttir, brindled, said of a cow, Cleasby and Vigfusson's Dict. App. p. 772. We also find Icel. brand-bróttir, brindled-brown with a white cross on the forehead; brandr, a brand, flame, firebrand, sword; brenna, to burn. ¶ Thus brinded is little more than another form of branded, the latter appearing again in Brinestone, q.v. And see Brand and Burn.

BRINE, pickle, salt water. (E.) ME. brine, brayne, Prompt. Parv. p. 61. —AS. brīne (for brīne), salt liquor, Elf. Gloss.; Voc. 128. 40. —MDu. brijn, brjne, pickle, sea-water (Oudemans); whence Du. brijn, brine, pickle. Der. briny.

BRING, to fetch. (E.) ME. bringen (common); pt. t. broughte. AS. bringan, pp. brungen (rare). Grein, i. 143; brēgan, pt. t. brūkte, pp. brūkt; the former being the strong and original form. —Du. brengen; Goth. briggan (with g sounded as ng); pt. t. brūhta; OHG. pringan (G. bringen). Teut. type brungjan-, pt. brūng-ta- brāht-ta* (whence AS. brengan); from a strong type brangan-* (whence AS. bringan).

BRINK, margin; but properly, a slope. (Scand.) ME. brink, edge of a pit, Chaucer, C. T. 9275 (B 1401); brēnk, a shore, Wyclif, John, xxi. 4. [Bi the so-called 'King Horn, 141, —ONorse branka*, Icel. breika, a slope, also a crest of a hill, a hill; allied to Low G. brink, sward at the edge of a field; a grassy hill (Lübben); Westphal. brink, edge of a hill. Cf. Brim.]

BRIONY; a variant of Briony, q.v.

BRISK, nimble, lively, smart, trim. (F.—Ital.) Not in early authors; used by Shak. and Milton. Apparently the same as Lowl. Sc. brisk, brisk (ab. 1560); N.E.D. —F. brisque, 'brisk, lively, quick, rash, harsh'; Cot. —Ital. brusco, tart, harsh. See Brusque. Der. briskly, brisk-ness. Doublet, brisque.

BRISKET, part of the breast-piece of meat. (F.—Scand.) Ben Jonson has brisket-bone; Sad Shepherd, i. 2: 'The brisket-bone, upon the spoon OF which a little gistle grows.' ME. brasket, Voc. 704. 8. —OF. brischet, a form given by Brachet, s.v. bracket, but bruschet in Littré; however, Cotgrave has 'Brichet, m. the brisket, or breast-piece'; also 'Bruchet, m. the craw-bone, or merry-thought of a bird'; F. brechet. [Bret. bruched, the breast, is from OF. bruchet.] The Guernsey briquet (Métivier) gives brusket* as the oldest type, as in ME. —Dan. brusk, Swed. brusk, MSwed. bryske (Ihre, s.v. brusk), Icel. brjask, gristle; cf. Norw. brjask, gristle, brjaskut, gristly. See Ben Jonson (as above). So Kluge, s.v. brusche; but the connexion with brusche is dark. With Dan. brusk-cf. AS. brýsan, to bruise, hence, to crush. See Bruise.

BRISTLE, a stiff hair. (E.) ME. bridle, beralle, Chaucer, Pro. 556. AS. byrst, a bristle, Herbarium, 52; in A. S. Leechdoms, i. 156; with dimin. suffix -el; Du. borstel, a bristle. Cf. Icel. byrst, a bristle; Swed. borst, a bristle; G. borste, a bristle. The AS. byrst, fem., and Icel. byrst, answer to Teut. types from the base burs-t-, from Teut. burs-, weak grade of burs-* = bigr*, biths*, to bristle; cf. Skt. sakarsa-bhys-kti, having a thousand points; Benfey, p. 666. Cf. Stokes-Fick, p. 172-3. Der. bristle, verb; bristly, brist-i-ness.

BRITTLE, fragile. (E.) ME. brutel, brutel, brut; Chaucer has brutel, Leg. of Good Women, Lucr. 205. Answering to an AS. type brutel* = Teut. brut-taz*, adj.; from brut-, weak grade of AS. brýtan, to break; Grein, i. 142; Icel. brjota, to break, destroy; Swed. brjota, Dan. brjude, to break. So that the sense was 'fragile.' ¶ Cf. the form brickle, used by Spenser, F. Q. iv. 10. 39, obviously from AS. brecan, to break; the L. fragilis (E. fragile, frail) being from the same root as brickle.

BRITZKA, BRITSKA, a kind of open carriage. (Polish.) First in 1832. — Pol. brzeczka (with cz = E. ch), 'a light long travelling wagon'; dimin. of brzeczka, a goods-wagon (N.E.D.).

BROACE, to tap liquor. (F. — L.) The ME. phrase is setten on broche, to set a broach, to tap, Babees Boke, ed. Furnivall, p. 266. Imitated from the F. mettre en broche, to tap a barrel, viz. by piercing it; cf. F. brocher, to broach, to spit; Cot. = F. broche, a broach, spit; Cot. See BROOCH, ABROACH.

BROAD, adj., wide. (E.) ME. brod, brood, Chaucer, Prolog. 155. AS. brād, Grein, i. 136. — Du. breed; Icel. breiðr; Swed. and Dan. brød; Goth. brāids; OHG. preit (G. breit). Teut. type bradōz*. Der. broad-ly, broad-nest, broad-en, broad-side; also breadth, q. v.

BROCADE, a variegated silk stuff. (Span. — L.) Brocado*, a cloth of gold or silver; Blount. 'A brocade waistcoat' is mentioned in the Spectator, no. 15. — Span. brocado, sb., brocade; also pp., brocaded, embroidered with gold; which explains the use of brocade as an adjective. Brocade is properly the pp. of a verb brocar*, which no doubt meant 'to embroider'; answering to F. brocher, which Cotgrave explains by 'to broach, to spit; also, to stitch grossly, to set or sow with great stitches,' der. from F. broche, explained by 'a broach, a spit; also, a great stitch.' [The Span. brocar, a reel for silk, a drill, has lost the required sense.] See BROOCH, a reel for silk, a drill, has lost the required sense.] See BROOCH. Der. brocade, verb; brocade-ed.

BROCCOLI, BROCCOLI, a vegetable resembling cauliflower. (Ital. — L.) Pope has brocoli, Horace's Sat. ii. 2. 138. Properly, the word is plural, and means 'sprouts.' — Ital. broccoli, sprouts, pl. of broccolo, a sprout; dimin. from brocco, a skewer, also, a shoot, stalk. Brocco is allied to F. broche, a spit, also a brooch. See BROOCH.

BROCHURE, a pamphlet. (F. — L.) Mere French. F. brochure, a few printed leaves stitched together. — F. brocher, to stitch. See BROOCH.

BROCK, a badger. (C.) Used by Ben Jonson, The Fox, i. 1; Sad Shepherd, Act ii. sc. i. ME. brock, P. Ploverman, B. v. 31; cf. Prompt. Parv. p. 53. AS. broc, a badger (Bosworth), but the word is of slight authority, and borrowed from Celtic. — W. broc; Corn. broch; Bret. brock; Irish, Gaelic, and Maux broc, a badger. It is most probable, as Mr. Wedgwood suggests, that the animal was named from his white-streaked face; just as a trout is, in Gaelic, called brach, i. e. spotted, and a mackerel is, in Cornish, called brithill, i. e. variegated; see note under BRILL. If so, cf. Gk. poapias, white, gray; and E. gray, a badger. Hence also Gael. broach, speckled in the face, grayish, as a badger; broach, spotted, freckled, speckled, particularly in the face. See Stokes-Pick, p. 185.

BROCKET, a red deer two years old. (F. — L.) 'The hart . . . the seconde yere [is] a brocket.' Reliq. Antiqua, i. 151. A corruption of F. brocart. Cotgrave has: 'Brocart, m. a two year old deer; which if it be a red deer, we call a brocket; if a fallow, a fricket; also a kind of swift stagge, which hath but one small branch growing out of the stemme of his home.' So named from having but one tine to his horn. — F. broche, 'a broach, spit'; also, a tusk of a wild boar; hence, a tine of a stag's horn; see Cotgrave. See BROOCH.

BROGUES, stout, coarse shoes. (C. — E.) In Shaks. Cymb. iv. 2. 214. — Gael. and Irish brog, a shoe; Irish bróg, — AS. brūg, breeches; or from Icel. brök. (Not really Celtic.) See BROOCH.

BROIDER, to adorn with needlework. (F. — Teut.) In the Bible, A. V. Ezek. xvi. 10. This form of the word was due to confusion with the totally different word to broid, a variant of braid, due to AS. brogden, pp. of bregdan; see BRAID. And note that AS. brogden regularly became brouden in ME., but was altered to broiden by confusion with bruid (ME. bruiden). In 1 Tim. ii. 19, broidered is actually used with the sense of bruiden. See Broider in Eastwood and Wright's Bible Wordbook. An older spelling of broider is broder; thus we find 'a spoyle of dyverse coloures with brodered workes' in the Bible of 1551, Judges, v. 30. It is also spelt broudered or broutered; Henryson, Test. of Cresseid, 417. — F. border, to imbroyder, Cotgrave [a word wholly distinct from border, also in Cotgrave with the explanation 'to border, gard, welt, &c.']. The same as OF. broader, brouder, to embroider (Godefroy, and Suppl.); cf. Late L. brodus, brudus, embroidered work (Ducange). Apparently from Teut. brozd*, a point, whence AS. broed, Icel. broddr, a spike. See BRAID.

BROIL (1), to fry, roast over hot coals. (F. — Teut.?) ME. broilen. 'Broilyn, or broilyn, ustulo, ustillo, torreo.' Prompt. Parv. p. 53. See Chaucer, Prolog. 385. [Cf. also brulen, E. E. Prose Psalter, exx. (xxxi.) 5; before 1350.] — AF. broillier (Bozon); OF. brullier, to broil, intrane. (in Godefroy). Of unknown origin; cf. OF. bruir, to roast; perhaps from MHG. brüegen, to scald; see BROOD.

BROIL (2), a disturbance, tumult. (F.) Occurs in Shaks. 1 Hen. VI. i. 1. 53; iii. 1. 92. Spelt brail in Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 140. — F. broillier, explained by Cotgrave by 'to jumble, trouble, disorder, confound, marre by mingling together; to huddle, tumble, shuffle things ill-favourably; to make a troublesome notch-potch; to make a hurry, or great hurlyburly.' Allied to Ital. brogliare, to disturb, broglia, confusion; whence E. imbroglio. Of unknown origin.

BROKER, an agent, a middle-man in transactions of trade. (F. — L.) ME. broker, brocuer, P. Ploverman, B. v. 130, 248. We also find brocage = commission on a sale, P. Ploverman, B. ii. 87. The oath of the brokers in London is given in Liber Albus, ed. Riley, p. 315. Their business was 'to bring the buyer and seller together, and lawfully witness the bargain between them; for which they were allowed a commission on the sale, called a brocage, or, in later times, brokerage. The ME. brocuer also meant a retail-dealer, cf. P. Ploverman, C. vii. 95, and answers to AF. brocuer, a broker, Liber Albus, p. 400; and to ONorth F. brocuer, accus. of brokier, which Godefroy (s. v. brocheor) explains by 'celui qui vend du vin au broc', i. e. by the jugful. — Late L. broccator, one who broaches wine. — Late L. broccare, to broach. — Late L. brocca, broca, a pointed stick, a spike. See BROACH, BROOCH. Hence also AF. brocuer, a broker, Stat. Realm, i. 103 (1285); Late L. broccarius, Liber Albus, p. 269. And cf. Walloon abrochi, to set a broach.

BROMINE, a non-metallic chemical element. (Gk.) Modern; since 1826. Named from its ill odour. Formed, with the suffix -ine, from Gk. βρωμ-ον, a stink.

BRONCHIAL, relating to the bronchie or bronchia. (Gk.) The bronchie are the ramifications of the windpipe, passing into the lungs. Bronchie is in use; but the more correct form is bronchia, neut. plural. — Gk. βρόγχια, neut. pl., the bronchia, or ramifications of the windpipe. — Gk. βρόγχος, the windpipe, trachea. Cf. Gk. βρόγχια, neut. pl., the gills of fishes; βρόγχος, a gill, also, a sore throat, and (as an adjective) hoarse.

BRONZE, an alloy of copper with tin, &c. (F. — Ital. — L.) Not in early use. In Pope, Dunciad, ii. 10; iii. 199. — F. bronze, introd. in 16th cent. from Ital. bronzio (Bianchi). — Ital. bronzio, bronze; bronzino, made of bronze (s. v. bronzio). It has been shown, by M. Berthelot (Introduction à la Chimie des Anciens, pp. 275-9), that the Ital. bronzio = L. Brundisium, i. e. belonging to Brundisium (Brindisi), in S. Italy, where bronze mirrors were made. Pliny has Brundisium, Nat. Hist. xxiii. 9, xxxiv. 17 (Athenaeum, Dec. 30, 1893). See Notes on E. Etym., p. 18.

BROOCH, an ornament fastened with a pin. (F. — L.) So named from its being fastened with a pin. ME. broche, a pin, peg, spit, Prompt. Parv. p. 52; also a jewel, ornament, id.; cf. Chaucer, Prolog. 160; Ancien Kiwele, p. 420. — OF. broche, F. broche, a spit; also the tusk of a boar (Cotgrave). — Late L. brocca, a pointed stick; also, a tooth, sharp point; from L. broccus, projecting, like teeth (Plautus).

BROOD, progeny, offspring, young; a family. (E.) ME. brūd, Owl and Nightingale, 518, 1631; Rob. of Glouc. p. 70; 1. 1595. AS. brūd, a brood (rare); 'hi brūdað heora brūd', they nourish their brood; Ælfric, Hom. ii. 10. 4. Du. broed, a brood, hatch; MHG. brut, that which is hatched, also heat; whence G. brut, a brood. Teut. stem brū-ō*. β. The primary meaning is that which is hatched, or produced by means of warmth; from the verbal base brō-*, preserved in G. brā-ken, to scald (orig. to heat), Du. broe-in, to brood, to hatch. This base brō-* is related by gradation to brē-* (brā-), to roast; for which see BROWN. Der. brood, vb.; breed, q. v.

BROOK (1), to endure, put up with. (E.) ME. brooke, which almost invariably had the sense of 'to use,' or 'to enjoy'; Chaucer, C. T. 10182 (F. 2308), P. Ploverman, B. xi. 117; Itavelok, 1743. AS. brūcan, to use, enjoy, Grein, i. 144. — Du. gebruiken, to use; Icel. brúka, to use; Goth. brukjan, to make use of; OHG. prūkan (G. brauchen), to use, enjoy. Allied to L. frui, to enjoy; cf. L. fruges, fruit; Skt. bhūj, to eat and drink, to enjoy, which probably stands for an older form brūj; Benfey, p. 656. — √ BHREUG, to enjoy, use. Brugmann, i. § 111. Brook is co-ordinate with fruit, q. v.

BROOK (2), a small stream. (E.) ME. brook, Chaucer, C. T. 3920 (A. 3922). AS. bric, broc, Grein, i. 144. — Du. broek, a marsh, a pool; Low G. brook, low land, broken up by marshes; OHG. brooch (G. bruch), a marsh, bog. B. Even in prov. Eng. we find: 'Brooks, low, marshy, or moory ground;' Pegge's Kentishisms (E. D. S.); at Cambridge, we have Brook-lands, i. e. low-lying, marshy ground. The G. brück also means 'rupture,' and the notion in brook is that of broken ground or of water breaking up or forcing its way to the surface; from Teut. brūk*, a variant (by gradation) of brēk*-, the root of break, q. v. Der. brook-let.

BROOK-LIME, a plant. (E.) ME. brook-lime, Med. Wks. of the fourteenth century, ed. Henslow, p. 29, l. 2. — AS. bric, a brook; and blomac, brook-lime. Cf. Low G. lümke, lümke, brook-lime (Schambach).

BROOM, the name of a plant; a besom. (E.) ME. brom, broom, the plant; Wyclif, Jerem. xvii. 6. AS. brōm, broom, Gloss. to Cockayne's Leechdoms. 4-10. brēm, broom, fuzze; Low G. brām, broom; G. brom, in bram-beers, a bramble-berry. Teut. type brēmnoz. B. The confusion in old names of plants is very great; broom and bramble are closely related, the latter being, etymologically, the diminutive of broom; cf. Du. brann-bosch, a bramble-bush. See Bramble.

BROSE, BREWIS, a kind of broth or pottage. (F.—MIIG.) Brose is a later form of brois or bragis, for which see Nares and Richardson. In Prompt. Parv. we find: 'Browse, browes, Adipatum' and see Way's note, where browyse is cited from Lydgate. = OF. broz, broz, nom. case of brozet, brozet, soup made with broth of meat (see Suppl. to Godefroy); dimin. of OF. bro (Hatzfeld, s.v. brouter), also spelt bru, pottage (Rougefort). Late L. brudum, gravy, broth. = MIIG. brod, broth; cognate with E. broth. ¶ It is no doubt because brois sounded like a plural, and because it has been confused with broth, that in prov. Eng. (e.g. Cambs.) broth is often alluded to as 'they' or 'them'. See Broth and Brow.

BROTH, a kind of soup. (F.) ME. broth, Rob. of Glouc. p. 528, l. 10857. AS. brōð to translate L. bro, Bosworth; 4-Icel. brōð; OIIG. prod, broth. Teut. type brōdum, n.; from brō-, brō-, weak grade of brēu-, as in AS. brōwan, to brew. And see Stokes-Fick, p. 172. See Brew and Browse.

BROTHEL, a house of ill fame. (E.; confused with F.—Teut.) [Originally quite distinct from ME. bordel (= Ital. bordello).] The quotations from Hale (Votaries, pt. ii), and Dryden (Mac Flecknoe, l. 70) in Richardson, show that the old term was brothel-house (as in Much Ado, i. 1, 256), i.e. a house for brothels or prostitutes; for the ME. brothel was a person, not a place. Thus Gower speaks of 'A brothel, which Micheas hitte' = a brothel, whose name was Micheas; C. A. iii. 173 (bk. vii. 2505); and see P. Plowman, Crele, 772. Cf. 'A brothelrie, lenocinium'; Levins, 103, 34. We also find ME. brothel, a wretch, brotheling, a beggarly fellow. From the same root are the AS. brōðen, degenerate, base; and the past tense brōðan, they failed, A. S. Chron. an. 1004. The last forms are from AS. brōð-brōð, weak grade of brōðan, to ruin, destroy, occurring in the comp. brōðan, with the same sense. This brōð-cf. orig. meant 'a lost' creature; like L. perditus. β. But, of course, a confusion between brothel-house and the ME. bordel, used in the same sense, was inevitable. Chaucer has bordel in his Persones Tale, § 885; and Wyclif even has bordelous, Ezek. vi. 24, showing that the confusion was already then completed; though he also has bordelrie = a brothel, in Num. xxv. 8, which is a French form. = OF. bordel, a hut; dimin. of borde, a hut, cot, shed made of boards; Cot. = MDu. (and Du.) bord, a plank. See Board.

BROTHER, a son of the same parents. (E.) ME. brother, Chaucer, Prol. 520. AS. brōðer, Grein, p. 144 + Du. broeder; Icel. bróðir; Goth. brōðar; Swed. broder; Dan. broder; OIIG. pruoder (G. bruder). ¶ Gael. and Irish brathair; W. brudr, pl. brodyr; Russian brat; L. frāter; Gk. φράτηρ; Church-Slavonic bratru; Zend brāta; Pers. birādar; Skt. bhrātṛ; Teut. type brōther*; Idg. type bhrātēr*. Brugmann, i. § 555. Der. brother-hood, brother-like, brother-ly.

BROUGHAM, a kind of carriage. (Personal name.) Date 1839. Named after the first Lord Brougham, born 1778.

BROW, the eye-brow; edge of a hill. (E.) ME. broue, Prompt. Parv. p. 53. AS. brū, pl. brūn, Grein, i. 144 + Icel. brūn, eye brow; Dan. bryg; Lith. brūnis; Russian brav; Gk. ὀφρύς, eye-brow; Pers. abrū; Skt. bhrū, eye-brow. ¶ Quite a distinct word from AS. brūw, Du. brauw (in comp. wenk-brauw, an eye-brow), G. braue. Der. brow-beat, to beat by frowning; Holland's Plutarch, p. 107.

BROWN, the name of a darkish colour. (E.) ME. broun, Chaucer, Prol. 207. AS. brūn, Grein, i. 145 + Du. brūn, brown, bay; Icel. brūn; Swed. brun; Dan. brun; G. brun; Lith. brūnas. Cf. Gk. φῶνός, a toad; Skt. ba-bhrū(s), tawny. Brugmann, i. § 109. Der. brūn-ish, brūn-ette, brūn-ett, brūn-ish. Doublet, brūn.

BROWSE, to nibble; said of cattle. (F.—MIIG.) Occurs in Shak. Wint. Tale, iii. 3. 69; Antony, i. 4. 66; Cymb. iii. 6. 38; spelt brouze in Spenser, Shep. Kal. May, 179; Browne, Fitzherbert, Husb. § 131. = MF. brouser, 'to browse, knap, nibble off leaves, buds, &c.' A by-form of MF. brouster, also brouter, exp. explained by Cotgrave by 'to browse, to nip, or nibble off the sprigs, buds, harke, &c. of plants'; a sense still retained in prov. Eng. brut (Kent, Surrey), which keeps the t whilst dropping the c. = MF. brōst*, a sprig, tendril, bud, a young branch or shoot; Cot. = MIIG. broz, a bud (Graff, iii. 369); Havarian brōs, brōst, a bud (Schmeller). = OIIG. broz, bruz, weak grade of brōzan, to break, also, to break into bud; which is cognate with AS. brōtan, to break; see Brittle.

BRUIN, a bear. (Dutch.) In the old epic poem of Reynard the Fox, the bear is named 'brown', from his colour; the Dutch version spells it bruin, which is the Dutch form of the word 'brown.' The proper pronunciation of the word involves a peculiar diphthong approaching the broad romic (au); but we always pronounce it broo-in, disregarding the Dutch pronunciation. See Brown.

BRUISE, to pound, crush, injure. (E.; partly F.) ME. bruise, Joseph of Arimathea, ed. Skcat. l. 501; but more commonly spelt bruise or briase, Wyclif's Bible, Deut. ix. 3; also brosen, id. Numbers, xvii. 25. In the S. Eng. Legendary, 295. 58, we find the pt. t. to-bruyde, representing AS. brūdan, pt. of brōdan; which shows that E. bruise represents AS. brūdan, to bruise, occurring in Be Domes Dage, ed. Lumby, l. 49; cf. Matt. xxi. 41. β. But it seems to have been confused with OF. bruiser, bruaser, bruiser, to break; forms which Diez would separate; but wrongly, as Matzner says. See bruiser in Suppl. to Godefroy. Of uncertain origin; cf. Olrish bruis-im, I break, allied to AS. berstan, to burst.

BRUIT, a rumour; to announce noisily. (F.—L.) Occurs in Shak. Macb. v. 7. 22. 'The kinge herde the bruyt', Caxton, Hist. of Troye, leaf 112, l. 6. = F. 'bruit', a bruit, a great sound or noise, a rumbling, clamor, &c.; Cot. = F. bruire, to make a noise, roar. Scheler derives F. bruire from L. rāgare, to roar; the prefixed b may have been due to imitative alteration; cf. G. brüllen, to roar. And F. bruit = Late L. brūgitus, a clamour (Ducange); cf. L. rugitus, a roaring.

BRUNETTE, a girl with a dark complexion. (F.—G.) Mere French; but it occurs in the Spectator, No. 396. [The older E. equivalent is 'nut-brown', as in the Ballad of The Nut-brown Maid.] = F. brunette, explained by Cotgrave as 'a nut-browne girl.' = F. brunet, masc. adj., brunette, fem. adj., brownish; Cot. Formed, with dimin. suffix -et, from F. brun, brown. = MIIG. brūn, brown; cognate with E. brun, cf. v.

BRUNT, the shock of an onset. (Scand.) Chiefly used in the phr. brunt of battle, the shock of battle, as in Shak. Cor. ii. 2. 104. However, Butler has: 'the heavy brunt of cannon-ball'; Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2, l. 872. ME. brunt, bront. 'Brunt, insult, impetus'; Prompt. Parv. p. 54. The oldest sense is 'smart blow', as in E. d. Allit. Poems, A. 174. Partly imitative; cf. diut, prov. E. diut, a blow, thump. Partly suggested by MDan. brund, heat, lust, Norw. brund, lust, heat (of animals in pairing-time). Allied to Icel. bruna, to advance with the speed of fire, said of a standard in the heat of battle, of ships advancing under full sail, &c.; Icel. bruni, burning, heat, passion, from brenna, to burn; cognate with E. burn. See Burn.

BRUSH, an implement for cleaning clothes; cf. brush-wood, under-wood. (F.—Teut.) ME. brusche, in the phrase 'wypped it with a brusche'; P. Plowman, B. xiii. 460; also: 'Brusche, bruscius,' i.e. brush-wood, Prompt. Parv. = OF. broce, brose, brushwood, small wood; F. brasse, a bush, bushy ground, brush (Cotgrave); cf. Ital. brusca 'ling or heath to make brushes with'; Florio. = Late L. bruscia, a thicket. Derived by Diez from OHG. brusta, G. borste, a bristle; but perhaps influenced by Celtic (Thurneysen, p. 51). Cf. F. broussailles, brush-wood, and note the double sense of E. broom. Der. brush-wood.

BRUSQUE, rough in manner. (F.—Ital.) Spelt brusk by Sir Henry Wotton, d. 1639 (K.). He speaks of giving 'a bruske welcome' = a rough one; Reliq. Wotton, p. 582. = F. brusque, rude; introduced in 16th cent. from Ital. brusco (brachet). = Ital. brusco, sharp, tart, sour, applied to fruits and wine. β. Of unknown origin; Diez suggests a corruption of OHG. bruttisc, brutish, brutal, which is unconvincing. Ferrari (says Diez) derives it from the L. labruscus, the Ital. dropping the first syllable. This is ingenious; the L. labruscus was an adj. applied to a wild vine and wild grape. ¶ The notion of connecting brisk with brusque appears in Cotgrave; it seems to be right; see Brisk.

BRUTE, a dumb animal. (F.—L.) Shak. has brute as an adj., Hamlet, iii. 2. 110; and other quotations in Richardson show that it was at first an adj., as in the phr. 'a brute beast.' Cf. 'alle brute beestis'; Book of Quinte Essence, ed. Furnival, p. 11 (ab. 1460-70). = F. brut, masc., brute, fem. adj., in Cotgrave, signifying 'foul, ragged, shapeless,' &c. = L. brūtus, stupid. Der. brut-al, brut-al-ity, brut-al-ise, brut-ish, brut-ish-ness.

BRUYON, a kind of plant. (L.—Gk.) In Levins; also in Ben Jonson, Masques; The Vision of Delight. = L. bruyonia. = Gk. βρυονία, also βρυών. = Gk. βρύων, to teem, swell, grow luxuriantly.

BUBBLE, a small bladder of water. (E.) Shak. has the sb., As You Like It, ii. 7. 152; also as a vb., 'to rise in bubbles', Macb. iv. 1. 11. Spelt bolle, Castel of Helth, leaf 84, back. Not found much earlier in English. Cf. F. fries, bubbel, a bubble. [Palsgrave has: 'Burble in the water, bubette, and the same form occurs in the Prompt. Parv. p. 56; but this is probably a somewhat different word, and from a different source; cf. Du. borrel, a bubble.] = Swed. bubbla, a bubble; Dan. bolle, a bubble; to bubble; Du. bobbel, a bubble; bobbelen, to bubble; Low G. bubbel, sb.; bubbelen, vb. β. The form of the word is clearly a diminutive; and it is to be regarded as the dimin. of a form bob or bub, of imitative origin; cf. prov. E. bob, a knob; parallel to blob, a bubble. See Blob, Bleb.

BUCCANIER, a pirate. (F.—West-Indian.) Modern. Borrowed from F. buccanier, a buccanier, pirate. = F. buccanier, to smoke-dry; or, according to Cotgrave, 'to broyle or scorch on a wooden gridiron.' = F. boucan, 'a wooden gridiron, whereon the cannibals broil pieces of men, and other flesh'; Cot. β. The word boucan is said to be a F. spelling of a Tupi (Brazilian) word, and to mean 'a frame on which meat is smoke-dried.' Mr. Wedgwood says: 'The natives of Florida, says Laudonnière (Hist. de la Floride, Pref. A.D. 1586, in Marsh), "mangent leurs viandes rosties sur les charbons et boucanées, c'est à dire quasi cuites à la fumée." In Hakluyt's translation, "dressed in the smoake, which in their language they call boucaned;" Voyages, iii. 307. Hence those who established themselves in the islands for the purpose of smoking meat were called buccaniers.' Mr. Trumbull says:—'Jean de Lery (Voyage fait en la Terre du Brésil, 1578, p. 153) describes the construction and use, by the Tupinambas, of "the great wooden grilles, called in their language boucan, garnished with meats . . . drying slowly over fire.'

BUCK (1), a male deer, goat, &c. (E.) ME. bukke, Chaucer, C. T. 3387. AS. bucca, a he-goat, Levit. iv. 23. + Du. bok, a he-goat; Icel. bukkr; Swed. bock, a buck, a he-goat; Dan. buk, a he-goat, ram, buck; OHG. poek (a buck), a buck, he-goat, battering-ram. Cf. also W. buch, a buck; buck gaff, a he-goat; Gael. bac, a buck, he-goat; Irish bac, a he-goat. Brugmann, i. § 800. The Celtic title is bukkos*; Stokes-Pick, p. 179.

BUCK (2), to wash linen, to steep clothes in lye. (E.) Shak. has buck-basket, a basket for washing linen, Merry Wives, iii. 3. 2. ME. bouken, to wash linen; P. Plowman, B. xiv. 19; as if from an AS. būcān*, not found; but regularly formed from AS. būc, a pitcher (prov. E. buck, a pail, tub). The ME. bouken had the special sense of 'to steep in lye, to buck-wash'; so also Swed. byka, Dan. byr, MDu. buiken, G. heuchen, OF. buer, to buck-wash. See Bucklet. Der. buck-basket.

BUCKET, a kind of pail. (E.) ME. boket, Chaucer, Kn. Tale, 675 (A 1533); AF. boket (Bozon); cf. Guernsey bouquet (Métivier). Formed with AF. dimin. suffix -et from AS. būc, a pitcher, glossed by 'lagena,' and occurring also in Judges, vii. 20 (Hosworth). Cf. Irish bucend, a bucket, Gael. bucad, a bucket; both borrowed from E.

BUCKLE, a kind of fastening; to fasten. (F.—L.) The sb. buckling occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 2505 (A 2503). = OF. bocle (F. boucle), the boss of a shield, a ring; from the latter of which senses 'buckle' has been evolved. = Late L. bucula, meaning (1) a part of the helmet covering the cheek, a visor; (2) a shield; (3) a boss of a shield; (4) a buckle. The original sense of L. bucula was the cheek; dimin. of bucca, the cheek.

BUCKLER, a kind of shield. (F.—L.) Chaucer has bokeler, Prol. 112; the pl. bocelers occurs in King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 1190. = OF. bucier (F. bouclier); so named from the bocle, bucle, or boss in the centre. See Buckle.

BUCKRAM, a coarse cloth. (F.) ME. bokeram, cloth; Prompt. Parv. p. 42; also in 1326 (N. and Q. S. i. 128.) = OF. boucaran (F. bougran), a coarse kind of cloth (Roquefort); bougran (Hatzfeld); Late L. boguerannus, buckram; also (in Italy) Late L. buchirinus, for Ital. buchirano, late Ital. bucherame. Origin uncertain; perhaps from Bokhara, in Tartary (Hatzfeld).

BUCKWHEAT, the name of a plant. (E.) In Coles's Dict. (1684); Turner, Names of Herbes, p. 35. E. D. S. (1548). The Polygonum fagopyrum. The word buckwheat means beech-wheat, so called from the resemblance in shape between its seeds and the mast of the beech-tree. The same resemblance is hinted at in the term fagopyrum, from L. fagus, the beech-tree. The form buck for beech is E. Anglian, from AS. būc, beech. See Tusser's Husbandry. + Du. boek-wiet; G. buckwizen. See Beech, Book.

BUCOLIC, pastoral. (L.—Gk.) Elyot has bucolicke; the Gouverneur, bk. i. c. 10 § 8. Skelton has 'bucolical relations'; Garlande of Iaurell, l. 327. = L. bucolicus, pastoral. = Gk. βουκολικός, pastoral. = Gk. βουκόλος, a cow-herd. = Gk. βov, for bois, an ox; κόλ, second grade of κόλ, in κώλλειν, to drive. + OF. Irish and Gael. bucachill, W. bugail, cow-herd; Stokes-Pick, p. 178.

BUD, a germ; to sprout. (E.) The Prompt. Parv. p. 54, has: 'Buddle of a tre, Gemma,' and: 'Buddus as trees, Gemmo.' The word does not appear earlier in ME.; but may have been an E. word. The corresponding AS. form is budda*, m., or budde*, f.; the latter exactly answers to MHG. butte, prov. G. (Strassburg) butti, Bavar. butte, mod. G. hage-butte, fruit of the dog-rose, taken as the type of a bud from its shape and bright colour. Hence Du. bof, a bud, eye, shoot; botien, to bud, sprout out; OF. boton, a button, a bud; AF. bolon, a hip (Vocab. 556.7); Norm. dial. bout, a bud, bouter, to bud (Robin); the F. words being of Teutonic origin. Cf. also Swed. dial. bodda opp, to become leafy (as trees or bushes), boddoter, full of leaves. See Notes on E. Etymology, pp. 20, 476. See Button and Butt (1).

BUDGE (1), to stir, move from one's place. (F.—L.) Shak. has budge, to stir, Hamlet, iii. 4. 18. = F. bouger, to stir; cf. Prov. bolegar, to disturb oneself; answering to Ital. bucicare, to bubble up. Formed, as a frequentative, from L. bullire, to boil. See Boil. β. This derivation is made clearer by the facts that the Span. bullir means not only 'to boil,' but 'to be busy, to bestir oneself, also 'to move from place to place'; whilst the deriv. adj. bullicioso means 'brisk, active, busy.' So also Port. bulir, to move, stir, be active; buliçoso, restless.

BUDGE (2), a kind of fur. (F.) Milton has: 'those budge doctors of the Stoic fur'; Comus, 707; alluding to the lambskin fur worn by some who took degrees, and still worn at Cambridge by bachelors of arts. Halliwell has: 'budge, lambskin with the wool dressed outwards; often worn on the edges of capes, as gowns of bachelors of arts are still made. See Fairholt's Pageants, i. 66; Strutt, i. 102; Thynne's Debate, p. 32; Pierce Peniless, p. 11.' Cotgrave has: 'Agnelin, lambs-fur, budge.' Palsgrave has bouge furra. Cf. AF. boge, fur; Stal. Realm, i. 380 (1363). Apparently from OF. boge, (Burgundy), bouge, a bag made of skin. Another sense of budge is 'a bag or sack'; and a third, 'a kind of water-cask'; Halliwell. These idens are connected by the idea of 'skin of an animal,' which served for a bag, a water-skin, or for ornamental purposes. When budge has the sense of 'bag,' its dimin. is budget. See further under Budget, below. ¶ The connexion is not quite certain. Dr. Murray suggests OF. bochet, bouchet, a young kid.

BUDGET, a leathern bag. (F.—C.) Shak. has budget (old edd. bouget), Wint. Tale, iv. 3. 20. Palsgrave has bougette. = F. bougette, a little coffer, or trunk of wood, covered with leather; . . . also, a little male pouch, or budget; Cot. A dimin. of F. bouge, a budget, wallet, or great pouch; id. Cf. OF. boulge (Roquefort). = L. bulga, a little (skin) bag; according to Festus, a word of Gaulish origin (Brachet). = Olrish bolg, bolc, a bag; W. bol, the belly. Allied to Belly.

BUFF (1), in Blindman's buff. (F.—Teut.) Formerly blind-man-buff, a game; in which boys used to buffet one (who was blinded) on the back, without being caught, if possible. From OF. bufe, F. buffe, a buffet, blow. = Low G. buff, puß, a blow (Lübben); E. Fries. buf, buff, a blow. See Buffet (1).

BUFF (2), the skin of a buffalo; a pale yellow colour. (F.—L.—Gk.) Buff is a contraction of buffe, or buffle, from F. buffle, a buffalo. 'Buff, a sort of thick tanned leather'; Kersey. 'Buff, Buffle, or Buffalo, a wild beast like an ox'; id. 'The term was applied to the skin of the buffalo dressed soft, buff-leather, and then to the yellowish colour of leather so dressed'; Wedgwood. See Buffalo.

BUFFALO, a kind of wild ox. (Port. or Ital.—L.—Gk.) The pl. buffalos occurs in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 43. The sing. buffalo is in Ben Jonson, Discoveries, Of the magnitude of any fable; § 133. Borrowed from Port. bufalo, or Ital. buffalo; in early books of travel. [But the term was not really new in English; the Tudor Eng. already had the form buffle, borrowed from the French. Cotgrave has: 'Buffle, m. the buffe, buffle, bugle, or wild ox; also, the skin or neck of a buffe.'] = L. bufalus, used by Fortunatus, a secondary form of bubalus, a buffalo. = Gk. βοῦβαλος, a buffalo; Polyb. xii. 3. 5. Not a true Gk. word; apparently suggested by Skt. gavala-s, a buffalo (Macdonell); which is allied to Skt. gāus, a cow, and to Gk. βοῦς, E. cow. See Cow (1).

BUFFER (1), a foolish fellow. (F.) Jamieson has 'buffer, a foolish fellow.' The ME. buffer means 'a stutterm.' 'The tunge of bufferes [Lat. balorum] swiftili shal speke and pleyne'; Wycl., Isaiah, xxxii. 4. Lydgate has buffer, a foolish fellow; Minor Poems, p. 32. From ME. buffer, to stammer. = OF. buffer, to puff out the cheeks, &c. See Buffer (1), Buffoon. β. The word is, no doubt, partly imitative; to represent indistinct talk; cf. Babble.

BUFFER (2), a cushion, with springs, used to deaden concussion. (F.) Buffer is lit. a striker; from ME. bufen, to strike; prov. Eng. buff, to strike, used by Ben Jonson (see Nares). = OF. buffer, buffer, to strike. See Buffer (1).

BUFFET (1), a blow; to strike. (F.) ME. buffet, boffet, a blow; esp. a blow on the cheek or face; Wycl., John, xix. 3. Also buffeten, bofeten, translated by L. colaphizo, Prompt. Parv. p. 41. Also buffetung, a buffeting, Old Eng. Homilies, i. 207. = OF. bufet, a blow, esp. on the cheek. = OF. bufe, a blow, esp. on the cheek; buffer, buffer, to strike; also, to puff out the cheeks. = Low G. buff, puß, a blow (Lübben); of imitative origin; like E. Fries. buf, buff, puß, a blow, Du. bof, G. puß, MHG. buf, puß. From the sound; see Buff (1).

BUFFET (2), a side-board. (F.) Used by Pope, Moral Essays (Ep. to Boyle), l. 153; Sat. ii. 5. = F. 'buffer, a court cupboard, or high-standing cupboard; also, a cupboard of plate'; Cot. Origin unknown.

BUFFOON, a jester. (F.) Holland speaks of 'buffoons, picaresants, and gesters; tr. of Plutarch, p. 487. Pronounced buffon, Ben Jonson, Every Man, ii. 3. 8. For the suffix, cf. ball-oon. = F. buffon, which Cotgrave explains as 'a buffoon, jester, sycophant, &c.' = F. buffon, to puff. Cf. Span. bufa, a scoffing, laughing at; equiv. to Ital. buffa, a trick, jest; which is connected with Ital. buffare, to joke, jest; orig. to puff out the cheeks, in allusion to the grimacing of jesters, which was a principal part of their business. Of imitative origin. See Buffer (1). Der. buffon-ery.

BUG (1), BUGBEAR, a terrifying spectre. (C.) Fairfax speaks of children being frightened by 'strange bug-bears; tr. of Tasso, Gier. lib. bk. xiii. st. 18. Here bug-bear means a spectre in the shape of a bear. The word bug was used alone, as in Shak. Tam. Shrew. i. 2. 211; and Wyclif has bugge in the sense of 'scare-crow'; L. formido, Baruch, vi. 69. Shak. himself also has bugbear, Troil. iv. 2. 34. = W. bug, a hobgoblin, spectre; bugan, a spectre; Gael. (and Irish) bocan, a spectre, apparition, terrifying object. P. Probably connected further with Lithuanian bangus, terrific, frightful, bugti, to frighten, which Fick further connects with L. juga, slight, jugare, to put to flight, and Skt. bhuj, to bow, bend, turn aside, cognate with E. bow, to bend. See Bow (1). Bruggmann, i. § 701. And see below.

BUG (2), an insect. (L.) Apparently a particular application of the Tudor-English bug, an apparition, scarecrow, object of terror; as if equivalent to 'disputing creature.' But rather, a modification, due to association with bug (1), of AS. budda, a beetle; cf. AS. searn-budda, a dung-beetle, Voc. 543. 10, prov. E. sharn-bug (Kent).

BUGABOO, a spectre. (C.) In Lloyd's Chit-chat (R.). It is the word bug, with the addition of W. bu, an interjection of threatening, Gael. bo, an interjection used to frighten children, our 'boh!'

BUGLE (1), a wild ox; a horn. (F.—L.) Bugle in the sense of 'horn' is an abbreviation of bugle-horn, used by Chaucer, C. T. 1166 (F. 1253). It means the horn of the bugle, or wild ox. Halliwell has: 'Bugle, a buffalo; see King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, § 112; Maundeville's Travels, p. 269; Topsell's Beasts, p. 54; Holinshed, Hist. of Scotland, p. 16.' Perhaps bugle was confused with buffle or buffalo (see Buffalo), but etymologically it is a different word. = OF. bugle, a wild ox (whence, by way of F. bengler, to bellow). = L. buculum, acc. of buculus, a bullock, young ox (Columella); a dimin. of L. bos, cognate with E. cow. See Cow.

BUGLE (2), a kind of ornament. (F.—L.?) 'A gyrdle . . . Embosht with bugles,' Spenser, Shep. Kal. Feb. 66. Bugles are tube-shaped glass beads, or fine glass pipes, sewn on to a woman's dress by way of ornament. [Mr. Wedgwood quotes from Muratori, showing that some sort of ornaments, called in Low Latin bugelli, were worn in the hair by the ladies of Piacenza in A. D. 1388. These were pads, to support the hair, and have nothing to do with the present word.] From a fancied resemblance to a bugle-horn; see N. E. D., s. v. bugle, a horn, where a quotation is given dated 1615, in which bugle seems to mean 'a tube.' Cf. 'Bugle, a little black horse;' Cockerham (1623).

BUGLE (3), a plant; Angia reptans. (F.—Late L.) M. E. bugle, Medical Werkes of 14th Cent., ed. Henslow, p. 172. = F. bugle. = Late L. bigula (Hatzfeld); cf. L. bigullo, (perhaps) bugle. ¶ We find A. F. bugle as a plant-name, Wright's Voc. i. 162 (spelt bugle in MS. Camb. q. 1. 1); this suggests Late L. bugula, 'pascua,' in Ducange: as if 'pasture-flower.'

BUGLOSS, a plant. (F.—L.—Gk.) Mentioned in Sir T. Elyot's Castle of Helth, b. iii. ch. 12; p. 70. = F. buglosse. = L. biglossa; also biglossus. = Gk. βουγλωσσον, ox-tongue; from the shape and roughness of the leaves. = Gk. βου-γλωσσον, ox-tongue; from the shape and roughness of the leaves. See Cow (1).

BUILD, to construct a house. (F.—L.) M. E. builden, Layamon, 2656; bilden, Coventry Mysteries, p. 20; also bylden, P. Plowman, ll. xi. 228; and belden, P. Plowman, Crede, 706. The spellings bielde, bedle, in Wyclif's Bible, Gen. xi. 8, 3 Kings, xi. 7, show that the M. E. vowel was long; and, in fact, vi is the regular representative (in Southern E. of the 13th c.) of AS. ŷ. The vowel was again shortened by the influence of the final dentals in builded and built, pt. t. and pp. = Late AS. byldan, lengthened to byldan in Norman pronunciation (cf. F. miid from AS. miid, &c.). = AS. bold, a dwelling; with regular mutation from o (Teut. u) to y. 'Þe we bold gyldid; for thee was a dwelling built; The Grave (in Thorpe, Analecta, p. 142). Sievers shows that bold is for bol-ŷ, altered form of þol-ŷ > bold, a dwelling; from Teut. bu-þlo-* (bu-þro-) from Teut. bu-, weaker grade of bā in bānan, to dwell, and *Idg. suffix tro. Closely allied to Booth, q. v. ¶ The vowel was still long in the 16th century. We find bedle rhyming with felde (field) in Higgins, Mirror for Magistrates, Severus, st. 21.

BULB, a round root, &c. (F.—L.—Gk.) Not in early use. In Holland's Plutarch, p. 577; and bulbous is in Holland's Pliny, bk. xix. c. 4; vol. ii. p. 13; also bulbes in the same, p. 18 (last line). = F. bulbe. = L. bulbus. = Gk. βουλβός, a bulbous root, an onion. Der. bulb, verb; bulb-ed, bulb-ous.

BULBUL, a nightingale. (Pers.) In Byron, Bride of Abydos,

i. 10. = Pers. bulbul, a bird with a melodious voice, resembling the nightingale. Of imitative origin: bul-bul.

BULGE, to swell out. (F.—C.) This word, in the sense of 'to swell out,' is rare except in modern writers. The earlier sense was to stave in the bulge (or bilge), i. e. the bottom of a ship. Blount has: 'Bulged (or Bilged), a Sea-Term: a ship is said to be bulged when she strikes on a rock, anchor, or the like; &c.' From E. bulge, (1) a wallet, obs.; (2) a hump, obs.; (3) a protuberance; (4) the bottom of a ship's hull. = OF. bolge, bouge, f., a budget, wallet, Cot.; m. a swelling, boss, belly, Cot. = L. bulga, a skin-bag (Gaulish). See Budget and Belly. Der. bilge, sb., bilge-water. ¶ The F. change of gender raises a difficulty; but see Scheler.

BULK (1), magnitude, size. (Scand.) M. E. bolke, a heap, Prompt. Parv. p. 43. = Icel. bulki, a heap (earlier bulki, Norse, § 196); bulkast, to be bulky; Dan. bulk, a lump, clod; bulket, lumpy; Swed. dial. bulk, a knob, bunch; bulking, bunchy, protuberant (Rietz); MSwed. bolke, a heap (Ihre); Norw. bulk, a boss. ¶ The Swed. dial. words are connected with Swed. dial. bulvna, to bulge; Swed. bulna, to swell. The original idea in bulk is 'a swelling;' cf. the dial. bulky. See Bolled. Der. bulk-y, bulk-i-ness.

BULK (2), the trunk of the body. (Du.) Used by Shak. Hamlet, ii. 1. 95. = MDu. bulcke, thorax; Kilian. (Prob. confused with Icel. bikr, the trunk of the body; Swed. buk, the belly; Dan. bug, the belly; Du. buik, G. bauch, the belly.) Perhaps allied to Bulk (1).

BULK (3), a stall of a shop, a projecting frame for the display of goods. (Scand.) In Shak. Cor. ii. 1. 226; Oth. v. 1. 1. Halliwell has: 'Bulk, the stall of a shop; with references. He also notes that the Lincolnshire bulkar means (1) a beam; and (2) the front of a butcher's shop where meat is laid. = Dan. dial. bulk, a half-wall, a partition; MDan. bulk, a balk (Kalkar); N. Fries. bulk, balk. A beam, with the weak grade (bu), parallel to E. balk, Icel. balkr, a beam, rafter, also a partition. The native E. word balk generally means a rafter, and does not give the right vowel. Florio translates the Ital. balco or balcone (from OIIG. balcho) as 'the bulk or stall of a shop.'

BULK-HEAD, a partition in a ship made with boards, forming apartments. (Scand. and F.) Nautical. Spelt bulke-head in 1496; Naval Accounts, ed. Oppenheim, p. 168. Had it been of native origin, the form would have been balk-head, from balk, a beam. The change of vowel points to the MDan. bulk (above).

BULL (1), a male bovine quadruped. (F.) M. E. bole, bolle, Chaucer, C. T. 2141 (A. 2139); bole, Ormulum, 990. Not found in AS., though occurring in the Ormulum, and in Layamon in comp. bulle-hude, bull-hide; yet the dimin. bullice, a bull-ock, little bull, really occurs (Bosworth); and AS. bulan, as if from a nom. bulin, occurs in place-names (Kemble's Index). Cf. E. Fries. bulle, = MDu. bolle, a bull (Kilian); Du. bul; Icel. bul, a bull; Westphal. G. bulle; Lith. bulas. Prob. 'the hollower' from bul-*, weak grade of AS. bullan, to hollow. Cf. MIG. bullan, to roar. See Bellow.

Der. bull-dog, bull-fuck, &c.; dimin. bull-ock, AS. bullic. BULL (2), a papal edict. (F.—L.) In early use. M. E. bulle, a papal bull; P. Plowman, ll. prol. 6; Rob. of Glouc. p. 473; l. 3719. = L. bulia, a stud, knob; later, a leaden seal, such as was affixed to an edict; hence the name was transferred to the edict itself. See Bowl (1). Der. From the same source: bull-et, q. v., bull-et-in, q. v. ¶ The use of bull in the sense of 'blunder' is a different word; from OF. bolter, boulter, to deceive (Godefroy).

BULLACE, wild plum. (F.—L.) Bacon has the pl. bullices; Essay on Gardens. 'Bolus frute, pepylum;' and 'Bolus tre, pepylus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 42; buldis (succed. on o), Rom. Rose, 1377. = OF. belier, bove, a bullace (Appent. to Godefroy); also written pelosse (pl. pelosses) in Cotgrave. = Romanic type pilotta* from L. pilotta*, lit. 'pellet-like.' = Late L. pilota, a pellet, ball. = L. pila, a ball. See Pellet, and Pill (1). Notes on F. Eym. p. 23. ¶ The OF. beloce, belouse, 'espèce de prunes,' is given by Roquefort; and Cotgrave has: 'Belleoier, a bullace-tree, or wild plum-tree.' Cf. Breton bolos (from OF. baloce), also pelos (from OF. pelos*, pelosse; Gael. bulasteir, from M. E. bolas-tree, a bullace-tree. Also Walloon hilok, bulok, a bullace; from North F. Puitspelu (on the pátios of Lyons) has: 'Pelossi, pelosse, OF. beloce, Suisse belossa, Norm. beloche, Jura pelosse, pelawse,' all meaning 'bullace.'

BULLET, a ball for a gun. (F.—L.) In Shak. K. John, ii. 227, 412. = F. boulet, 'a bullet;' Cot. A dimin. of F. boule, a ball. = L. bulia, a stud, knob; a bubble. See Bull (2).

BULLETIN, a brief public announcement. (F.—Ital.—L.) Burke speaks of 'the pithy and sententious brevity of these bulletins;' Appeal from the New to the Old Whigs (R.). = F. bulletin, 'a bill, ticket, a billet in a lottery;' Cot. Ital. bulletino, a safe conduct, pass, ticket. Formed, with the dimin. suffix -ino, from bulletta, a passport, a lottery-ticket; which again is formed, with the dimin. suffix -etta, from bulia, a seal, a pope's letter. = L. bulia, a seal; later, a pope's letter. See Bull (2).

BULLION, uncoined metal. (F.—L.) Spelt bolion in Arnold's Chron., ed. 1811, p. 229; bolion in 1586, in Orig. Letters, ed. Ellis, ii. 305.—F. bouillon, a boiling; also a certain measure or weight (Godefroy, and Supp.).—Late L. bullionem, acc. of bullio, a mass of gold or silver; also written bulliona.—I. bultrio, to boil; see Boil (1). For the history, see N. E. D. ¶ The mod. F. word is billon; which Littré derives from F. bilie, a log; and F. billon seems to have been confused to some extent with the E. word.

BULLY, a noisy rough fellow; to bluster. (Du.) Shak. has bully for 'a brisk dashing fellow'; Merry Wives, i. 3. 6, 11, &c.; Schmidt. Also bully-rook in a similar sense, Merry Wives, i. 3. 2; ii. 1. 200. But the earliest sense was 'sweet-heart'; see N.E.D. Cf. Hen. V. iv. 1. 48. Apparently from Du. boel, a lover; borrowed from G.—MHG. buole, a lover; G. bukle. The later sense was a swaggering gallant; lastly, a tyrannical coward who intimidates the weak. Perhaps influenced by Du. bul, a bull, also a clown, insolent fellow; Du. bulderen, Low G. bultern, to bluster.

BULRUSH, a tall rush. (E.) M.E. bolroysche, Voc. 786. 40; bulrysche, Prompt. Parv., p. 244, col. 2. Perhaps from its stout stem; cf. Shetland bulwand, a bulrush.—Dan. bul, stem, trunk; and F. rush. See Bole and Rush (2); also Bulrush (below). β. Or bull may mean 'large,' with reference to a bull; cf. bull-daisy, &c. (Britten).

BULWARK, a rampart. (Scand.) In Shak. Hamlet, iii. 4. 38. 'Fagottles for bulwerkes.' Excerpta Historica, p. 52 (anno 1419); nearly the earliest quotation known. 'Barbycons and also bulwerkes huge.' Lydgate, Siege of Troy, bk. ii. ch. 11; ed. 1555, fol. F. 5, col. 2.—MDan. bulwirke, a bulwark; Swed. bulwerk. Cf. Du. bulwerk, whence G. bulwerk. Corrupted in F. to bulverde, from the Du. or G. form. Kilian explains bol-werck, or block-werck by 'propugnaculum, agger, vallum'; showing that bol is equivalent to block, i.e. a log of wood. [The Dan. bulwerk is commonly said to have been borrowed from Du.; but Kalkar gives MDan. bulwirke as known in 1461, and the Scand. languages explain the word better; the Du. bol is not commonly used for 'log,' nor is G. bühle anything more than 'a board, plank.'] β. From Dan. bul, a stem, stump, log of a tree; MDan. wirke, work; cf. Icel. bulr, bolr, the bole or trunk of a tree, and wirki, work. Thus the word stands for bole-work, and means a fort made of the stumps of felled trees. See Bole. ¶ The G. bulwerk, as formerly used in the sense of 'mangonel,' is a different word; from MHG. boln, to throw; see Kluge.

BUM, buttocks. (E.) Used by Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 53. A word probably meaning 'protruberance,' and connected with such words as bump, a swelling, hump, a pimple (Florio, s. v. quos).

BUM-BAIFF, an under bailliff. (E. and F.) In Shak. Twelfth Nt. iii. 4. 194. Blackstone (bk. i. c. 9) says it is a corruption of bound-bailliff, which is a guess; for there is no such word. β. Todd quotes from a Tract at the end of Fulke's Defence of the English translations of the Bible, 1583, p. 33: 'These quarrels . . . are more meet for the bum-courts than for the schools of divinity. In this saying, if the term of bumcourts seem too light, I yield unto the censure of grave and godly men.' He also quotes the expression 'constables, tithing-men, bailiffs, bumme or shoulder-marshals' from Gayton's Notes on Don Quixote, bk. ii. c. 2. He accordingly suggests that the term arose from the bailliff or pursuer catching a man 'by the hinder part of his garment;' and he is probably right.

BUMBLE-BEE, a bee that hums. (E.) The verb bumble is a frequentative of boom. Cf. MDu. boommelen, to buzz, hum (Oudemans); Bremen bummeln, to sound; EFries. bummen, to resound; Du. boomen, to sound hollow (like an empty barrel). See Boom (1) and Bump (2). α. As both boom and hum signify 'to buzz,' the insect is called, indifferently, a bumble-bee or a humble-bee.

BUMBOAT, a boat used for taking out provisions to a ship. (E.) From bum and boat; for the orig. sense was a scavenger's boat, employed to remove 'filth' from ships lying in the Thames, as prescribed by the Trinity House Bye Laws of 1688. See N. E. D.

BUMP (1), to thump, beat; a blow, bunch, knob. (E.) Cotgrave has: 'Adot, a blow, bumps, or thump'; also: 'Baculor, to bump . . . with a bat.' Shak. has bump, a knob, Rom. i. 3. 53. Of imitative origin; cf. MDan. bumpe, to strike with the fist. So also W. pump, a round mass, a lump; pumpio, to thump, bang. ¶ In this case, and some other similar ones, the original word is the verb, signifying 'to strike'; next, the sb. signifying 'blow'; and lastly, the visible effect of the blow, the 'bump' raised by it. Allied to Andas, q. v.

BUMP (2), to make a noise like a bittern. (E.) 'And as a bitourn bumps within a reed.' Dryden, Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 194; where Chaucer has bumbleth, C. T. 6554 (D 972). Imitative; a variant of Boom (1); and cf. Bumblebee. So also W. bump, a hollow sound; aderyn y bump, a bittern; Gk. Boſſos, a humming, buzzing.

BUMPER, a full glass, esp. when drunk as a toast. (E.) Dryden has bumpers in his Epistle to Sir G. Etherege, l. 46. Apparently suggested by bump, a swelling, with the notion of fulness, so that a bumper generally means 'a glass filled to the brim.' Cf. thumping, with the sense of 'large.'

BUMPKIN, a thick-headed fellow. (Du.) Used by Dryden, who talks of 'the country bumpkin,' Juvenal, Sat. 3, l. 295. The index to Cotgrave says that the F. for bumpkin is chicambault; and Cot. has: 'Chicambault, m. The luff-block, a long and thick piece of wood, whereunto the fore-sail and sprit-sail are fastened, when a ship goes by the wind.' I think it probable that bumpkin (then pronounced nearly as boomkin) is the dimin. of boom, formed by adding to boom (a Dutch word) the Dutch dimin. ending -ken; so that the form boomken, explained by Hexham as 'a little tree,' might also signify 'a small boom,' or 'luff-block'; and metaphorically, a blockhead, a wooden-pated fellow; perhaps originally a piece of nautical slang. The Dutch suffix -ken is hardly used now, but was once in use freely, particularly in Brabant; see Ten Kate, ii. 73; it answers exactly to the E. suffix -kin, which took its place.

BUN, a sort of cake. (F.—Scand.) Skelton has bun in the sense of a kind of loaf given to horses; ed. Dyce, i. 15. M.E. bunne, Prompt. Parv.—O. prov. F. bugne, a name given at Lyons to a kind of fritters (Burguy, Puitspeln.); a variation of F. bigne, a swelling rising from a blow (Burguy). β. These F. words are represented by the mod. F. dimin. beignet, a fritter; the connexion is established by Cotgrave, who gives the dimin. forms as bugnet and biguet, with this explanation: 'Bignets, little round loaves, or lumps made of fine meal, oil, or butter, and raisins; buns, Lenten loaves; also, flat fritters made like small pancakes.' So also Minshew's Span. Dict. has: 'buñuelos, pancakes, cobloaves, buns.' And Torriano has Ital. 'bugna, bugno, bugnone, any round knob or bunch, a bile or blain.' The word probably came to us from the S. of France; cf. Prov. bugno, a swelling, bugneto, also bugno, a fritter. See Notes on E. Etymol. p. 25. γ. Perhaps of Scandinavian origin; see Bunior.

BUNCH, a knob, a cluster. (E.?) M.E. bunche, Debate of the Body and Soul, Vernon MS. l. 344; where the copyist in Matzner has bulche, l. 370. From M.E. bunchen, to beat; P. Plowman, A. prol. 71; B. prol. 74. Of imitative origin; a parallel formation to Bump; cf. Low G. bunk, a bone that sticks out, a bump; Du. bunk, a mass of flesh. And cf. Bunk, Bungle. β. The notion of 'bunching out' is due to 'striking,' as in other cases, the swelling being caused by the blow; see Bump (1). Cf. Du. bonken, to beat, belabour. Der. bunchy.

BUNDLE, something bound up, a package. (E.) M.E. bundel (ill-spelt bundelle), Prompt. Parv. p. 55. A dimin., by adding suffix -el, of bund, a bundle, a thing bound up; the plural bundels, occurs as a gloss of L. fasciculus in the Lind. MS. in Matt. xiii. 30. † Du. bondel, a bundle; G. bündel, a dimin. of bund, a bundle, bunch, truss. From bund, weak grade of AS. bindun, to bind. See Bind.

BUNG, a plug for a hole in a cask. (Du.—L.) M.E. bunge, Prompt. Parv. p. 55. 'Bung of a tonne or pype, bondel,' Palsgrave. —MDu. bonge, 'the bung of a barrill,' Hexham; a dialectal variant of MDu. bunde*, whence MDu. bonne, a bung, stopple, for which Oudemans gives two quotations; hence mod. Du. bom, a bung (Frankc). Hence also F. boude, of which Palsgrave has the dimin. bondel, cited above. Cotgrave explains boude by 'a bung or stopple; also, a sluice, a floodgate.' β. This MDu. bunde* (preserved in F. boude) is cognate with Alsatian bunde, Swiss punt (see Weigand, s. v. Spund, ii. 785). —L. puncta, an orifice; orig. fem. of punctus, sp. of pungere, to prick. Cf. W. bung, an orifice, also a bung; from E. bung, which also means 'bung-hole.' See G. Spund, a bung, an orifice, in Kluge; in which the s (from F. es, L. ex) was prefixed.

BUNGALOW, a Bengal thatched house. (Ind.) Spelt bunglo, Murphy, The Upholsterer, ii. 3 (1758). In Rich. Pers. Dict., p. 293, we find: 'Pers. bangala, of or belonging to Bengal; a bungalow.' From the name Bangla. Forbes gives Hind. bangla, m. a kind of thatched house (p. 88); Wilson gives the Bengali form as bangla (p. 59).

BUNGLE, to mend clumsily. (Scand.) Shak. has bungler, Hen. V. ii. 2. 115; Sir T. More has bungler, Works, p. 1069 c. Prob. from bung, weak grade of an old Teut. str. vb. bing-an-, to strike, pt. t. bing; cf. MDu. bing-el, a cudgill; Hexham; prov. E. bang, a strong pole, and bang, to beat; G. bengel, a cudgel; see EFries. bingeln in Koolman. β. This is rendered probable by comparison with Swed. dial. bangla, to work ineffectually (Rietz); Norw. bunka, to work by fits and starts (Ross). Thre gives MSwed. bunga, to strike, and Rietz gives bonka and bunka as variants of Swed. dial. banka, to strike. See Bang. Der. bungler.

BUNION, a painful swelling on the foot. (Ital.—Teut.) Not in early use. Rich. quotes bunians from Rowe's Imitations of Horace, bk. iii. ode 9; written, perhaps, about A. D. 1718; the footnote (in Eng. Poets, ix. 472) says that it was 'Jacob's term for his corns,' so that we owe the word to J. Tonson, the book-seller, who may very well have known the Ital. form.—Ital. bugnone, bugno, any round knob or bunch, a boil or blain; cf. OF. bugne, bune, buigne, a swelling (Burguy); F. higne, a bump, knob, rising, or swelling after a knock (Cotgrave); = Icel. bunga, an elevation, convexity; Norw. bunga, a round swelling, a bump (Ross); OHG. bungo, a lump (elited by Diez). Allied to Skt. bahu-s, thick, Gk. maxos; Brugmann, Kurze Vergl. Gram. § 104. β. The prov. Eng. bunny, a swelling after a blow, in Forby's East-Anglian Dialect, is from the OF. bugne. See Bun. ¶ The Ital. bugnone is from Ital. bugno, the same as the OF. bugne; with the addition of the Ital. augmentative suffix -one.

BUNK, a wooden case or box, serving for a seat by day and a bed by night; one of a series of berths arranged in tiers. (Scand.) A nautical term; and to be compared with the MSwed. bunke, which three defines as 'tabulatum navis, quo cœli injuriæ defenduntur a vectoribus et meribus.' He adds a quotation, viz. 'Gretter giorde sier grof under bunka' = 'Gretter made for himself a bed under the boarding or planking [if that be the right rendering of 'sub tabulato']. The ordinary sense of MSwed. bunke is a pile, a heap, orig. something prominent; Icel. bunki; allied to F. bunch. Cf. MDan. bunke, room for cargo.

BUNT, the belly or hollow of a sail; a nautical term. (Scand.) = MHG. ¶ Bunt, the hollow allowed in making sails; Coles (1684). Also in Kersey's Dict. α. Wedgwood explains it from Dan. bundi, Swed. bunt, a bundle, a bunch; and so Webster; cf. EFries. bund, bunt, a bundle, packing. If so, the root is the verb to bind. Cf. Norw. bunda, to pack, pack tight (Ross). From MHG. bunt, a bundle, = OHG. bunt, weak grade of bintan, to bind. β. But the sense agrees better with that of a different Scand. word, answering to E. bow, a bend; cf. Dan. bog, a belly; bog paa Seil, a wound; bug-gaarding, a bunt-line; bug-line, bowline; bug-spyd, bowsprit; bugne, to bend; de bugnede Seil, the belling sails or cravys; Swed. buk på et segel, the bunt of a sail; bugning, flexure.

BUNTING (1), the name of a bird. (S. and ?) ME. bunting, bounting; also buntyle, badly written for buntel. [Buntynge, hyacin, pratellus; Prompt. Parv. p. 56. 'A bounting'; Lyric Poems, ed. Wright, p. 40. 'The pratellus, a buntyle'; Wright's Vocab. I. 221. Cf. Lowland Scotch bunting, a bunting. Origin unknown. As the bird has 'a clumsy figure' (Newton), we may compare Lowl. Sc. bunting, short and thick, plump, prov. E. bunt, short and stout; perhaps from Norw. bunta, stout and compact (Ross).

BUNTING (2), a thin woollen stuff, of which ships' flags are made. (F.?) In Johnson's Dict., and first found in 1743 (N.E.D.). [The suggestion of a connexion with High G. bunt, variegated, is unlikely, though the word is now found in Dutch as bont.] M. Weigwood says: 'To bunt in Somerset is to bolt meal, whence bunting, bolting-cloth, the loose open cloth used for sifting flour, and now more generally known as the material of which flags are made.' And he has noted that F. cinquante means (1) a bolting-cloth, (2) bunting. The E. D. D. has bunt, to sift, to bolt, and bunting, a kind of cloth of which sieves are made (which seems decisive). The verb bunt, to bolt flour, is ME. bonten, to sift, and occurs in the Aynclite of Iwuyt, p. 93.

BUOY, a floating piece of wood fastened down. (Du. - L.) It occurs (spelt buoy) in Hakluyt's Voyages, vol. iii. p. 411. Spelt boy in Palsgrave. Borrowed, as many sea-terms are, from the Dutch. - Du. boei, a buoy; also, a shackle, letter. [The same word as OF. boie, huie, a fetter; Godfrey. = Late L. boia, a fetter, a clog. 'Raynouard, l'ex. Rom. ii. 332, quotes "jacet compedibus constringi, quos rustica lingua boias vocat." Plantas has ubi in a pun, Capt. iv. 2. 109. "Bois est boiam terit;" note to Vie de Saint Auban, l. 680, ed. Atkinson; q. v.] - L. boia, pl. a collar for the neck, orig. made of leather. Sometimes derived from l. bōs, an ox, and said to have meant 'a collar made of leather'; like Gk. bois, Boios, Boios from bois. ¶ A buoy is so called because chained to its place, like a clog chained to a prisoner's leg. Cf. 'In presence, fetterit with boys, sitting'; Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, x. 763. The mod. F. houe, a buoy, is a modification of MF. boyer, 'a boy', in Palsgrave, and means 'chained down', being the f. pp. of a verb huier, to chain. Der. buoy-ant (Span. boyante); buoy-anc-y.

BUR, BURDOCK; see Burr.

BURBOT, a fish of the genus Lota. (F. - L. - Gk.) The pl. barbottus occurs in Reliq. Antiquæ, i. 85 (ab. 1475). = F. barbotté (also barbote). = F. bourbetter, 'to wallow in mud'; Cot. = F. bourbe, mud. = Late L. barba, mud (Ducange). = Gk. Bôbôpos, mud.

BURDEN (1), BURTHEN, a load carried. (E.) ME. birbene, Havelok, 807; altered to birben by Norman influence; spelt birdin in Cursor Mundi, 6830 (Cotton MS.). AS. byrðen, a load (Grein). + OSax. burðinnia. Teut. type burðinnja*, extension of bur-th* with suffix -inija. Allied to Icel. byrð, byrði; Swed. bärda; Dan. byrde; Goth. burðei; OHG. burdi, burðin; MHG. and G. bürde. All from Teut. bur-, weak grade of ber-an, to bear; with varying suffixes. Further allied to Gk. phôros, a burden. = √BHER, to bear. See Bear. Der. burden-some.

BURDEN (2), the refrain of a song. (F. - Late L.) The same word as bourdon, the drone of a bagpipe or the bass in music. ME. burdon, Chaucer, Prol. 673. = F. bourdon, 'a drone or dorre-bee; also, the humming or buzzing of bees; also, the drone of a bagpipe'; Cot. = Late L. burdōnem, acc. of burdo, a drone or non-working bee, which is probably an imitative word, from the buzzing sound made by the insect; bur- being another form of buzz, q. v.; cf. Lowl. Sc. bier, to whiz. ¶ The ME. bourdon also means a pilgrim's staff, which is another meaning of the F. bourdon. The Late L. burdo also means (1) an ass, mule, (2) a long organ-pipe. Thier thinks the 'organ-pipe' was so named from resembling a 'staff', which he derives from burdo in the sense of 'mule'. But burdo, an ass, may be a distinct word.

BURDOCK; see Burr.

BUREAU, an office for business. (F. - L. - Gk. ?) Used by Swift and Burke; see Richardson. = F. bureau, a desk, writing-table, so called because covered with baize. Cotgrave has: 'Bureau, a thick and coarse cloath, of a brown russet or darke-mingled colour; also, the table that's within a court of audit or of audience (belike, because it is usually covered with a carpet of that cloth); also the court itself.' And see Thacker, who quotes from Boileau, vêtu de simple bureau. = OF. burel, coarse woollen stuff, russet-coloured. = OF. buire (F. buire), reddish-brown. = L. burris, fiery-red (Vick, ii. 154). = Gk. ruppōs, flame-coloured. = Gk. βῦρ, fire. See Fire. ¶ Chaucer has 'borel men', i.e. men roughly clad, men of small account (C.T. B 3145); where borel is from the OF. burel above. Der. bureau-crazy; see Aristocracy.

BURGNET, BURGONET, a helmet. (F. - Late L.) See Shak. Ant. and Cleop. i. 5. 24. = F. bourguignotte, 'a Burgnet, Hufkin, or Spanish Murrion' [Murrion, helmet]; Cot. So called because first used by the Burgundians. = F. Bourguigne, Burgundy. = Late L. Burgundia; cf. Bourguignon, a Burgonian, one of Burgundy; Cot. β. So, in Spanish, we have burguñata, a sort of helmet; a la burguñata, after the Burgundy fashion; Borguñá, Burgundy wine. And, in Italian, borgognone, borgognotta, a burgnet, helmet.

BURGEO = a bud; to bud. (F. - Teut.) ME. borioune (printed bourioune), a bud; Arthur and Merlin, p. 65 (Halliwell's Dict.). burion (printed burjon), Cursor Mundi, 10735. 'Gramino, to borieuone (printed borioune) or byrmell.' Prompt. Parv. p. 276, note 3. = F. bourgeon, a young bud; Cot. OF. borion = burgion (Hatzfeld). β. Dier cites a shorter form in the Languedoc bourre, a bud, the eye of a shoot (mod. Prov. bourro, bourre, a bud); and he supposes the word to have been formed from the MHG. burēn, OHG. burjan, to raise, push up. If so, we are at once led to MHG. por, OHG. por, an elevation, whence is formed the word in-por, upwards, in common use as G. empor; cf. G. empöring, an insurrection, i.e. a breaking forth. Allied to Du. beuren, to lift up. From Teut. bur-, weak grade of beran, to bear.

BURGESS, a citizen. (F. - MHG.) ME. burgyses, Chaucer, Prol. 369; Havelok, 1328; pl. burgyses, Ancren Riwle, p. 168. = OF. burgies, a citizen. = Late L. burgensis, adj., belonging to a city. = Late L. burgus, a small fort (Vegetius). = MHG. bure, a fort (G. burg); cognate with E. borough. See Borough.

BURGHIER, a citizen. (Du.) In Cascoigne, Fruits of Warre, st. 14. = Du. burger, a citizen. = Du. burg, a city; cognate with E. borough. See Borough.

BURGLAR, a housebreaker, thief. (AF. - E.) Dogberry misuses burglary, Much Ado, iv. 2. 52. Florio (ed. 1680, not in ed. 1611) interprets Ital. gruncelli by 'roguing beggars, burglairs.' Burglar is an AF. law term; spelt burgler in Fitzherbert's Grande Abridgement, 268 b; burglour in a tr. of Fitzherbert's New bk. Justices, 125 b. The Late L. forms are burgulātor, burglātor, burglātor, all with the sense of house-breaker. All are founded on AS. burh, a borough, whence ME. burgh-breche, 'breach of a borough.' See N. E. D. Der. burglar-y, burglar-i-on.

BURGMASTER, a chief magistrate of a town. (Du.) In 1 Hen. IV, ii. 1. 84. 'Euery of the foresayd cities sent one of their burgmasters unto the towne of Ilage in Holland'; Hakluyt, Voyages, i. 157. = Du. burgemeester, a burgmaster; whence it has been corrupted by assimilating burge- to burgo-, for Late L. burgus, a town (Latinised form of borough or burg), whilst meester is spelt in the E. fashion. = Du. burg, a borough, cognate with E. borough, q. v.; and meester, a master (OF. mestre), for which see Master.

BURGNET, a helmet; see Burgnet.

BURIAL, a grave; the act of burying. (E.) ME. burial, a grave; Trevisa, ii. 27; birial, a tomb, Wycl., Matt. xxvii. 60. But the form is corrupt; the older Eng. has burials, which is a singular, not a plural substantive, in spite of its apparent plural form. 'Beryel, sepulchral' Wright's Vocab. i. 178. 'An buryell, i.e. a tomb; Kob. of Glouc., p. 204; l. 4184. AS. byrgels, a sepulchre; Gen. xxiii. 9; the commoner form being byrgen, Gen. xxiii. 3. Formed, with suffix -els, from AS. byrg-an, to bury. See Bury. ¶ Other examples of the suffix -els or -else occur in AS; e.g. fetels, a bag, Josh. ix. 4; riddelse, a riddle, Numb. xii. 8. The suffix -al in E. burial is due to association with funeral, &c.

BURIN, an engraver's tool. (F.—Ital.—G.) In Bailey, vol. ii. (1731). Borrowed from F. burin, a word borrowed from Ital. borino (Brachet). Probably formed from MHG. boren (OIG. porōn, G. böhren), to bore; cognate with E. bore. See Bore (1).

BURKE, to murder by suffocation, to stifle. (E.) From the name of Burke, an Irishman who committed murders by suffocation; executed at Edinburgh, Jan. 28, 1829. The name Burke (L. de Burgo) is due to an AF. pronunciation of AS. burh, a borough.

BURL, to pick knots and loose threads from cloth; in cloth-making. (F.—Late L.) To burl is to pick off burles or knots in cloth, the word being properly a sb. Halliwell has: 'Burle, a knot, or bump; see Topsell's Hist. Beasts, p. 250 [220, ed. 1658]. Also, to take away the knots or impure parts from wool or cloth. "Desquamare vestes, to burl clothe;" Elyot. Cf. Herrick's Works, ii. 15. "ME. burl, a knot in cloth; see Prompt. Parv. p. 56.—OF. bourle, a tuft of wool, dimin. of bourre (Godefroy); cf. Prov. F. bouril, bourril, a flock or end of thread which disfigures cloth, cited by Mr. Wedgwood as a Languedoc word; spelt bourri, bourril in Mistral.—F. bourre, expl. by Cotgrave as 'flocks, or locks of wool, hair, &c. serving to stuff saddles, balls, and such like things.'—Late L. burra, a woollen pad (Ducange); cf. L. burra, trifles; Late L. reburus, rough.

BURLESQUE, comic, ironical. (F.—Ital.—L.) Dryden speaks of 'the dull burlesque'; Art of Poetry, canto i. l. 81. It is properly an adjective, as in Blount's Gloss.—F. burlesque, introd. in 16th cent. from the Ital. (Brachet).—Ital. burlesco, ludicrous.—Ital. buria, a trick, waggery, fun, banter. β. Diez suggests that buria is a dimin. from L. burra, used by Ausonius in the sense of a jest, though the proper sense is rough hair. This supposition seems to explain also the Span. borla, a tassel, tuft, as compared with Span. borra, goat's hair. See Burl.

BURLY, large, corpulent, huge. (E.) ME. burely, Perceval, 269; barlie, large, ample, bestial, 605; burliche, Morte Arthur, ed. Brock, 586, 2190. The same as Shetland boorly, stout; Prov. E. boverly, comely, well made, stout. Cf. 'great and boverly images', in Udall's tr. of Erasmus's Apophthegms (1542), p. 184 b. This shows clearly that the AS. form must have been bur-lic*, in which the u was shortened before rl, as in mod. F. Dunstan, AS. Dūn-stān. Thus the orig. sense was 'suitable for a bower' or lady's chamber; hence handsome, goodly, &c. Cf. ME. burmaiden, a 'bower-maid.' (Athenaeum, Mar. 24, 1894, p. 250; Notes on E. Etym. p. 26.) See Bower.

BURN (1), to set on fire. (E.) ME. burnen, Ancrén Riwle, p. 306; allied to burnen, Chaucer, C. T. 2331 (A 2331). There are two types. α. intrans. AS. byrnan, to burn; Grein, i. 153; also beornan, p. 109; a strong verb, pt. t. bearn, bran, pt. p. burnen.—β. trans. AS. burnan, weak verb (Grein, i. 77).—ICel. brinna, bran, brænde, Swed. brinna; G. brennen; Teut. type brannjan*, causal of the former.

BURNET, a plant. (F.—OHG.) A name given chiefly to the Poterium Sanguisorba and Sanguisorba officinalis; see E.D.S. Plant-Names, and Prior. Prior says the name was given to the Poterium because of its brown flowers. The flowers of the Sanguisorba are of a deep purple-brown colour. The word occurs in MS. Sloane 2457, fol. 6 (see Halliwell) as synonymous with pimpernel, but Mr. Britten remarks that the poterium is meant. It also occurs in Late L. as burneta, Rclq. Antiq. i. 37, so that it is doubtless French. Cf. ME. burnet, dark brown; O.E. Hom. ii. 163. Also AF. burnete, burnet (Alphita).—OF. brunete, given by Godefroy as the name of a flower, now unknown; but it is clearly our burnet. Also spelt brunette, and the same word with OF. brunette, also burnette, a kind of dark brown cloth, also a brunette. See further under Brunette.

BURNISH, to polish. (F.—OHG.) Shak. has burnished, Merch. Ven. ii. 1. 2; ME. burnist, Gawain and Grene Knight, ed. Morris, 212; cf. burned, Chaucer, C. T. 1985 (A 1983).—OF. burnir, brunir, to embrown, to polish; pres. pt. burnis-ant (whence the E. suffix -ish).—OHG. brūnen (< brunjan*), to embrown, also to make bright, to polish.—OIG. brān, brown; cognate with AS. brūn, brown. See Brown. Der. burnish-er.

BURNOUSE, an upper cloak worn by Arabs. (F.—Arab.) In G. Eliot, Daniel Deronda, ch. xi. Dryden describes Almeyda as having 'her face veiled with a burnus;' Don Sebastian, A. i.—F. burnous.—Arab. burnus, a kind of high-crowned cap, worn formerly in Barbary and Spain; whence Span. albornoz, a kind of cloak with a hood; Rich. Dict. p. 265; Devic.

BURR, BUR, a rough envelope of the seeds of plants, as in the burdock. (E.) ME. burre, tr. by 'lappa, glis'; Prompt. Parv. p. 56; cf. borre, a hoarseness or roughness in the throat, P. Plowman, C. xx. 306. In Cockayne's A.S. Leechdoms, iii. 316, we find: 'Burr, pl. burres, burr, burra, Arctium lappa; Gl. Rawlinson, c. 607; Gl. Sloane, 5. NFriesic burre, borre, a burr. + Swed. borre, a seahedgehog, sea-urchin; karlborre, a burdock; Dan. borre, burdock. From Teut. base bur-, for burn-, weak grade of Teut. root bers-*, to bristle. See Bristle. Der. bur (or perhaps of imitative origin), a roughness in the throat, hoarseness; burdock.

BURROW, a shelter for rabbits. (E.) ME. borrough, a den, cave, lurking-place; 'Fast byside the borrough there the barn was inne'—a close beside the burrow where the child was; William of Palerne, l. 9. In the Prompt. Parv. p. 56, we find: 'Burweke, burwek [burwek?] burwe, burraue, town; burgus.' Thus burrow is a mere variation of borrough. β. The provincial Eng. burrow, a shelter, is the same word; from burg-, weak grade of AS. beorgan, to protect. See Borough. Der. burrow, verb.

BURSAR, a purse-keeper, treasurer. (Late L.—Gk.) Wood, in his Athenae Oxonienses, says that Hales was 'bursar of his college' (R.). The pl. bursers is in Harrison, Descr. of England, h. ii. ch. 3; ed. Furnivall, p. 82.—Late L. burārius, a treasurer.—Late L. bursar, a purse, with suffix -arius, denoting the agent.—Gk. βύρα, a hide, skin; of which purses were made. See Purse. Der. bursar-ship.

BURST, to break asunder, break forth. (E.) ME. bersten, bræsten, Chaucer, C. T. 1982 (A 1980); P. Plowman, A. vii. 165. AS. berstan, pt. t. berst, pp. borsten; Grein, i. 92. + Du. bersten, to burst asunder; ICel. bræsta; Swed. brista; Dan. briste; OHG. prūtan, MHG. brusten (G. bersten). + Gael. bris, to break; Irish brisaim, Irish bris-im, I break. Teut. type burst-an*, pt. t. burst*.

BURTHEN; see Burden (1).

BURY (1), to hide in the ground, to inter. (E.) ME. buryen, P. Plowman, R. xi. 66. AS. byrgan, byrgan, Grein, i. 152; from burg-*, weak grade of AS. beorgan, to protect, to hide; for which see Borough. Der. bury-al, q. v.

BURY (2), a town; as in Canterbury. (E.) A variant of borough, due to the peculiar declension of AS. burh, which changes to the form byrig in the dat. sing. after the prep. et, at. See Borough.

BUS, a shortened form of omnibus (ab. 1832). (L.) The pl. omnibusses, with the third syllable more stressed than at present, was shortened to busses; whence the sing. bus or bus. See Omnibus.

BUSH (1), a thicket. (Late L.) α. Bush answers to an AS. bysc*, whence Ward-busc, will-busc, Birch, Cart. Sax. iii. 638, l. 35; cf. Bissey, Busey, old forms of Bushy, Herts. ME. bush, Chaucer, C. T. 1519 (A 1517); busch, bush, P. Plowman, B. xi. 336; bush, Will. of Palerne, 3069; Gen. and Exodus, 2779. β. The form bush is of Scand. origin; cf. Dan. bush, a bush, shrub; Swed. busch, a bush. Cf. also Du. bosch, a wood, forest; OHG. buse (G. busch). All from Late L. boscus, a bush; a word of unknown origin; whence also Ital. bosco, F. bois. βoscu occurs in the Laws of Cnut, De Foresta, § 28. Der. bush-y, bush-i, ness.

BUSH (2), the metal box in which an axle of a machine works. (Dutch—L.—Gk.) Technical. Miss Jackson (Shropsh. Word-book) quotes 'one pair of bushes' from an inventory of 1625.—MDu. busse; Du. bus, a box; here the equivalent of the E. box, which is similarly used.—Late L. buxis, a box.—Gk. βύξ, a box.—Gk. βύξ, box-wood, box-tree. See Box (1). Doublet, pyx.

BUSHEL, a measure. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. bushel, Chaucer, C. T. 4091 (A 4093); Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 331, l. 165, p. 341, l. 393 (ab. 1330).—AF. bussel; Britton, i. 189; OF. boisse; Burgun, s. v. boiste; Godefroy, Supp.—Late L. boissellus, bussellus, a bushel; also spelt bustellus.—Late L. bussida (> OF. boiste, F. boite), the acc. case of buxis, a box.—Gk. βύξ, a box. See above.

BUSK (1), to get oneself ready. (Scand.) ME. buske, busken, P. Plowman, B. ix. 123; Cursor Mundi, 11585.—ICel. biask, to get oneself ready; see Cleasby and Vigfusson's ICel. Diet. pp. 87, col. 1, and 88, col. 1; Dasent, Burnt Njal, pref. xvi, note. It stands for būa-sk, where būa is to prepare, and -sk is for sik (cf. G. sich), oneself. The neut. sense of būa is to live, dwell; from βHĒU, to be. See Boor, and cf. Bask.

BUSK (2), a support for a woman's stays. (F.) Busk now means a piece of whalebone or stiffening for the front of a pair of stays; but was originally applied to the whole of the stays.—MF. busque; Cotgrave has: 'Busque, . . . a buske, or buste;' mod. F. buse. Of uncertain origin; cf. also MF. buc, a buske, plated body, or other quilted thing, worn to make, or keep, the body straight; Cot. Cf. F. buse in Supp. to Godefroy.

BUSKIN, a kind of legging. (F.—Ital.—L.—Gk.) Shak. has buskin'd, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 71. Cotgrave has: 'Brodequin, a buskin.' Palsgrave has: 'Buskyng, brodequin;' and (at p. 907, col. 3), we find: 'The buskins, les brousequins;' among the articles of women's attire.—OF. bousequin, occurring in 1483 (Godefroy, Supp., s. v. brodequin), also brosequin, brosequin, brosequin (id.). [The form brodequin may have arisen from confusion with F. broder, OF. broder (Hatzfeld).] Origin disputed; but not from Dutch, the MDu. broesken (Sewel) having been borrowed from F. (Frank). Perhaps from MItal. borzachino, pl. borzachini, 'buskins, fine bootes,' Florio; who also gives borzachinelli, 'little buskins, little chequerell [i.e. kid] purses.' The last sense suggests a possible derivation from Mital. borza, variant of horza, a purse, a bag (F. bourse); see Purse. Hence we might also derive Span. borraqui, a buskin, the reappearing in borraquin-ero, a buskin-maker. ¶ The Ital. borza (like MF. bourse) may have had the sense of leather case; cf. Gk. βύρα, a hide. Cf. 'I. tunicam de buskins, et i. togam viridem,' York Wills (1471); iii. 188.

BUSS (1), a kiss; to kiss. (E.) Used by Shak. K. John, iii. 4. 35. The sb. buss is in Spenser, F. Q. iii. 10. 46. Buss is of imitative origin; cf. Lith. bucz-oti, to kiss; Bavarian bussen, to kiss; Schmeller. Webster refers to Luther as an authority for buss in the sense of a kiss; cf. Swed. dial. pussa, to kiss; puss, a kiss (Rietz). Also Span. buz, a kiss; Gael. bua, W. bua, mouth, lip, snout. ¶ In ME., the form is bass. Cf. 'Thus they kiss and bass;' Calisto and Mellicca, in Old Plays, ed. Hazlitt, i. 74; basse, a kiss, Court of Love, i. 797; 'I basse or kysse a person;' Palgrave. This is from F. baiser, to kiss; or from L. bāsīare, to kiss, bāsium, a kiss.

BUSS (2), a herring-boat. (F.) In Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, pp. 149, 153, 158, 169.—OF. buse, buss, buce, a sort of barge; cf. also Du. buis, a herring-boat; Late L. busta, a kind of a larger boat. In the A. S. Chron. an. 1066, we find bute-carlas, barge-men. The origin of the word is unknown.

BUST, the upper part of the human figure. (F.—Ital.) Used by Cotgrave; who explains buste by 'a bust, the ... quilted body of a doublet; also, the whole bulk or body of a man from his face to his middle.'—F. buste, introduced in 16th century from Ital. (Brachet).—Ital. busto, bust, human body, stays; cf. bustino, bodice, corset, slight stays.—Late L. bustum, the trunk of the body, the body without the head. β. Etym. uncertain. Dies connects it with Late L. busta, a small box, from L. acc. buxida; see Box (2). Compare the E. names chest and trunk. Others connect it with Late L. busta, or busea, a log of wood, OF. buche, F. bûche, allied to Late L. boscus; for which see Bush (1). See Korting, §§ 1602, 1666.

BUSTARD, a kind of bird. (F.—L.) 'A bustard, buteo, picus,' Lewis, 30. 12. Used by Cotgrave, who has: 'Bustarde, a bustard.' Spelt bustard, in 1531; cf. bysig, bywig, labour, bysigan, to employ, fatigue. ¶ Du. beizig, busy, active; beizighed, business, occupation; beizen, to use, employ; Low G. beisch (Lübhen); EFries. bisig, busy. Cf. Norw. buse, to toil (Larsen). Der. bustiness, busy-body. ¶ We find ONorthumb. bisigness, solicitude, anxiety, in the Lindisfarne MS.; Table of Contents of St. Matthew, no. xx; ed. Skeat, p. 17. l. 10. The AS. form is bisig rather than bysig.

BUSTLE (1), to stir about quickly, to scurry. (Scand.) Shak. has bustle, to be active, Rich. III. i. 1. 152. 'Bustling forth as beasts,' wandering blindly like beasts; Piers Plowman, A. vi. 4. A frequentative; cf. Icel. busta, to splash about as a fish.—Norw. busta, to be violent; båsa, to rush forward headlong (Koss). Cf. EFries. büsen, to be noisy or violent; Swed. busa på en, to rush upon something. Also Low G. buss, bounce! büstern, to wander about; er büstert ont herum, he bustles about (Bremen); Swed. busta, to bustle, work (Hjörkman); Low G. (Kürhessen) bosseln, busseln, to bustle about (Vilmann).

BUSTLE (2), a pad beneath a woman's skirt. (Scand.) Probably from buckle, vb., in its earliest sense 'to prepare, equip'; so that the sense is 'equipment.' Cf. buck, to attire, accoutre, dress, of which it is the frequentative. The N.E.D. quotes—'Bustel thyself [prepare thyself] and make thee bowne' [ready]; Bradford, Wks. p. 445. BUSY, active. (F.) ME. bisy, Chaucer, Prol. 321. AS. bisig, bysig, busy, Grein, i. 153; cf. bysig, bywig, labour, bysigan, to employ, fatigue. ¶ Du. beizig, busy, active; beizighed, business, occupation; beizen, to use, employ; Low G. beisch (Lübhen); EFries. bisig, busy. Cf. Norw. buse, to toil (Larsen). Der. bustiness, busy-body. ¶ We find ONorthumb. bisigness, solicitude, anxiety, in the Lindisfarne MS.; Table of Contents of St. Matthew, no. xx; ed. Skeat, p. 17. l. 10. The AS. form is bisig rather than bysig.

BUT (1), adv., prep. and conj., except. (F.) ME. bute, Havelok, 85; büten, Layamon, l. 23. AS. būtan, conj. except. prep. besides, without; contr. from be-ūtan, Grein, i. 150. The full form būtan is frequently found in the Heland, e.g. in l. 2188; and even būtan that, unless, l. 2775. β. Be = by; ūtan = outward, outside; būtan = 'by the outside,' and so 'beyond,' 'except.' The form ūtan is adverbial; from ūt, out. ¶ Du. buiten, except. ¶ All the uses of but are from the same source; the distinction attempted by Horne Tooke is unfounded. The form be for by is also seen in the word be-yond, a word of similar formation. See further under Out.

BUT (2), a strike; a but-end; a cask. See Butt (1) and Butt (2). BUTCHER, a slaughterer of animals. (F.—OIG.) ME. bocher, P. Plowman, B. prol. 218; King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, l. 2822.—OF. bocher, originally one who kills he-goats.—OF. boc (F. boue), a he-goat.—OIG. bok (G. buck), a he-goat; allied to E. buck. See Buck. Der. butcher, verb; butcher-y.

BUTLER, one who attends to bottles. (F.—Late L.) ME. boteler, botler, Wyclif, Gen. xl. 1, 2; boteler (3 syll.), Chaucer, C. T. 15140 (B 4324).—AF. botuiller, a butler, Vie de St. Auban, ed. Atkinson, l. 677; and see note.—AF. botuile, a bottle; OF. botelle. See Bottle. Der. butlery, a corrupted word; q. v.

BUTT (1), a push, a thrust; to thrust. (F.—O. Low G.) [The sense of the sb. may be referred back to the verb, just as the F. bout depends on bouter (Brachet).] ME. buten, to push, strike, Ormulum, l. 2810; Havelok, 1916, 2322.—OF. bouter, to push, butt, thrust, strike; of which the AF. form was bouter, Vie de Saint Auban, 534.—OFrankish bōtan, corresponding to MDu. bouten, to beat, MHG. bōzen, to strike, beat; cognate with AS. bētan. See Beat. Der. In the sense of 'a butt to shoot at,' or 'a rising ground, a knoll,' we have borrowed the F. butte, which see in Cotgrave and Hatfield.

Cf. F. but, a mark; butoir, to strike; from the same root as before. BUTT (2), a large barrel. (F.—Late L.) In Lewis, 195. 13. 'A Butte of Malmesey;' Sir T. More, Hist. Rich. III. § 4. Not E. [The AS. by (Voc. 123. 29), occurring in the pl. byta in Matt. ix. 17, and the dat. sing. bytte, Psalm xxxii. 7, produced an ME. bute, for which see bit (3), sb., in N.E.D.; cf. Icel. búta, a pail, a small tub.] Our modern word is really French.—OF. boute, F. boite, which Cotgrave explains as 'the vessel which we call a butt.' Cf. also OF. bote, in the Suppl. to Godefroy.—Late L. būtis, būtilla, a cask. See Bottle.

BUTT (3), a thick end, as of a gun. (E.) Prob. an E. word, though not found early; see Buttock. ME. but; 'the but of his spere;' Malory, Morte Arthur, bk. x. ch. 2. 2; leaf 208, l. 25. Cf. EFries. būt, NFries. būt, thick, stumpy. Also Icel. bútr, short, bútr, a log; Dan. būt, Swed. būt, stumpy, surly; Low G. būt, stumpy, butt, a thick end; Du. bot, blunt, dull; prov. G. bütz, stumpy; Swed. būt, MHG. bütze, a lump, a clod.

BUTT (4), a kind of flat fish. (E.) ME. butte, Havelok, 759. EFries. būt, allied to Swed. butta, a turbot; M.Du. butte, Low G. būt, Du. būt, a butt, founder. Prob. allied to Butt (3).

BUTTER, a substance obtained from milk by churning. (L.—Gk.) ME. botere, Wyclif, Gen. xviii. 8; butter, Havelok, 643. AS. butter (Kosworth); a borrowed word.—L. būtyrum.—Gk. būtēropos; as if from bav, for bōv, an ox, and rupos, cheese; but it is perhaps of Scythian origin; cf. Herodotus, iv. 2. ¶ The similarity of F. butier to G. butter is simply due to the word being borrowed, not native. Der. butter-cup, also butter-fly, q. v.

BUTTERFLY, an insect. (Hybrid; Gk. and E.) AS. butter-flōg, in Ælfric's Glossary, ed. Sommer, Nomina Insectorum.—AS. būter, butterfly, and floga, a fly. ¶ Du. buttervlēg, G. butterfliege, a butterfly; cf. butter-vogel (butter-fowl, i.e. butterfly-bird), a large white moth. β. It has assumed many a diverse guess as to explain the name. Kilian gives a M. Du. name of the insect as bater-schijte, showing that its excrement was regarded as resembling butter; and this guess is better than others in so far as it rests on some evidence. It was also a popular belief that butterflies stole milk and cream; cf. G. mollen-dieb, milk-thief, butterfly, and see Schmetterling in Kluge.

BUTTERY, a place for provisions, esp. liquors. (F.—Late L.) Shak. has buttery, 1. Am. Shrew. Ind. i. 102; bring your hand to the buttery-bar, and let it drink; Tw. Night, i. 3. 74. The principal thing given out at the buttery-bar was (and is) beer; the buttery-bar is a small ledge on the top of the half-door (or buttery-hatch) on which to rest tankards. But buttery was (and is) also kept in butteries, the word was easily corrupted into its present form. β. It is, however, from ME. boterie (Promp. Parv.), shortened from ME. boterie, i.e. a buttery, or place for bottles. In Rob. of Glouc. p. 191, we read that 'Bedwer the boteler' (i.e. Bedivere the butler) took some men to serve in 'the botelery.' So, too, we find: 'Hec botelaria, botelary;' Voc. 670. 16.—OF. botellerie (Suppl. to Godefroy); F. botellerie, 'a cupboard, or table to set bottles on'; also, a cupboard, or house to keep bottles in.' Cotgrave.—OF. botelle, a bottle. See Bottle.

BUTTOCK, the rump. (E.) Chaucer has butook, C. T. 3801 (A 3803). It is also spelt butoke, and butok; Voc. 677. 17; 750. 7. It is a dimin. of butt, an end; with the E. suffix -ock, properly expressing diminution, as in bull-ock. See Butt (3).

BUTTON, a small round knob. (F.—O. Low G. 1) ME. boton, P. Plowman, B. xv. 121; botoun, Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 239 abh. 1325; corrupted to botum, a bud, Romaine of the Rose; l. 1721.—OF. boton, a bud, a button; F. bouton, a button, a bud;

Cot. — OF. boter, F. bouter, 'to thrust, push forward; also, to bind'; Cot. See Butt (1). ¶ But I suspect that OF. bouter, to bud, may have been different in origin from OF. boter, bouter, to thrust; and may have been suggested by MHG. butts; for which see Bud.

BUTTRESS, a support; in architecture. (F. — Low G.) Itale uses buttrasse to mean a support; Apology, p. 155. MF. bouteras, Prompt. Parv.; whence bouteras, buttress, P. Plozman, B. v. 598. Orig. a pl. form, as if for bouterets. — OF. bouteret (with z = s), pl. of bouteret, a prop, support (Godefroy). — OF. bouter, to thrust, push; see Butt (1). Cotgrave also has: 'Boutant, m. a buttress, or shorepost,' from the same verb. Der. buttruss, vb.

BUTTY, a companion or partner in any work. (F. — Low G.) This is a prov. E. word, used in several dialects (Halliwell). A butty-gang is 'a gang of men to whom a portion of the work in the construction of railways, &c., is let, the proceeds of the work being equally divided amongst them, something extra being allowed to the head man'; Ogilvie's Dict. I make a note here that the etymology is clearly pointed out in Palsgrave, who gives: 'Buty-felowe, parsonner,' for which read parsonnier, i.e. partner. Just below he has: 'Buty, that man [read men] of warre take, butin.' Hence buty-felowe is butty-fellow, a partner or sharer in booty taking, and butty-gang is a gang of men who share equally. The shortening of the vowel oo to u is familiar to us in the words blood, flood; the use of butty for butty-fellow easily followed, when the etymology was lost sight of. See Booty.

BUXOM, healthy; formerly, good-humoured, gracious; orig. obedient. (L.) Shak. has buxom, lively, brisk, Hen. V. iii. 6. 27. Gower has buxom, buxom, obedient, C.A. ii. 221 (bk. v. l. 2807). In the Ancien Riwle, p. 356, it is spelt buxum. — AS. būgan, to bow, bend, whence a stem būh (for būg); with the suffix -sum, like, as in F. win-some, i.e. joy-like, joyous; see March's A. S. Grammar, sect. 229. The actual word būsum does not appear in A.S. (as far as we know), but is common in Early English, occurring in O.E. Homilies, i. 57 (abb. 1175); and there is no doubt about the etymology. Hence the original sense is 'pliable, obedient.' — Du. buigzaam, flexible, tractable, submissive; similarly formed from buigen, to bow, bend; G. biegsam, flexible; from biegen, to bend. See Bow (1).

BUY, to purchase. (E.) ME. buggen, biggen, beyen, byen; also (S. Western) buyen, E. Eng. Poems, ed. Furnivall, p. 120, l. 6; whence the mod. E. spelling. The stem buy is from byg, a stem occurring in the 3 p.s. present and in the imper. sing. of the A.S. verb. See Sweet, N. E. Gr. § 1293. The ME. infin. is commonly buggen, as in the Ancien Riwle, p. 362. AS. byegan, to buy, Grein, i. 151. 4-Goth. bugjan, to buy; OSax. buggean. Koot unknown. Der. ME. abyen, whence abide (3). Der. buy-er.

BUZZ, to hum. (E.) Shak. has buzz, to hum, Merch. Ven. iii. 2. 182; also buzz, a whisper, K. Lear, i. 4. 348. Sir T. More speaks of the buzzing of bees; Works, p. 208 g. It is a directly imitative word; and much the same as the I.owland Sc. hurr, to make a whirling noise, used by Douglas, and occurring in Burns, Tam Samson's Elegy, st. 7. Cf. also Sc. byse, to hiss like hot iron in water (Douglas's Virgil), and bizz, to hiss, Ferguson's Poems, ii. 16. So also Ital. buzzicare, to whisper, buzz, hum.

BUZZARD, an inferior kind of falcon. (F. — L.) Spelt bosarde in the Romaunt of the Rose, l. 4033; also bosard, K. Alisaunder, l. 3049. — OF. bosard, 'a buzzard'; Cotgrave. — OF. buse, a buzzard, with suffix -ard; on which see N.E.D. B. The OF. buse (Supp. to Godefroy) represents a Low L. type butia*, representing L. buteo, used by Pliny for a sparrow-hawk. Cf. Gascon busec, a buzzard (Moucaut); mod. Prov. buso, busec, Limousin bu-ard (Mistral). ¶ The buzzard still retains its old Latin name; the common buzzard is Buteo vulgaris.

BY, beside, near; by means of, &c. (E.) ME. bi, AS. bi, big; Grein, l. 121, 122. [The form big even appears in composition, as in big-leofa, sustenance, something to live by; but the usual form in composition is be, as in bevel.] — OFries. and OSax. bi; Du. bi; OHG. bi, pi; MHG. bi; G. bei; Goth. bi. Related to L. am-bi, Gk. am-phi, Skt. a-bhi. Der. by-name, by-word, by-way. (But not by-law, q. v.) From by, prep. (as in by-towns) came the phr. by and by, in order, hence, directly, soon, in due course; also bye, as in cricket.

BY-LAW, a law affecting a township. (Scand.) Often explained as being derived from the prep. by, as if the law were 'a subordinate law'; a definition which suits late usages of the word, and probably expresses a common mistake. Bacon has: 'by-laws, or ordinances of corporations'; Hen. VII. p. 215 (R.); or ed. Lumby, p. 196, l. 10. B. Blount, in his Law Dict., shows that the word was formerly written birolaw or biurlaw; and Jamieson, s. v. biurlaw, shows that a birolaw-court was one in which every proprietor of a freedom had a vote, and was got up amongst neighbours. 'Laws of biurlaw ar maid and determined be consent of neighbors'; Skene (in Jamieson). There were also biurlaw-men, whose name was corrupted into barley- men. — Icel. ba-r, bý-r, a village (gen. bajar, býjar, whence bir); cf. bajar-lög, a town-law (Icel. Dict. s. v. ba-r); MSwed. bylag; from by, a village, and lag, law; Dan. bylov, municipal law; from by, a town, and lov, law. ¶ The Icel. ba-r or bý-r, a town, village, is allied to búa, to dwell, co-ordinate with AS. búan, to till, cultivate, whence E. bower. See Bower. ¶ The prefix by- in this word is identical with the suffix -by so common in Eng. place-names, esp. in Yorkshire and Lincolnshire, such as Whitby, Grimsby, Scrooby, Derby. The ME. bi, a town, occurs in the Cursor Mundi, ed. Morris, pp. 1210, 1216.

BYRE, a cow-house. (E.) It is Lowland Scotch and North. E. Jamieson quotes 'of bern [barn] or of byre,' from Gawain and Golegros, l. 3. The word is explained by AS. býre, a hut; Voc. 32. 11; 185. 15. This is a derivative (with mutation of ū to y) from AS. būr, a bower. The allied E. bower came to be restricted to the sense of a 'lady's chamber' in most ME. writers. See Bower.

CAB (2), a Hebrew measure; 2 Kings, vi. 25. (Heb.) From Heb. qab, the 18th part of an ephah. The lit. sense is 'hollow' or 'concave'; Concise Dict. of the Bible; s. v. Weights. Cf. Heb. qābah, to form in the shape of a vault. See Alcove.

CABAL, a party of conspirators; also, a plot. (F. — Late L. — Heb.) Ben Jonson uses it to mean 'a secret': 'The measuring of the temple; a cabal Found out but lately'; Staple of News, iii. 1. Bp. Bull, vol. i. ser. 3, speaks of the 'ancient cabala or tradition'; here he uses the Hebrew word. Dryden has: 'When each, by curs'd cabals of women, strove To draw th' indulgent king to partial love'; Aurengzebe, i. 1. 19. He also uses caballing, i.e. conspiring, as a present participle; Art of Poetry, canto iv. l. 972. — F. cabale, 'the Jewes Caball, or a hidden science of divine mysteries which the Rabbies affirm, was revealed and delivered together with the [divine] law'; Cotgrave. — Late L. cabala. — Heb. qābālāh, reception, mysterious doctrine received; from the verb qābal, to take or receive; (in Piel) qābāl, to adopt a doctrine. ¶ The cabinet of 1671 was called the cabal, because the initial letters of the names of its members formed the word, viz. Clifford, Arlington, Buckingham, Ashley, Lauderdale; but the word was in use earlier, and this was a mere coincidence. Der. cabol, verb: cabal-ist, a mystic, cabal-ist-ic.

CABBAGE (1), a vegetable with a large head. (F. — L.) In Shak. Merry Wives, i. 1. 124. Spelt cabbages in Ben Jonson, The Fox, ii. 1; cabbages in Holland's Pliny, bk. xix. c. 4. ME. cabage, caboche; Two Cookery-Books, ed. Austin, pp. 6, 69. — F. (Picard) caboche, lit. 'great head'; cf. Picard cabuf, F. 'chaus cabus, a cabbage; Cot. He also gives Cabusher, to cabbage; to grow to a head.' Formed with an augmentative suffix, from L. caput, a head; cf. Ital. capocchia, head of a nail, capoccia, a large head; also capuccio, a little head. See Capital (1).

CABBAGE (2), to steal. (F. — Prov. — Late L. — L.) In Johnson's Dict. — F. cabasser, to put into a basket; see Cot. — F. cabas, a basket. So also Norman F. cabasser, to steal, from cabas, deceit; and see Supp. to Godefroy. — Prov. cabas. — Late L. cabātium, a basket (Ducange; an. 1243). — L. type capāciens*, for L. capāciens, containing; see Capacious. So Hatzfeld.

CABIN, a little room, a hut. (F. — Prov. — Late L.) ME. caban, cabane. 'Caban, lyltyle howse'; Prompt. Parv. p. 57. 'Creptest into a caban'; P. Plozman, A. iii. 184. — F. cabane. — Prov. cabana. — Late L. capanna, a hut (Isidore). ¶ The W. caban is from MF. cabane. Der. cabin-er, from the French.

CABLE, a strong rope. (F. — L.) In early use. ME. cable, cabel, kabel; pl. kablen, Layamon, i. 57; where the later text has cables. — OF. cable (F. cable), given in Cotgrave; but it must have been in early use, having found its way into Swedish, Danish, &c. — Late L. capulum, a cable, in Isidore of Seville; also spelt capulum. Lit. a strong (holding) rope; a halter (for cattle). — L. capere, to take hold of; cf. L. capulus, a handle, haft, hilt of a sword. See Capable.

CABOOSE, the cook's cabin on board ship. (Dutch.) First given by Falconer, in 1769. Sometimes spelt camboose, which is from the F. form cambose. Like many sea-terms, it is Dutch. — MDu. kabys, 'the cooking, or kitchen-room in a ship'; Hexham (1658); Du. kombuis, a cook's room, caboose; or 'the chimney in a ship'; Sewel. Hence also Dan. køys, Swed. kabyssa, a caboose. Of unknown origin: perhaps short for kaban-huys*, 'cabin-house'; from MDu. kaban, a cabin, and huys, a house. This would also give cambose.

CABRIOLETT, a one-horse carriage, better known by the abbreviation cab. (F.—L.) Mere French.—F. cabriolet, a cab; dimin. of cabrio, a caper, a leap of a goat; named from the supposed lightness of the carriage. The older spelling of cabrio is caprio, used by Montaigne (Brachet).—Ital. capriola, a caper, the leap of a kid.—Ital. caprio, the wild-goat.—L. caprum, cap, of caper; a goat; cf. L. caprea, a kind of wild she-goat. See CAPER. ¶ 'Cabriolets were, in honour of his Majesty's birthday, introduced to the public (of London) this morning,' Gent. Maga. 1823, p. 463. George IV (th. Aug. 12) kept his birthday on St. George's day.

CACAO, the name of a tree. (Span.—Mexican.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674, we find: 'Chocolate, a kind of compound drink, which we have from the Indians; the principal ingredient is a fruit called cacao, which is about the bigness of a great black fig. See a Treatise of it, printed by Jo. Okes, 1640.' '[They] lade backe againe the cacao,' Hakluyt, Voy. iii. 457 (at bottom).—Span. cacao.—Mexican cacacatl, the name of the tree where chocolate is made. See Notes on F. Etym., p. 331. ¶ The cacao-tree, Theobroma cacao, is a totally different tree from the cocoa-nut tree, though the accidental similarity of the names has caused great confusion. See COCOA.

CACHALOT, a genus of whales, having teeth in the lower jaw. (F.) Spelt cacholot in 1747.—F. cachalot (the same). And in Cockeram (1623). Borrowed from Latin, with the F. suffix -tion.—L. cachinnationem, acc. of cachinnatio, loud laughter.—L. cachinnare, to laugh aloud; an imitative word. The Gk. form is κακῆσις. See CAKLE. ¶ Korting, § 2022, gives a different etymology, ultimately from L. catulus, a whelp.

CACHINATION, a loud laughter. (L.) In Bishop Gauden's Anti-Haall-Berith, 1661, p. 68 (Todd's Johnson). And in Cockeram (1623). Borrowed from Latin, with the F. suffix -tion.—L. cachinnationem, acc. of cachinnatio, loud laughter.—L. cachinnare, to laugh aloud; an imitative word. The Gk. form is κακῆσις. See CAKLE. CACHUCHA, a lively Spanish dance. (Span.) Span. cachucha; whence F. cachucha in Hatzfeld.

CACIQUE, CAZIQUE, a W. Indian prince or chief. (Span.—W. Indian.) A name given to a chief of some W. Indian tribes. In Minshew, ed. 1627. First in R. Eden, Books on America, ed. Arber, p. 223 (1555).—Span. cacique, 'an Indian prince'; Minshew, Span. Dict. (1623). From the old language of Ilayti; see Notes on F. Etym., p. 346.

CACK, to go to stool. (L.) ME. cakken. 'Cakken, or syystyn, cack;' Prompt. Parv. p. 58. Found also in Dutch and Danish, but all are borrowed from the Latin.—L. cœnare, cf. Gk. κακῆσις; which is from the sh. κακῆσις, dung. Cf. W. cack, OIrish cack, Skt. çakam, dung.

CACKLE, to make a noise like a goose. (E.) In early use. 'The hen . . . ne con buten kakelen,' the hen can only cackle; Ancien Riwle, p. 66. A frequentative of a primitive cakken; 'the goose may cakke' (pr. calke); Polit. Poems, ed. Furnivall, p. 16. See Notes on F. Etym. (p. 16). kakelen, to chatter, gabble; Swed. kackla, to cackle, gabble; Dan. kagle; G. gackeln, gabeln, gackern, to cackle, gabble, chatter. β. The termination -le has a frequentative force. The stem cak (i.e. hak) is imitative, like quack; cf. gag- in prov. F. gaggle, to cackle, and gab- or gab- in gabble, to make a noise like a turkey, and gabble. Cf. AS. ceahhelan, to laugh loudly, Beala, v. 12; G. kichern, to giggle. From the Teutonic base KAK, to laugh, cackle; Fick, iii. 39. ¶ Observe the three varieties of this imitative root, viz. (1) KAK, as in cackle; (2) KIK, as in the nasalised chink in chink-cough, i.e. kink-cough or chink-cough; and (3) KUK, as in cough and chuckle. All refer to convulsive movements of the throat.

CADDY, a small box for holding tea. (Malay.) 'The key of the caddy;' Letter from Cowper to Lady Hesketh, Jan. 19, 1793. The sense has somewhat changed, and the spelling also. It properly means 'a packet of tea of a certain weight,' and the better spelling is catty. 'An original package of tea, less than a half-chest, is called in the trade a "box," "caddy," or "catty." This latter is a Malay word; "kūti," a catty or weight, equal to 1½ lb. avoirdupois.' In many dictionaries, catty is described as the Chinese pound; R. W. W., in Notes and Queries, 3 S. x. 323. At the same reference I myself gave the following information. 'The following curious passage in a lately-published work is worth notice. "The standard currency of Borneo is brass guns. This is not a figure of speech, nor do I mean small pistols, or blunderbusses, but real cannon, five to ten feet long, and heavy in proportion. The metal is estimated at so much a picul, and articles are bought and sold, and change given, by means of this awkward coinage. The picul contains 100 catties, each of which weighs about 1½ English pounds. There is one advantage about this currency; it is not easily stolen."—F. Royle, Adventures among the Dyaks, p. 100. To the word catties the author subjoins a footnote as follows: "Tea purchased in small quantities is frequently enclosed in boxes containing one catty. I offer a diffident suggestion (that this may possibly be the derivation of our familiar tea-caddy." I may add that the use of this weight is not confined to Borneo; it is used also in China, and is (as I am informed) the only weight in use in Japan.'—Malay kūti, a catty, or weight of which one hundred make a picul of 133½ pounds avoirdupois, and therefore equal to 2½ oz. or 1½ pound; it contains 16 tail; Marsden's Malay Dict. p. 253. See CATTY.

CADE, a barrel or cask. (L.—Gk.—Heb.) 'A cade of herrings; 2 Hen. VI. iv. 2. 36. 'Cade of herynge, or othyr lyke, cado, laicista;' Prompt. The Gascon form is capdet (Hatzfeld), corresponding to Prov. capdel, formed from Late L. capitellum, 'a little head.' The eldest son was called caput, the 'head' of the family; the second, the capitellum, or 'lesser head.'—L. caput, the head. See CAPITAL. Der. cad, q. v.; cadet-ship.

CADGER, an itinerant dealer, a hawk. (F.?) Henryson has cadgear, Moral Fables, p. 66 (N.E.D.). From ME. caggen, to bind, to fasten, to carry a pack, to hawk; see Stratmann, N. E. D., and E. D. D. Prob. from ME. cachen, to seize, fasten; see CATCH.

The third letter is ج, which Devic transliterates by q. β. Hence was formed (by prefixing the Arab. article al, and inserting h) the Span. alcade, a judge, which appears occasionally in E. literature; it is spelt alcade in An Eng. Garner, vi. 14 (ab. 1586). The inserted h, says Devic, arose from an emphatic pronunciation of the Arabic ج.

Particularly used of a pile of stones raised on the top of a hill, or set up as a landmark; applied by us to a pile raised by artificial means. It seems to have come to us from the Gaelic in particular. B. The form cairn (a rock) is common to Gaelic, Irish, Welsh, Manx, Cornish, and Breton; the sense is, in general, 'a pile of stones,' and it was chiefly used of a pile of stones raised over a grave. Cf. Gk. κάρνας, rocky. Der. cairn-gorm, a yellow gem; from cairn-gorm (blue cairn), in the Scot. Highlands. See CRAG.

CALENDER (1), a machine for pressing and smoothing cloth. (F. -Late L. -Gk.) Best known from the occurrence of the word in Cowper's John Gilpin, where it is applied to a 'calender-er,' or person who calenders cloth, and where a more correct form would be calenderer. In Bailey's Dict., ed. 1731, vol. ii, I find: 'To calender, to press, smooth, and set a gloss upon linen, &c.; also the engine itself.' β. The word is French. The verb appears in Cotgrave, who has: 'Calenderer, to sleek, smooth, plane, or polish linen cloth, &c.' The F. sb. (from which the verb was formed) is calendrier; of which Godefroy's Suppl. gives an example in 1483. = Late L. calendria, explained in Ducange by: 'instrumentum quo poliantur panni; [French] calendrier.' γ. This Late L. calendria is, probably, a corruption of L. cylindrus, a cylinder, roller; the name being given to the machine because a roller was contained in it, and (probably later) sometimes two rollers in contact. = Gk. κύλινδρος, a cylinder. See CYLINDER. Der. calender, verb; calender-er, or calend-er, sb.

CALIBER, CALIBRE, the size of the bore of a gun. (F.—Ital.—Arab.) The form calibre is closer to the French, and more usual. Caliber occurs in Reid's Inquiry, c. 6. s. 19 (R.). Neither form appears to be old; calibre occurs in 1567 and 1588 (N.E.D.). We also find the spellings caliver and caliper in Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715.—F. calibre, occurring in 1478, is said to have been introduced from Ital. calibro; Hatzfeld. Cotgrave has: 'Calibre, a quality, state, or degree'; also: 'Qualibre, the bore of a gun, or size of the bore, &c. Il n'est pas de mon qualibre, he is not of my quality, rank, or humour, he is not a fit companion for me.'—Ital. calibro, calibro, 'an instrument that gunners use, to measure the height of any piece or bullet; also, the height or bore of any piece.' Florio (ed. 1611). β. Of uncertain origin. Mahu suggests L. quilibet, of what weight, applied to the bore of a gun as determined by the weight (and consequent size) of the bullet. See Libra. γ. Diez suggests a more likely origin, viz. Arab. kālib, a form, mould, model; cf. Pers. kālab, a mould from which anything is made; Rich. Dict. pp. 1110, 1111. So Devic. Der. calipers, q. v.; also caliver, q. v.

CALIVER, a sort of musket. (F.—Ital.—Arab.) In Shak. i Hen. IV, iv. 2. 21. The name was given from some peculiarity in the size of the bore. It is a mere corruption of caliber, q. v. CALK, CAULK, to stop up the seams of a ship. (F.—L.) The sb. calkers occurs in the A.V. Ezek. xxvii. 9; the marg. note has: 'strengtheners, or stoppers of chinks.' The ME. calke signifies 'to tread'; P. Plowman, C. xv. 162; xiv. 171. The spelling with l was probably adopted to assimilate the word more closely to the orig. Lat.—OF. cauquer, to tread; also, to tent a wound, i. e. to insert a roll of lint in it, to prevent its healing too quickly; Cotgrave.—L. calcāre, to tread, trample, press grapes, tread down, tread in, press close. (The notion in calc is that of forcing in by great pressure.)—L. calc (stem calc-), the heel.

CALKIN, the turned down end of a horse-shoe. (F.—L.) The pl. calkins occurs in The Two Noble Kinsmen, v. 4. 55. 'Caukons of horse-shone'; Reliq. Antiqua, i. 83.—OF. calcaïn, the heel; Godefroy.—L. calcāneum, the heel.—L. calc-, for calc, heel; with suffix -anum.

CALL, to cry aloud. (Scand.) ME. callen, Havelok, 2899. AS. ceallian, to call, Grein, i. 158; Omerc. callian, as in hilde-calla, a herald, lit. a 'war-caller'; Grein, ii. 73. Borrowed from Icel. and Swed. kalla, to call. Cf. Dan. kalde, to call; Du. kallen, to talk, chatter; OIG. ceallian, MII.G. kallen. Teut. type hallon* or hallōjan*, weak verb; cf. W. gallu, to call, Russ. golos, voice, sound. See Brugm. i. § 639; Benfey, p. 270; Fick, i. 72. Der. call-er; call-ing, an occupation, that to which one is called.

CALLEE, CALLAT, a worthless woman. (F.—Low L.—Low G.) In Oth. iv. 2. 121. Origin doubtful; but it fairly answers to F. callette, a gossip, chatterer; 'personne qui a du babil et point de consistance'; Suppl. to Godefroy. Lit. 'little quail'; dimin. of caille, a quail, also a woman. Littre gives caille coiffée, femme gaillarde. See Quail.

CALLIPERS, see Calipers.

CALLISTHENICS, see Calisthenics.

CALLOUS, hard, indurated. (F.—L.) Callous occurs in Holland's Pliny, bk. xvi. c. 31; and callosity in the same, bk. xvi. c. 7.—F. callous, 'hard, or thick-skinned, by much labouring'; Cot.—L. callōsus, hard or thick-skinned, callous.—L. callus, callum, hard skin; callēre, to have a hard skin. Der. callous-ty (from L. acc. callōsitatem, hardness of skin); also callous-ly, callousness.

AS. calu, bald; Grein, i. 155.—Du. kal, bald, bare, naked, leafless; Swed. kal, bald, bare; Gk. kahl; cf. MDu. kaluwe. Teut. type kaluwoz*; an early borrowing from L. calvus, bald. Brugmann, i. § 529 (3).

CALM, tranquil, quiet; as sb., repose. (F.—Late I.—Gk.) ME. calm, Gower, C. A. iii. 230; b. vii. 4113.—F. calme, 'calm, still'; Cot. He does not give it as a substantive, but in mod. F. it is both adj. and sb., and the sb. calme is found as early as 1529 (Hatzfeld), as if borrowed from Ital. calma. β. The l is no real part of the word, though appearing in Ital., Span., and Portuguese; it seems to have been inserted, as Diez suggests, through the influence of the L. calor, heat, the notions of 'heat' and 'rest' being easily brought together. γ. The mod. Provencal chaume signifies 'the time when the flocks rest'; cf. F. chômer, formerly chaumer, to rest, to be without work; see chômer in Hatzfeld. δ. Derived from Late L. cauma, the heat of the sun (Job, xxx. 30; Vulgate); on which Maigne D'Arnis remarks, in his epitome of DuCange, that it answers to the Laugnedoc caumas or calinas, excessive heat.—Gk. καῖμα, great heat.—Gk. καίω, to burn. See Körtig, § 2032. Der. calm-ly, calmness.

CALOMEL, a preparation of mercury. (Gk.) Explained in Chambers's Dict. as 'the white sublimate of mercury, got by the application of heat to a mixture of mercury and corrosive sublimate, which is black.' The sense is 'a fair product from a black substance'; and the word is coined from καλός, for Gk. καλός, fair, and μέλας, black, for which see Melanchole. ¶ The etymology seems certain; but the reasons for it are unsatisfactory. See Littre and Hatzfeld.

CALORIC, the supposed principle of heat. (F.—L.) A modern word, but now obsolete; formed from the L. calor, heat, by the addition of the suffix -ic. The F. form is calorique (an. 1792), and we borrowed it from them in that form; but it comes to the same thing. See Caldron.

CALORIFIC, having the power to heat. (L.) Boyle speaks of 'calorific agents'; Works, vol. ii. p. 594.—L. calōrificus, making hot, heating.—L. calōri-, for calor, heat; and -ificus, a suffix due to the verb facere, to make. Der. calorific-ation.

CALOYER, a Greek monk. (F.—Ital.—Gk.) 'How name ye yon lone caloyer?' Byron, The Giaour, l. 786.—F. caloyer (Hatzfeld).—Ital. caloiero (N.E.D.).—Mod. Gk. καλόγος, venerable.—Gk. καλός, for καλός, fair; and -γος, aged, allied to γῆρας, old age.

CALTHROP, CALTRAP, a star-thistle, a ball with spikes for annoying cavalry. (L. and Teut.) Calthrop is gen. used to denote a ball stuck with four spikes, so arranged that one of them points upwards while the other three rest on the ground. 'Caltrappe, chausse-trappe'; Palsgrave. 'Tribulus marinus, calkatrappe, sea-bistel'; Reliq. Antiq. i. 37. ME. kalketrappe, P. Plowman, C. xxi. 296. AS. calcatrapp, star-thistle, A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 316; cf. calcatrapp, Voc. 298. 30. The most likely solution of this difficult word is to derive it from L. calci-, decl. stem of calc, the heel, and a Latinised form of the Teutonic word trap. Florio gives Mital. calcatrappa, star-thistle, where calca- is plainly supposed to be allied to calcāre, to tread, the form of the Ital. word being slightly altered in order to suggest this sense. See further under Calk and Trap. Hatzfeld derives F. chausse- (in F. chausse-trappe) from L. calcāre, to shoe, from calceus, a shoe; but this also goes back to L. calc. It either meant 'heel-trap' or 'trap whereon one treads.' See my note to P. Plowman, C. xxi. 296; also Catholicon Anglicum, p. 52, note 3.

CALUMET, a kind of pipe for tobacco. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'Smoked the calumet, the Peace-pipe.' Longfellow, Song of Hiawatha, c. 1.—Norman F. calumet, the stem of a herb, a pipe (Littre); a dimin. form, allied to OF. chalemel, F. chalumeau, 'the stem of an herb, also a wheaten or oaten straw, or a pipe made thereof.' Cot. These words, like E. shawm, are from L. calamus; see SHAWM.

CALUMNY, slander, false accusation. (F.—L.) Shak. has calumny, Meas. ii. 4. 159; also calumniator, Troil. iii. 3. 174; and calumnious, All's Well, i. 3. 61.—F. calomnie, 'a calumnie'; Cot.—L. calumnia, false accusation.—L. calvi, calvere, to deceive. Der. calumni-ous, calumni-ous-ly; also calumniator (from L. calumniator, pp. of calumniator, to slander); whence calumniat-ur, calumniat-ion. Doublet, challenge, q. v.

CALVE, to produce a calf. (E.) ME. calven (for v); 'the cow calved'; Wyclif, Job, xxi. 10. AS. cealfian, Ælfric, Hom. ii. 300.—AS. cealf, a calf. See CALF. The verb appears in the Du. kalven, Dan. kalve, Swed. kalva, G. kalben, to calve; all derivatives from the sb. And see Cave in.

CALX, the substance left after a metal has been subjected to great heat. (L.) In Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. A word used in the old treatises on alchemy; now nearly superseded by the term oxide. Cf. 'With the calx of egg-shells;' Ben Jonson, Alchemist, A. ii. (Face). Merely borrowed from Latin.—L. calx, stone, limestone, lime (stem calc-). Cf. Gk. χάλις, rubble. Der. calc-ine, q. v.; calc-areous, q. v.; calc-ium; calc-ulus; calc-ulate, q. v.

CALYX, the outer envelope in which the flower is enclosed while yet in the bud. (L.—Gk.) A botanical term. 'Calyx, the cup of the flower in any plant;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715; showing that he confused it (as usual) with L. calix, a cup; for which see CHalice.—L. calyx, a case or covering, bud, calyx of a flower.—Gk. καλύξ, a case, covering, calyx of a flower.—Skt. kalikā, a bud.—✓ KĒL, to cover, hide, conceal (L. cel-are); from which come, in English, the words helm (2), q. v., hell, hole, and helmet.

CAM, a projecting part of a wheel, cog. (Du.) A technical term: fully explained in Webster's Dict. and in N.E.D.—Du. kam, a comb, also a cog; see Calisch and Kilian. Cf. Low G. kamm, Dan. kam, a comb, ridge; hence a ridge on a wheel; Dan. kunhjul, a cog-wheel; G. kamm, a comb, a cog of a wheel. See Comb.

CAMBRIC, a kind of fine white linen. (Flanders.) In Shak. Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 208. Cotgrave gives: 'Cambray, ou Toile de Cambray, cambricke.' From Kamerijk (F. Cambry), a town in Flanders, where it was first made. Sewal has: 'Kameriks-doek, chambric, lawn.'

CAMEL, the name of a quadruped. (F.—L.—Gk.—Heb.) Spelt camelle in Chaucer, C. T. 9072 (F. 1196). The pl. camels is in King Alisaunder, 854. The ME. forms are camel, cameil, camel, chamel, chamak, &c. [The form camel, in the Old Northumbrian glosses of S. Mark, i. 6, is directly from L. camelus.]—(OF. chamel, ONorth. F. camel.—L. camelus.—Gk. κάμηλος.—Heb. gāmāl.—Arab. jamaḥ; Palmer's Pers. Dict., col. 173. Der. camelo-par, q. v.

CAMELLIA, a genus of plants. (Personal name.) The Camellia japonica is sometimes called the 'Japan rose.' The name was given by Linnaeus (died 1778), in honour of George Joseph Kamel (or Camellus), a Moravian Jesuit, who travelled in Asia and wrote a history of plants of the island of Luzon; Encycl. Brit. 9th ed.

CAMELOPARD, the giraffe. (L.—Heb. and Gk.) Spelt camelopardalis and camelopardus in Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715, and in Bailey, vol. ii. ed. 1731. Shortened to resemble F. camelopard, the giraffe.—L. camelopardalis.—Gk. καμηλοπάρδαλις, a giraffe.—Gk. κάμηλος, for κάμηλος, a camel; πάρδαλις, a pard. See Camel and Pard.

CAMEO, a precious stone, carved in relief. (Ital.) The word occurs as camio in Darwin's Botanical Garden, canto ii. 310. [The F. spelling cameus is sometimes found in Eng. books, and occurs in Bailey's Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1731. The extraordinary form koadmau occurs in Matthew Paris, vi. 387 (Rec. Ser.).—Ital. cameo, a cameo; Late L. cameus, a cameo; also spelt cameutus; cf. F. cameus. β. Etym. unknown; see the discussion of it in Diez, s. v. cameo; and in Mahn, Etymologische Untersuchungen, Berlin, 1863, p. 73. Mahn suggests that cameus is an adj. from camma, a Late L. version of a G. camme, a form due to G. pronunciation of OF. game, a gem (Lat. gemma), for which Roquefort gives a quotation. In the same way cameutus might be due to a German form of the same F. game and to F. kante, high. But the Span. is camefeo. See Körting, § 2359; Schade, OHG. Diet. p. 1341.

CAMERA, a box, chamber, &c. (L.—Gk.) Chiefly used as an abbreviation of L. camera obscura, i. e. dark chamber, the name of what was once an optical toy, but now of great service in photography. See Chamber, of which it is the orig. form. Der. camerated, from a L. form cameratus, formed into chambers; a term in architecture.

CAMLET, a sort of cloth. (F.—Arab.) Camlet is short for camelot, which occurs in Sir T. Browne's Vulg. Errors, bk. v. c. 15. § 3.—F.

camelot, which Cotgrave explains by 'chamlet, also Lisle program.' It seems to have been popularly understood as being made of camel's hair. Cf. 'For camelot, the doubtful sea of hare' [hair]; King James I, King's Quair, st. 157. But it doubtless represents the Arab. khamlat, khamlat, explained as 'camelot, silk and camel's hair'; also, all silk or velvet; Rich. Dict. p. 648. Cf. khaml, 'the skirts or laps of a garment, a carpet with a long pile, a cushion on a saddle;' ibid. It thus appears that camel's hair was sometimes used for making it, so that confusion was easy. See Marco Polo, ed. Yule, i. 248.

CAMOMILE; see Chamomile.

CAMP, the ground occupied by an army; the army itself. (F.—L.) Common in Shakespeare. Also used as a verb; All's Well, iii. 4. 14; and in the Bible of 1561, Exod. xix. 2. The proper sense is 'the field' which is occupied by the army; as in 'the gate of the camp was open;' North's Plutarch, Life of M. Brutus; see Shakespeare's Plutarch, ed. Skeat, p. 147; cf. Antony and Cleopatra, iv. 8. 33. [Perhaps taken directly from Latin.]—F. camp, 'a camp; an host, or army lodged; a field;' Cot.—L. campus, a field. See Brugm. i. § 563. Der. camp, verb, en-camp-ment, camp-estr-al, q. v., camp-aigu, q. v. ¶ It is remarkable that camp in Middle English never has the modern sense, but is only used in the sense of 'fight' or 'battle.' Cf. 'alle the kene mene [men] of kampes,' i. e. all the keen fighting-men; Allit. Morte Arthure, 3702; cf. L. 3671. And see Layamon, i. 180, 185, 336; ii. 162. This is the AS. camp, a battle; camp-sted, a battle-ground. Allied words are the Du., Dan. and Swed. kamp, Icel. kapp, G. kampf, all signifying 'battle.' Teut. type kampoz*. Notwithstanding the wide spread of the word in this sense, it is certainly non-Teutonic, and borrowed from L. campus, in Late L. 'a battle.' See also Champion and Campaign.

CAMPAGNOL, the short-tailed field-mouse. (F.—L.) Modern; from F. campagne, country; see below. And see Vole.

CAMPAIGN, a large field; the period during which an army keeps the field. (F.—Ital.—L.) The word occurs in Burnet, Hist. of his Own Time, an. 1666. And see Campaign in Blount's Gloss. —MF. campagne, an open field given in Cotgrave as a variation of campagne, which he explains by 'a plaine field, large plain.'—Ital. campagna, a field, a campaign.—L. campānia, a plain, preserved in the name Campania, formerly given to the level country near Naples.—L. campus, a field. See Camp. Der. camp-aigu, q. v. ¶ Shak. uses champaign (old edd. champion), K. Lear, i. i. 65, for 'a large tract of land.' This is from the OF. champaigne, the standard form; the form campagne having been borrowed (as above).

CAMPANIFORM, bell-shaped. (Late L.) 'Campaniformis, a term apply'd by herbalists, to any flower that is shap'd like a bell;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. From Late L. campāna, a bell; and L. forma, form. Der. From the same Late L. campāna are Ital. campanile, a bell-tower; also campan-ul-a, campan-ul-ate, campan-o-logy.

CAMPESTRAL, growing in fields. (L.) Modern, and rare. The form campestrian is in Bailey's Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1731. Formed from L. campestris, growing in a field, or belonging to a field, by adding the suffix -al.—L. campus, a field. See Camp.

CAMPHOR, a whitish crystalline substance, mostly obtained from some kinds of laurel. (F.—Late L.—Arab.—Malay.) Spelt camphire in the Song of Solomon, i. 14 (A. V.); and camfor in 1392-3 in the Earl of Derby's Expeditions, ed. Lucy T. Smith, p. 164. Massinger speaks of camphire-balls; The Guardian, iii. 1.—F. camphre, 'the gumme tearmed camphire;' Cot. [The i seems to have been inserted to make the word easier to pronounce in English.]—Late L. camphora, camphor; to the form of which the mod. E. camphor has been assimilated. β. A word of Eastern origin. Cf. Skt. karpūra-m, camphor (Benfey, p. 164); Arabic kāfir, camphor, Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 480. γ. All from Malay kūpur, lit. chalk; the full form being Baris kūpur, i. e. chalk of Barous, a place on the W. coast of Sumatra; see J. Pijnappel's Malay-Dutch Dict. p. 74. 'Kūpur būrus, the camphor of Sumatra and Java, called also native camphor, as distinguished from that of Japan or kūpur tohōri, which undergoes a process before it is brought to our shops; Marsden, Malay Dict. p. 249; where we also find kūpur, lime.

CAMPION, a flower of the genus Lychnis. (F.—L.) First in 1576. Lyte describes the rose campion, and the white campion; tr. of Dodoeus, bk. ii. ch. 9 and ch. 10. Origin uncertain; but prob. a variant of North F. campagne, just as champion is of champaign. Tusser has 'the champion or open cuntry' in the title to his book on Husbandry (1580). Thus campion = field flower.—L. camp-us, a plain.

CAN (1), I am able. (E.) α. The AS. cunnan, to know, to know how to do, to be able, forms its present tense thus: ic can (or cann), þu canst (or const), he can (or cann); plural, for all persons, cunnon. The Meso-Goth. kunnan, to know, forms its present tense thus: ik kann, thū kann, is kann; pl. weis kunnum, jis kunnum, is kunnum. β. The verb is one of those which (like the Gk. οἶδα, I know) use as a present tense what is really an old preterite form, from which again a second weak preterite is formed. The same peculiarity is common to all the cognate Teutonic verbs, viz. Du. kunnen, to be able; Icel. kunna, to know, to be able; Swed. kunna, to know, to be able; Dan. kunne, to know, to be able; OIIG. chunnan, MIIG. kunnen, G. können, to be able. Y. The past tense is could. Here the i is inserted in modern English by analogy with would and should, in which the i is radical. The ME. form is coud; a disyllable; the AS. form is cūðe. The lengthened u occasioned loss of n; cūðe stands for cūðne* (pronounced koonthe, with oo as in foot, and th as in breathe). The loss of the n has obscured the relation to can. The n reappears in Gothic, where the past tense is kuntha; cf. Du. koude, I could; Icel. kunna (for kunda, by assimilation); Swed. and Dan. kunde; OIIG. konda, G. könnte. Whence it appears that the English alone has lost the n. Y. The past participle is Couth. This is only preserved, in mod. Eng., in the form uncouth, of which the original sense was 'unknown'. The AS. form is cūð, for cūðe*, the n being preserved in the Goth. kuntha, known. See Uncouth. Allied to ken (Icel. kenna and know (AS. cnāwan). The Idg. form of the root is GEN; Brugmann, i. § 600. See Know and Ken.

CAN (2), a drinking-vessel. (F.) ME. canne. 'There weren set sixe stonun cannes;' Wyclif, John, ii. 6. AS. canne, as a gloss to L. crater; Aelf. Gloss. ed. Sommer, p. 60; Voc. 122. 32. †Du. kan, a pot, mug; Icel. kanna, a can, tankard, mug; also, a measure; Swed. kanna, a tankard, a measure of about 3 quarts; Dan. kande; OIIG. channa, MIIG. and G. kanne, a can, tankard, mug, jug, pot. ¶ It thus appears to be a true Teutonic word; Teut. type kannōn*, f. Some think that it was borrowed from L. canna, Gk. κάννη, a reed; but the sense is hardly close enough; whilst canharis differs in form. Der. canikin, dimin.; spelt canylyn, Barlet, Ship of Fools, ii. 261; canakin, Oth. ii. 3. 71.

CANAL, a conduit for water. (F.—L.) 'The walls, the woods, and long canals reply;' Pope, Rape of the Lock, iii. 100. And in Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 530, 138.—F. canal, 'a channel, kennel, furrow, gutter;' Cot.—L. canalis, a channel, trench, canal, conduit; also, a spilit, reed-pipe. ¶ Perhaps the accent on the latter syllable in E. was partly due to a familiarity with Du. kanal, itself borrowed from French. See also Channel, Kennel.

CANARY, a bird; a wine; a dance. (Span.—L.) The dance is mentioned in Shak. All's W. II. ii. 1. 77; so is the wine, Merry Wives, iii. 2. 89. Gascoigne speaks of 'Canara birds,' Complaint of Philomene, l. 33. All are named from the Canaries or Canary Islands. These take their name from Canaria, which is the largest island of the group. 'Grand Canaria is almost as broad as long, the diameter being about fifty miles;' Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 3.—Span. (Gran) Canaria, = L. Canaria (insula), also abounding in large dogs (Pliny, vi. 32).—L. canaria, fem. of canarius, pertaining to dogs.—f. can-s, a dog; see Canine.

CANCELL, to obliterate. (F.—L.) Originally, to obliterate a deed by drawing lines over it in the form of lattice-work (L. cancelli); afterwards, to obliterate in any way. Spelt cancell in the Mirror for Magistrates, p. 632 (R.).—F. canceller, 'to cancell, cross, raze;' Cot.—Law l. cancellare, to draw lines across a deed.—L. cancellus, a grating; gen. in pl. cancelli, railings, lattice-work; dimin. of cancer, pl. cancri, in the sense of 'lattice-work.' Der. cancell-at-ed, marked with cross-lines, from L. pp. cancellatus; from the same source, chancel, chancery, chancellor, which see.

CANCER, a crab, a corroding tumour. (L.) The tumour was named from the notion that the swollen veins round it were like a crab's limbs (Galen). Cancer occurs as the name of a zodiacal sign in Chaucer, Merchant's Tale, l. 643.—L. cancer, a crab; gen. cancra. †Gk. καρκίνος, a crab; Skt. karkata, a crab; also the sign Cancer of the zodiac. †So named from its hard shell; cf. Skt. karkara-s, hard. Brugmann, i. § 464. Der. cancer-ous, cancro-form, cancer-ate, cancer-at-ion; and see Canker.

CANDID, lit. white; fair; sincere. (F.—L.) Dryden uses candid to mean 'white;' tr. of Ovid, Metam. xv. l. 60. Camden has candidly; Elizabeth, an. 1598 (R.). Shak. has candidatus for candidate; Titus Andronic. i. 185. Ben Jonson has candor, Epigram 123.—F. candide, 'white, fair, bright, orient, &c.; also, upright, sincere, innocent;' Cot.—L. candidus, lit. shining, bright.—L. candere, to shine, be bright.—*L. candere, to set on fire; only in co-cendere, in-cendere. †Skt. chand, to shine.—Q (QENI), to shine. Brugm. i. § 546, 818 (2). Der. candidate, q. v.; candour, lit. brightness, from F. candeur, which from L. candorem, acc. case of candor, brightness; also candid-ly, candid-ness. From L. candere we also have candle, incense, incendary, which see.

CANDIDATE, one who offers himself to be elected to an office. (L.) Shak. has: 'Be candidatus then and put it on;' Titus, i. 185; where the allusion is to the white robe worn by a candidate for office among the Romans.—L. candidatus, white-robed; a candidate for an office.—L. candidus, white. See Candid.

CANDLE, a kind of artificial light. (L.) In very early use. AS. candel, a candle, Grein, i. 155.—L. candela, a candle, taper.—L. candere, to glow.—*L. candere, to set on fire; see further under Candid. Der. Candle-mas (Feb. 2), A. S. Chron. an. 1014, with which cf. Christ-mas, q. v.; candle-stick (Trevisa, l. 223), AS. candel-stecca, Birch, Cart. Saxon, iii. 366; candelabrum, a L. word, from L. candela; also chandel-ier, q. v.; chand-er, q. v.; candel-coal, q. v.

CANDOUR; see under Candid.

CANDY, crystallised sugar; as a verb, to sugar, to crystallise. (F.—Ital.—Arab.—Skt.) In old authors, it is usually a verb. Shak. has both sb. and verb, i Hen. IV. i. 3. 251; Hamlet, iii. 2. 65; Temp. ii. 1. 279. The comp. sugar-candy is the oldest form; see Liber Cure Cocorum, p. 7.—F. sucrer candi, sugar-candy; whence se candir, 'to candie, or grow candie, as sugar after boiling;' Cotgrave. [Here Cotgrave should rather have written candied; there is no connexion with L. candidus, white, as he easily might have imagined.]—Ital. candire, to candie; candi, candy; zucchero candi, sugar-candy.—Arab. and Persian qand, sugar, sugar-candy; Richardson's Arab. Dict. p. 1149; Arab. qandul, sugar-candy, id.; qandi, sugared, made of sugar; id. p. 1150.—Skt. khayḍava, a piece, part, also, powdered sugar (Macdonell); cf. khayḍava-s, a kind of sweetmeat.

CANDYTUFF, a plant, of the genus Theriac. (Hybrid.) First in Evelyn (1664). From Candy and tuff; where Candy refers to the island of Candia (or Crete), whence the plant came; and see Tuff.

CANE, a reed, a stick. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. canne, canne. 'Reedes, that ben cannes;' Maundeville, p. 189; see also pp. 109, 199. 'Cane, canna;' Wright's Vocab. i. 191.—F. canne, a cane.—L. canna, a cane, reed.—Gk. κάνη, κάννη, a cane, reed. †Perhaps cane is an Oriental word ultimately; cf. Heb. qaneh, a reed; Arab. qanāh, a cane; Richardson's Dict. p. 1148. If so, the L. and Gk. words are both borrowed ones. Der. cane, verb; can-y, Milton, P. L. iii. 439; candier, q. v.; also can-on, q. v.; can-on, q. v.

CANINE, pertaining to a dog. (L.) In the Spectator, no. 209; and in Cockeram (1623).—L. caninus, canine.—L. canis, a dog; cognate with K. hound. See Hound.

CANISTER, a case, or box, often of tin. (L.—Gk.) Originally, a basket made of reed or cane. Spelt canisters in Dryden's Virgil, bk. i. 981, to translate 'Coreremque canistris Expeditum;' Aen. i. 701.—L. canistrum, a basket made of twisted reed.—Gk. κάνιστρον, a wicker-basket; properly, a basket of reed.—Gk. κάνη, a racer form of κάνη, κάνη, a cane, reed. See Cane.

CANKER, something that corrodes. (F.—L.) 'Canker, sickness, cancer;' Prompt. Parv. p. 60; it occurs very early, in Ancien Riwe, p. 330, where it is spelt cancer, as in ONorth, F. cancere (F. chancre).—L. cancrum, acc. of cancer, a crab, a cancer. See Cancer. Der. canker-ous, canker-sores (A. V.).

CANNEL-COAL, a coal that burns brightly. (L.—and E.) First in 1538 (N. E. D.). Provincial Eng. cannel, a candle, and coal. 'Cannel, a candle; cannel-coal, or kennel-coal, so called because it burns without smoke like a candle;' F. K. Robinson, Whitby Glossary. And see E. D. D.

CANNIBAL, one who eats human flesh. (Span.—W. Indian.) A corrupt form; it should rather be caribal. 'The Caribes I learned to be man-eaters or cannibals, and great enemies to the islanders of Trinidad;' Hakluyt, Voyages, vol. iii. p. 576; a passage imitated in Robinson Crusoe, ed. J. W. Clark, 1866, p. 126. See Shak. Oth. i. 3. 143.—Span. cannibal, a cannibal, savage; a variant of Caribal, a Carib, a form used by Columbus; see Trench, Study of Words. † This word being ill understood, the spelling cannibal prevailed in Spanish, from the notion that the cannibals had appetites like a dog; cf. Span. canino, canine, voracious, greedy. As the word cannibal was unmeaning in English, a second n was introduced to make the first vowel short, either owing to stress, or from some notion that it ought to be shortened. † The word Cannibal occurs in the following quotation from Herrera's Description de las Indias Occidentales, vol. i. p. 11. col. 1, given to Tordillo's Johnson. 'Las Islas qui estan desde la Isla de San Juan de Porto rico al oriente de ella, para la costa de Tierra-Firme, se llamaron los Cannibales por los muchos Caribes, comedores de carne humana, que truvo en ellas, i segun se interpreta en su lengua Cannibal, quiere decir "hombre valiente," porque por tales eran tenidos de los otros Indios.' I. e. 'the islands lying next to the island of San Juan de Porto-rico [now called Porto Rico] to the East of it, and extending towards the coast of the continent [of South America] are called Cannibales because of the many Caribes, eaters of human flesh, that are found in them, and according to the interpretation of their language Cannibal is as much as to say "valiant man," because they were held to be such by the other Indians.' This hardly sufficiently recognises the fact that Cannibal and Carib (as well as Caliban) are mere variants of one and the same word; but we learn that the West Indian word Carib meant, in the language of the natives, 'a valiant man.' Other testimony is to the same effect; and it is well ascertained that cannibal is equivalent to Carib or Caribbean, and that the native sense of the word is 'a valiant man,' widely different from that which Europeans have given it. The familiar expression 'king of the cannibal islands' really means 'king of the Caribbean islands.' Der. cannibalism.

CANNON (1), a large gun. (F.—Ital.—L.—Gk.) Frequent in Shak.; K. John, ii. 210, &c. And in Hakluyt, Voyages, vol. iii. p. 217.—F. canon, 'a law, rule, decree, ordinance, canon of the law; ... also, the gunne termed a cannon; also, the barrell of any gunne, &c.; Cot.—Ital. canone, 'a canon or piece or ordinance, the barrell of any gun, ... a canon, a rule;' Florio. Thus canon is a doublet of canon, q. v. See French, Study of Words. β. The spelling with two n's may have been adopted to create a distinction between the two uses of the word, the present word taking the double n of Ital. canone. The sense 'gun-barrel' is older than that of 'gun,' and the Ital. canone is the augmentative of Ital. canna, a pipe, a cane.—L. canon; see Cano. Der. cannonade, cannonier.

CANNON (2), a particular stroke at billiards. (F.—Span.) A perversion of carrom or carrom, shortened form of carambole; see Hoyle's Games, Billiards, law 9 (1779).—F. carambole, the red ball at billiards; cf. F. carambolage, (1) to touch the red ball, (2) to touch two other balls with one's own.—Span. carambola, a manner of playing at billiards, a device, trick. Origin unknown.

CANOE, a boat made of a trunk of a tree, &c. (Span.—W. Indian.) Formerly canoa, as spell in Hakluyt's Voyages, iii. 646.—Span. canoa, an Indian boat. It is ascertained to be a native West Indian term for 'boat'; and properly, a word belonging to the old language of Hayti. See R. Eden, Books on America, ed. Arber, p. 66; Notes on E. Ety., p. 346. Spelt canoa by B. Breton, in his Dict. Carabé-François (1665).

CANON (1), a rule, ordinance. (L.—Gk.) ME. canon, canon, Chaucer, Treatise on the Astrolabe, ed. Skeat, prol. 68; C. T. Group C, 890. AS. canon; Bede, Eccl. Hist. (A. S. version), iv. 24; Bosworth.—L. canon, a rule.—Gk. κᾰνὼν, a straight rod, a rule, in the sense of 'carpenter's rule'; also, a rule or model, a standard of right.—Gk. κᾰνὼν, a rarer form of κᾰνὼν, a (straight) cane, reed. See Cane. Der. canon (2), one who lives according to a canon, q. v.; canonic, canonical, canonically, canonist, canon-ist, canon-ise (Gower, C. A. i. 254; b. ii. 2821), canon-is-at-ion, canon-ry. Doublet, canon (1), q. v.

CANON (2), a dignitary of the church. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. canon, Layamon, ii. 598, l. 24289; canoun, id. (later text), l. 24288.—ONorth. F. canone (Littre, s. v. chanoine); the pl. canonici occurs in the Chanson du Roland, 2056.—Late L. canonicus, acc. of canonicus, adj., one on the church-roll or list, and so in receipt of church-funds.—L. canon, the church-roll or list. See Hatch, Bampton Lectures, p. 202. See Canon (1). N.B. The Span. canon, a deep ravine, lit. a tube, is the same word as F. canon. See Canon (1).

CANOPY, a covering overhead. (F.—Ital.—L.—Gk.) Should be canopy; but the spelling canopé occurs in Italian, whence it found its way into French as canopée, a form cited by Dier, and thence into English; the proper OF. form is canopé. In Shak. Sonn. 125. In Bible of 1551, Judith, xiii. 9; retained in the A. V. Spelt canopé in Wyclif. Cf. MF. canopée, 'a canopy, a tent, or pavilion.' Cot.—L. κᾰνὼπιον, used in Judith, xiii. 10 (Vulgate).—Gk. κᾰνὼπιον, κᾰνὼπιον, an Egyptian bed with mosquito-curtains.—Gk. κᾰνὼπιον, stem of κᾰνὼπιον, a head, mosquito; lit. 'cone-faced,' or a creature with a cone-shaped head, from the shape of its head.—Gk. κᾰνὼπιον, a cone; and κᾰνὼπιον, face, appearance, from Gk. κᾰνὼπιον, to see.—Idg. κᾰνὼπιον, to see. See Cone and Optio. Der. canopy, verb.

CANT (1), to sing in a whining way; to talk hypocritically. (L.) Applied at first, probably, to the whining tone of beggars, with some allusion to chanting; used derivatively. Drinking, singing, clogging, canting; Ford, The Sun's Darling, Act i. sc. i. 'A rogue, A very canter I, sir, one that maunds Upon the pad.' Ben Jonson, Staple of News, Act ii.—L. cantare, to sing (whence Picard and Walloon cant, to sing; frequentative of cantare, to sing; from the same root as E. ken, q. v.—κᾰν, to sound. Brugmann, i. § 181. Der. cant, sb. cant-er. From the same source, can-orous, q. v.; cant-ile, q. v.; cant-o, q. v. ¶ 'What was it, prose or rhyme, metre or verse? I trowe it was cantum, for I herde you synge;' Caxton, Reynard the Fox, c. 27; ed. Arber, p. 63. In Harman's Cavalcade, p. 84, to cante, i. e. to speak, is given as a cant word. Cf. Walloon cant, to sing (Sigart); and see Cant in the E. D. D. Der. cant-er, cant-er; also cant-ate, Ital. cantata, a poetical composition set to music; from the fem. of the pp. of L. cantare, to sing.

CANT (2), an edge, corner, as verb, to tilt or incline. (Dutch.—L.—Gk.) The sb. is nearly obsolete; we find 'in a cant' = 'in a corner,' in Ben Jonson, Coronation Entertainment; Works, ed. Gifford, vi. 445 (Nares); see the description of Irene in the same, ed. 1860, p. 531. The verb means 'to turn upon an edge,' hence, to tilt, incline; said of a cask. The verb is derived from the sb. = Du. kant, a border, edge, side, brink, margin, corner. Dan. kant, a border, edge, margin; cf. Dan. kantre, to cant, upset, capsize; G. kante, a corner. All from Late L. cantus, a corner; which is prob. from L. cantus (pronounced as cantus) < Gk. κᾰνὼν, the corner of the eye, fellow of a wheel. Kortling, § 1851. Der. cant-see, q. v.; de-cant-er.

CANTEEN, a vessel for liquors used by soldiers. (F.—Ital.—L.—Gk.) First in 1744 (N. E. D.). The spelling is phonetic, imitating the F. i by the mod. L. ee.—F. cantine, a canteen; introduced from Ital. in the 17th century; Ital. cantina, a cellar, cave, grotto, cavern; cf. Ital. cantinella, a small cellar, ice-pail, cooler.—Ital. canto, a side, part, corner, angle; whence cantina as a diminutive; i. e. 'a little corner.'—Late L. cantus, a corner. See Cant (2).

CANTER, an easy gallop. (E. place-name.) An abbreviation for Canterbury gallop, a name given to an easy gallop: from the ambling pace at which pilgrims rode to Canterbury. In Saunderson's Fair Maid of Clifton (1633), he who personates the hobby-horse speaks of his smooth ambles and Canterbury paces: 'Todd's Johnson, 'Baileys Pegasus has all his paces. The Pegasus of Iope, like a Kentish post-horse, is always on the Canterbury.' Dennis in the Prelim. to the Dunciad (Nares). We also have 'Canterbury bells.' Der. cant-er, verb.

CANTICLE, a little song. (L.) 'And wrot an canticle, said of Moses; Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 4124.—L. canticum, a little song; dimin. of L. canticum, a song.—L. cantus, a song; cf. cantus, pp. of canere, to sing. See Cant (1).

CANTILEVER, a kind of bracket, projecting from a wall to support a balcony or the like. (F.) Pineda's Span. Dict., s. v. can, a dog, adds: 'in architecture, the end of timber or stone jutting out of a wall, on which in old buildings the beams used to rest, called cantilever.' Possibly from cantile, a corner, and lever. The support could be obtained by letting one end of a lever into a cantile (projection or nook) in a wall, and the other into a notch in a horizontal beam above. The MDu. kantel-hout, 'a roof-beam,' in Hexham (lit. cantile-wood) is parallel. See below.

CANTLE, a small piece. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Shak. 1 Hen. IV, iii. 1. 100. ME. cantel, Chaucer, C. T., 3010 (A 3008).—ONorth. cantel (mod. F. chantant), a piece, corner, bit; see Littre, s. v. chanteau. The same as Late L. cantellus, a piece; formed with dimin. suffix -ulus from Late L. cantus, a corner. See Cant (2).

CANTO, a division of a poem. (Ital.—L.) Shak. has cantons, Tw. Nt. i. 5. 289, which is a difficult form to account for. The more correct form cantion (directly from L. cantio, a ballad) occurs near the beginning of the Glosses to Spenser's Shep. Cal., October.—Ital. canto, a singing, chant, section of a poem.—L. acc. cantum, a song. See Canticle.

CANTON, a small division of a country. (F.—Ital.—L.—Gk.) Sir T. Browne uses cantons for 'corners.' Religio Medici, pt. i. s. 15. In Heraldry, a canton is a small division in the corner of a shield; so used in Ben Jonson, Staple of News, A. iv. (Piedmantle). And see Cotgrave.—F. canton, 'a corner or crossway, in a street; also, a canton, or hundred;' Cot. [Cf. Span. canton, a corner, part of an escutcheon, canton.]—Ital. cantone, a nook, angle; also, a corporation, township (Torriano).—Late L. cantunum, canto, a region, province. Origin doubtful; the heraldic canton, F. canton, Ital. cantone, is from Ital. canto, an edge. See Cant (2). Der. canton, verb; canton-al, canton-ment. Cf. s. cantonner, 'to sever themselves from the rest of their fellows.' Cotgrave.

CANVAS, a coarse hempen cloth. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. canvas; a trisyllable in Chaucer, C. T. 16407 (G 939).—ONorth. canavas.—Late L. canabicus, hempen cloth, canvas.—L. canabis, hemp.—Gk. κᾰναβις, hemp, cognate with F. hemp, q. v. ¶ It is supposed that the Greek word was borrowed from the East; Curtius, i. 173. Cf. Pers. kanab, hemp; Rich. Dict. p. 1208; Skt. ḡṇa-m, hemp. Der. canvas, verb; q. v.

CANVASS, to discuss, solicit votes. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Shak. 'to take to task.' 1 Hen. VI, i. 3. 36. Spelt canvas in Palsgrave. Merely derived from the sb. canvas, the orig. meaning being 'to sift through canvas.' Similarly, Cotgrave explains the MF. canabasser by 'to canvass, or curiously to examine, search or sift out the depth of a matter.' See above.

CANZONET, a little song. (Ital.—L.) In Shak. L. L. iv. 2. 124.—Ital. canzonetta, a little song; dimin. of canzone, a hymn; cf. canzone, a song, ballad.—L. canzionem, acc. of cantio, a song; whence also F. chanson, a song, used by Shak. Hamlet, ii. 2. 438.—L. cantare, to sing; frequentative of canto, to sing. See Cant (1).

CAOUTCHOUC, India rubber. (F.—Caribbean.) Modern.

Borrowed from F. cauchuche, from a Caribbean word which is spelt cauchue in the Cyclop. Metropolitana, q. v. This word, used at Quito, belongs to the idiom of the Indians of the province of Manas, and signifies 'juice of a tree.' La Condamine calls it cauchue. See Notes on F. Eym. pp. 30, 31.

CAP, a covering for the head; a cover. (Late L.) In early use. AS. cappe, as a gloss to Late L. planitia, a chasuble; Aelfric's Glossary; Voc. 124. 31.—Late L. cappa, a cape, a cope; see caparius in Thucage. [The words cap, cape, cope were all the same originally.] This Late L. cappa, a cap, occurs in a document of the year 660 (Dietz); and is spelt cappa by Isidore of Seville, 19. 31. 3, who says: 'Cappa, quia capitis ornamentum est'; a popular etymology. But the true origin is unknown. Perhaps the derivation from L. capere, to contain, suggested by Papias, may be right. See Cape, Cope. ¶ For cap-a-pie, cap-a-pee, i. e. from head to foot (from F. cap, head, a. to, and OF. pie, AF. pee, foot) see Cape (2).

CAPABLE, having ability. (F.—L.) In Shak. Troil. iii. 3. 310.—F. capable, 'capable, sufficient'; Cot.—Late L. capabilis, lit. comprehensible, a word used in the Arian controversy. β. The meaning afterwards shifted to 'able to hold,' one of the senses assigned by Cotgrave to F. capable. This would be due to the influence of L. capax, capacious, the word to which capabilis was probably indebted for its second and its irregular formation from capere.—L. capere, to hold, contain.—✓ QAP, to hold; Brugm. i. § 635. Der. capabit-ity. See Heave.

CAPACIOUS, able to hold or contain. (L.) Used by Sir W. Raleigh, Hist. of the World, bk. i. c. 6. Shak. expresses the same idea by capable. Ill formed, as if from a F. capacious or L. capaciōsus; but there are no such words, and the real source is the declensional stem capaci- of the L. adj. capax, able to contain.—L. capere, to contain, hold; cognate with F. heave, q. v. Der. capaciously, capaciousness; and (from L. capax, gen. capacis) capaci-tate, capaci-ty. From the L. capere we also have cap-able, cap-er. Also conceive, deceive, receive, &c. Also captions, captivate, captivity, captor, capture; anticipate, emancipate, participate; acceptable, conception, deception, except, intercept, precept, recept, receptacle, susceptible; incipient, recipient; occupy; prince, princip; and all words nearly related to these.

Cor. i. 9. 12.—MF. caparisson, 'a caparison'; Cot.—Span. caparazon, a caparison, a cover for a saddle or coach; formed as an augmentative from Med. L. caparo, a cowl (cf. E. chaperon).—Late L. cappa, a cloak, cape. See Cape (1). Der. caparison, verb; Rich. III. v. 3. 289.

CAPE (1), a covering for the shoulders. (F.—Span.—Late L.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, iv. 3. 140. [MF. cape, in Layamon, ii. 122, is the modern cape.]—MF. cape, 'a short and sleeveless cloak'; Cot.—Span. cappa, a cape, cloak.—Late L. cappa, for which see Dugange; see also Cap and Cope. Bart. s. v. Cape, has: 'a Spanishe cape.' ¶ The word, being an ecclesiastical one, has spread widely; from the Late L. cappa are derived not only OF. cape, but also Prov. Span., and Port. cappa, lecl. kapa (whence E. cope), Swed. kapa, Dan. kunbe. Der. cap-arison, q. v.; and see chapel, chaperon, chapel.

CAPE (2), a headland. (F.—Ital.—L.) In Shak. Oth. ii. 1. 1; 'haucer, Prol. 408.—F. cap, 'a promontory, cape'; Cot.—Ital. capo, a head; a headland, cape.—L. caput, a head. ¶ In the phr. cap-a-pie, i. e. head to foot, the 'cap' is the F. cap here spoken of.

CAPER (1), to dance about. (Ital.—L.) In Shak. Temp. v. 238. The word was merely shortened from the older form capreoll, used by Sir P. Sidney in his translation of Ps. 114, quoted by Richardson: 'Hillocks, why capreoll ye, as wanton by their dammes We capreoll see the lusty lambs?'—Ital. capriolare, to caper, leap about as goats or kids.—Ital. capriola, 'a caper in dancing'; Florio; from Ital. capra, a she-goat.—L. capra, a she-goat; caper (stem capro-), a he-goat. Cf. Gk. καπρος, a boar; Curtius, l. 174.—AS. hæfer, a he-goat; lecl. hæfr. Der. caper, sb.; capriole, q. v., and cf. cabriole, cab.

CAPER (2), the flower-bud of the caper-bush, used for pickling. (F.—L.—Gk.) There is a quibble on the word in Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 3. 129. Sir T. Elyot has capers; Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 7.—MF. capre, capre, a caper, Cot.; mod. F. capre.—L. caparis.—Gk. καπραινα, the caper-plant; also its fruit. Perhaps Eastern; cf. Arab. kahar, capers; Richardson's Arab. Diet. p. 1167.

CAPERCALIZIE, a species of grouse. (Gael.) The z is here no z, but a modern printer's way of representing the old z, much better represented by y; thus the word is really capercailzie. [Similarly Menzies stands for Menyies, and Dalziel for Dalgliel.] 'The capercailzie, . . . horse of the forest.' J. Dalrymple, tr. of Leslie's Hist. Scot. p. 39. See Newton, Diet. of Birds; and the article on the capercailzie, capercailly, or capercail, in the Engl. Cycl., div. Nat. History.—Gael. capull-coille, the great cock of the wood; more literally, the horse of the wood.—Gael. capull, a horse, from L. caballus (cf. E. cavalier); and coille or coill, a wood, a forest, cognate with F. Holt.

CAPIBARA, a large rodent quadruped. (Brazil.) The native name in Brazil. 'Capibara . . . Porcus est fluviatilis.' Hist. Nat. Brasiliæ, 1648; vol. ii. p. 230. See Cavy.

'Capillary filaments;' Derham, Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 12 (R.); and in Mount (1656).—L. capillaris, relating to hair.—L. capillus, hair; but esp. the hair of the head; from the same source as L. caput, the head; the base cap- being common to both words (Bréal).

CAPITAL (1), relating to the head; chief. (F.—L.) 'Eddren capitulen'—veins in the head, where capitulen is used as a pl. adj.; Aucrén Kivle, p. 258.—F. capital, 'chief, capitall'; Cotgrave (and in early use).—L. capitālis, relating to the head.—L. caput (stem capit-), the head. Allied to Skt. kapala(m), skull; AS. hafela, head. Brugm. i. § 641. Der. capital, sb., which see below. And see Capitol.

CAPITAL (2), wealth, stock of money. (F.—L.) Not in early use; later than 1600 (N. E. D.).—F. capital, 'wealth, worth, a stock, a man's principal, or chief substance'; Cotgrave.—Late L. capitale, wealth, stock; properly neuter of adj. capitālis, chief; see above. Der. capital-ist, capital-use. See Cattle.

CAPITOL, the temple of Jupiter, at Rome. (L.) The temple was situated on the Mons Capitolinus, named from the Capitulum, or temple of Jupiter, whence E. capital is derived. In Shak. Cor. i. 1. 49, &c. 'The temple is said to have been called the Capitolium, because a human head (caput) was discovered in digging the foundations;' Smith's Classical Dictionary. For whatever reason, the etymology seems to be from the L. caput, gen. capitis (above).

CAPITULAR, relating to a cathedral chapter. (L.) Properly an adj., but gen. used as a sb., meaning 'the body of the statutes of a chapter.' 'The capitular of Charles the Great joins dicing and drunkenness together;' Ibp. See Chapter.

CAPITULATE, to submit upon certain conditions. (L.) See Trench, Select Glossary. It properly means, to arrange conditions, and esp. of surrender; as in 'to capitulate and conferre with them touchyng the estate of the cytie, the best that they could, so that their persones [persons] might be saued'; Nicolls, tr. of Thucydides, p. 219 (R.). See Shak. Cor. v. 3. 82.—Late L. capitulatus, pp. of capitulare, to divide into chapters, hence, to propose terms.—Late L. capitulum, a chapter (above). Der. capitulation.

Sommer, Nomina Avium.—L. capōnem, acc. of capo, a capon.—Gk. κάνων, a capon. CAPOTE, a long cloak or mantle. (F.—Late L.) 'In our rough capote;' Byron, Siege of Corinth, l. 10.—F. capote, f.; from capot, m., a mantle.—F. cape, a cape; see Cape (1).

CAPRICE, a whim, sudden leap of the mind. (F.—Ital.—L.) The word is now always spelt like the F. caprice, but we often find, in earlier writers, the Italian form. Thus Shak. has capriccio, All's Well, ii. 3. 310; and Butler has the pl. capriches to rhyme with witches; Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1. 18.—F. caprice, 'humour, caprichio, giddy thought'; Cot.—Ital. capriccio, a caprice, whim; whence the word was introduced into French in the 16th century (Brachet). β. Derived by Dietz from Ital. caprio, a goat, as if it were 'a frisk of a kid'; but this is not quite sure. Cf. capriole (below), which seems to be an analogous formation. Körting, § 1891. See Caper (1).

CAPRICORN, the name of a zodiacal sign. (L.) Lit. 'a horned goat.' In Chaucer, Treatise on the Astrolabe, pt. i. sect. 17.—L. capricornus, in the Norman-French treatise of P. de Thaan, in Pop. Treatises on Science, ed. Wright, l. 196.—L. capri, for capro, stem of caper, a goat; and cornu, a horn. See Caper (1) and Horn.

CAPSICUM, a genus of tropical plants, with hot pungent capsules and seeds. (L.) 'The Indian capsicum.' Bradley, Fam. Dict. II. s. v. salter (1735); N.E.D. A coined word, and incorrect. Prob. formed from L. capsa, a case; with reference to the capsules.

CAPSIZE, to upset, overturn. (Span. ?-L.) First in Dibdin (1788). Perhaps a nautical corruption of Spag. capuzar, to sink; as in capuzar un bajel, to sink a ship by the head; or of mod. Prov. cabusado, the act of diving, an upset (Mistral); or apparently derivatives of L. caput, the head. (A guess.)

'The weighing of anchors by the capstan is also new;' Raleigh, Essays (in Todd's Johnson). -Prov. cabestan (whence MF. cabestan, 'the capstane of a ship;' Cot.); cognate with Span. cabestante, a capstan, engine to raise weights; also spelt cabestrante. -L. capistrare, to fasten with a halter, muzzle, tie up; pres. part. capistrans (stem capistrant-), whence the Span. cabestrante. Cf. also Span. cabestrage, cattle-drivers' money, also a halter, answering to Low L. capistragum, money for halters. -L. capistrum (Span. cabestro), a halter. -L. capere, to hold. See CAPACIOUS. Sometimes derived from cabra, a goat, engine to cast stones, and estante, explained by 'standing,' i.e. upright; but the conjecture (though adopted by Körting) is untenable and needless; the shifting of r appears plainly in Port. cabresto, a halter, also (as a nautical term) cables belonging to the bowsprit, allied to cabestrante, capstan. So also Prov. cabestran (as well as cabestan), from cabestre, a halter. See N. E. D.

[Sommer gives AS. carc, carc, but it is wholly unauthorised; the word being really French.] The true solution of this word (first given by myself in 1882) is to be found in the Anglo-French word kark, a burden, weight, cargo, which is nothing but the Norman form of F. charge, as is also evident from the Cursus Mundi, l. 20790, 23994, 24233. This form kark occurs in the Liber Albus, ed. H. T. Riley, p. 224; and is corroborated by the occurrence of the verb sorkarker for sorcharger in the Statutes of the Realm, vol. i. p. 26, A.D. 1275; so also descarkere, to unload, Lib. Albus (Gloss). Hence cark meant, originally, a weight, load; but came to be used particularly of 'a load of care.' The W. care, anxiety, solicitude, is the F. word borrowed; cf. Bret. karg, a load, burden (from French); though the ultimate root is Celtic. The Late L. carciare, to load, occurs in the Liber Albus (iii. 380). Cark is thus a doublet of charge; see Charge. Cotgrave gives F. charge, sb., 'a load, burthen, farde, also a charge, hinderance, or cause of extraordinary expence;' &c. I may add that we even find kark or karke, a load, in English; for in Arnold's Chron., 1502 (ed. 1811), p. 99, we find mention of 'a karke of peper' and a 'karke of gynger.' Der. carl, verb, spelt carke in Palsgrave, whence the phr. 'carke-ing care'; in the Cursor Mundi, we find 'carkid (also charked) with care', ll. 23994, 24870.

CARLINE, usually carline thistle, a kind of thistle. (F.—Late L.—G.) In Lyte, tr. of Dodoeus, bk. iv. c. 67, he says: 'now they call it Carlina or Carolina, because of Charlemaigne emperor of the Romanes, vnto whom an angell first shewed this thistle, as they say, when his armie was striken with the pestilence.' (So also in Ducange). —F. carline. —L. Carolina, fem. of Carolinus, pertaining to Carolus. —G. Karl, name of the emperor.

CARMINATIVE, expelling wind from the body. (F.—L.) In the Tatler, no. 224, § 8 (Sept. 14, 1710). —F. carminatif, 'wind-voiding'; Cot. —L. carminat-us, pp. of carminare, to card wool; hence, to expel. —L. carmin, stem of carmen, a card for wool. —L. carere, to card. ¶ Not from L. carmen, a song; see Notes on F. Etym., p. 31.

CARMINE, a crimson colour, obtained from the cochineal insect originally. (Span.—Arab.—Skt.). —Carmine, a red colour, very vivid, made of the cochineal masticque; Bailey's Dict. vol. ii; 2nd ed. 1731. —F. carmine (Hatzfeld); or from Span. carmín, carmine, a contracted form of Span. carmesin, crimson, carmine. —Span. carmesin, adj., crimson; sb. cochineal powder. —Arab. qirmiz, crimson; qirmiz, crimson; qirmiz i firengi, cochineal; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 470. —Skt. krmī(s), a worm, the cochineal insect. Brugm. i. § 418. See CRIMSON.

CARNAGE, slaughter. (F.—L.) In Holland's Plutarch, p. 371 (K.); Milton, P. L. x. 268. —F. carnage, 'flesh-time, the season wherein it is lawful to eat flesh (Picardy)'; also, a slaughter, butchery; Cot. —Late L. carnificium, a kind of tribute of animals; cf. carnatum, the time when it is lawful to eat flesh (wherein the notion of a great slaughter of animals easily arose). —L. caro (stem carn-), flesh. Brugm. i. § 515.

CARNAL, fleshly. (L.) See Coventry Mysteries, p. 194; Sir T. More's Works, p. 14; Sir T. Elyot, the Governour, hb. iii. c. 18; Henry's Wallace, b. xi. l. 1348. —L. caruialis, fleshly, carnal. —L. carn-, base of caro, flesh (above). Der. carnal-ly, carnal-ist, carnal-i-ty, and see carnage, carnation, carnivorous, accarnation, carnation.

CARNATION (1), flesh colour, pink. (F.—L.) See Hen. V. ii. 3. 35; Wint. T. iv. 4. 82. —F. carnation, carnation colour; omitted by Cotgrave, but noted in Supp. to Godefroy. Cf. Ital. carnagione, 'the hew of ones skin and flesh, also fleshiness' (Florio). —L. carni-nōnem, acc. of carniō, fleshiness. —L. carn-, base of caro, flesh. See CARNAL.

CARNATION (2), the name of a flower. (F.—L.) The orig. name seems to have been carnation, as in Spenser, Sheph. Cal., April, 138; from the flowers being 'dented or toothed like to a littall crowsnet' (Lyte). See the account in N.E.D. It was then contracted to carnation, and confused with carnation. See Coronation and Carnation (1).

CARNELIAN, another form of Cornelian, q. v.

CARNIVAL, the feast held just before Lent. (F.—Ital.—L.) The spelling is a mistaken one; it should rather be carnuol, carnuol, or carnuol. 'Our carnivals and Shrove-Tuesdays,' Hobbes, Of the kingdom of darkness, c. 45 (K.). 'The carnival of Venice,' Addison, On Italy, Venice (K.). It is rightly spelt carnival in Blount's Glossographia, ed. 1674. —F. carnaval, Shrove-tide; Cot. Introduced from Ital. in the 16th cent. (Brachet). —Ital. carnuole, carnuole, orig. the eve of Ash Wednesday; later, the last three days before Lent. —Late L. carnuolēmen, carnuolēvirium, carnuolēviria, a removal of meat, Shrove-tide; also spelt carnuolē in a document dated 1330, in Carpenter's supplement to Ducange. Afterwards shortened from carnuolē to carnuolē, a change promoted by a popular etymology which resolved the word into Ital. carnu, flesh, and valē, farewell, as if the sense were 'farewell! O flesh!' [Not 'farewell to flesh,' as Lord Byron attempts to explain it.] —L. carnu-m, acc. of caro, flesh and levare, to remove, whence levā-rium, a removal, taking away, levēle, i. e. removing, taking away, and levāmen; the latter being the true L. form, with a difference of sense. See CARNAL and Lever. ¶ As carnuolēmen might also mean 'solace of the flesh,' the word was often completely misunderstood and misapplied; and the sense was altered from 'a time of fasting' to 'a time of feasting.' Hence the word is often wrongly explained; see N.E.D.

CARNIVOROUS, flesh-eating. (L.) In Ray, On the Creation, pt. i. Also in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. —L. carnivorus, feeding on flesh; with suffix -ous. —L. carni-, declensional stem of caro, flesh; and vorare, to devour. See CARNAL and Voracious.

CAROB-TREE, the locust-tree. (F.—Arab.). —A carobe tree; Turner, Names of Herbes, s.v. Siliqua (1548). —Mf. carobe, carrobe, 'the carob; also a small weed (among mintmen and goldsmiths) making but the 24 part of an ounce;' Cot.—Arab. kharrūb, Pers. kharrūb, bean-pods; see Richardson's Arab. Dict. p. 608. Cf. Carat.

CAROCHE, a kind of coach. (F.—Ital.—Late L.—C.) Obsolete; but the present sense of carriage was brought about by confusion with it. The great caroch, Ben Jonson, Devil is an Ass, iv. 1 (Lady T.). Stow, in his Annals, 1615; p. 857, says that the 'ordinary use of caroches' began about A. D. 1605; Dekker, in his Seven Deadly Sinnes, 1606, ed. Arber, p. 20, mentions 'the Grand Signiors Caroches.' —F. carroche, 'a carroche;' Cot.; given as a variant of carosse or carozze, 'a carosse or caroch;' Cot. Carroche is a Walloon form (Sigart). —Ital. carroccio, carrozza, 'a carroce, a coche, a chariot;' Florio. Extended from Ital. carro, 'a cart, chariot, Florio. —L. currus, a car; which is of Celtic origin. See Car.

CAROL, a kind of song; orig. a dance. (F.—L.—Gk.). 'Faire is carole of malde gent;' King Alisaunder, l. 1845. —OF. carole, orig. a sort of dance; later enrolle, 'a sort of dance wherein many dance together; also, a carroll, or Christmas song;' Cot. Godefroy (s.v. carole) cites Swiss Rom. coraula, a round dance; also, a dance-song. —L. choraula, by-form of choraulēs (Gk. χορῳλῆς), a flute-player, who accompanied with a flute the chorus-dance. —Gk. χορὸς, a chorus, round-dance; and αὐλός, a flute, from ἀνυμν, I blow. See Chorus. So Körting, § 2145.

CAROTID, related to the two great arteries of the neck. (Gk.). 'The carotid, vertebral, and splenic arteries;' Ray, On the Creation (Todd). 'Carotid Arteries, certain arteries belonging to the brain; so called because, when stop'd, they immediately incline the person to sleep;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. —Gk. καρωτίδες, s. pl. the two great arteries of the neck; with respect to the ancients believed that compression of them would cause drowsiness. —Gk. καρπία, I plunge into heavy sleep, I stupefy. —Gk. καρπός, heavy sleep, torpor.

CAROUSE, a drinking-bout. (F.—G.) Orig. an adverb meaning 'completely,' or 'all out,' i. e. 'to the bottom,' used of drinking. Whence the phrase: 'to quaff carouse, to drink deeply.' Robin here, a carouse to good King Edward's self.' George a Greene, Old Plays, iii. 51 (Nares); see Peele's Works, ed. Dyce, p. 267. 'The tipping sotter at midnight which to quaffe carouse do use, Will hate thee if at any time to pledge them thou refuse;' Brant's Horace, ep. to Lollius. (See Horat. Epist. l. 18. 91. Drant died A. D. 1578.) 'He in that forest did death's cup carouse, i. e. drink up; Mirror for Magistrates, p. 646. 'Then drink they all around, both men and women; and sometimes they carouse for the victory very filthily and drunkenly;' Hakluyt, Voyages, l. 96. Also spelt garouse. 'Some of our captains garoused of his wine till they were reasonably pliant;' also, 'And are themselves . . . the greatest garousers and drunkards of the world;' Raleigh, Discovery of Guiana; Hakluyt Soc., p. 64; cf. Hakluyt, Voy. iii. 648, where the form is karousers. —F. carous, a carouse of drink; Cotgrave. He also gives: 'Carouser, to quaff, swallow, carousse it.' —G. garous, adv., also used as a sb. to mean 'finishing stroke;' as in 'einer Sache das garous machen, to put an end to a thing;' Flügel's Dict. The G. garous signifies literally 'right out,' and was specially used of emptying a bumper to any one's health, a custom which became so notorious that the word made its way not only into French and English, but even into Spanish; cf. Span. carous, 'drinking a full bumper to one's health;' Meadows. —G. gar, adv. completely (OIG. karo, allied to E. year, which see); and aus, prep. out, cognate with F. out. ¶ Similarly, the phr. allaus was sometimes used, from the G. all aus, i. e. all out, in exactly the same connexion; and this phrase likewise found its way into French. Cotgrave gives: 'Alluz, all out; or a carouse fully drunk up.' It even found its way into English. Thus Beaumont and Fletcher: 'Why, give'some wine then, this will fit us all; Here's to you still, my captain's friend! All out!' Beggar's Bush, Act ii. sc. 3. Der. carouse, verb; also carous-al, in one sense of it, but not always; see below.

CAROUSAL, a drinking-bout; Carousel, a pageant. (1. F.—G.; 2. F.—Ital.) 1. The form carousal is now generally understood as being a mere derivative of the verb to carouse, and would be so used. 2. But in old authors we find carousel (generally so accented and spelt) used to mean a sort of pageant in which some form of chariot-race formed a principal part. 'This game, these carousels Ascanius taught, And, building Alba, to the Latins brought;' Dryden's Virgil, Æn. v. 777, where the Latin text (v. 596) has certamina. And see the long quotation from Dryden's pref. to Albion and Albanus in Richardson. —F. carrousel, a tilt, carousel, tilting-match. —Ital. carosello (variant garosello), a festival, a tournament. The form carosello is not given in Baret, but is cited by Diez and Torriano. Torriano gives caroselle or caleselle, which he explains by 'a kind of sport or game used in Italy at Shrove-tide.' Diez connects carosello with Ital. carozza (s.v. carriera); see Carroche. So Körting, § 1973.

CARP (1), a fresh-water fish. (F.—Late L.—Teut.?) 'Carpe, fische, carpus.' Prompt. Parv., p. 62. —F. carpe. —Late L. carpa; which occurs as early as the fifth century, being found in Cassiodorus, lib. xii. ep. 4: 'Destinet carpam Danubius;' quoted by Brachet.

Hence also Span. carpa, Ital. carpione. β . But prob. of Teut. origin, being found in most Teut. languages; cf. Du. karpe; Icel. karfi (?); Dan. karpe; Swed. karp; G. karffen; OHG. carpho. Whence also Russ. karp, Lith. karpa.

CARP (2), to cavil at. (Scand.) In Shak. Much Ado, iii. 1. 71; K. Lear, i. 4. 222. α . There can be little doubt that the peculiar use of carp, in a bad sense, is due to its supposed connexion with the L. carpere, to pluck, to calumniate. At the same time, it is equally certain that the ME. carpen is frequently used, as noted by Trench in his Select Glossary, without any such sinister sense. Very frequently, it merely means 'to say,' as in to karpe the sothe, to tell the truth; Will. of Palerne, 503, 655, 2804. It occurs rather early. 'Iwien thou art on cise, carpe toward Ihesu, and seie thisse wordes'—when thou art at ease, speak to Jesus, and say these words; Old Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 287. β . The word is Scandinavian, and had originally somewhat of a sinister sense, but rather significant of 'boasting' or 'prattling' than implying any malicious intent, a use of the word which is remarkably absent from Middle English; see the 26 examples of it in Mätzner's Wörterbuch.—Icel. karpa, to boast, brag; Swed. dial. karpa, to brag, boast, clatter, wrangle, rant; more frequently spelt garpa (Rietz); cf. garper, a contentious man, a prattler, great talker. γ . We may also note Swed. dial. karper, brisk, eager, industrious (Rietz); Icel. garpr, a warlike man, a bravo, a virago; MSwed. garpr, a warlike, active man; also, a boaster (Ihre). Der. carp-er.

CARPEL, the cell of a pistil or fruit. (F.—Gk.) First used by Lindley in 1835.—F. carpelle; a dimin. form coined from Gk. καρπός, fruit. See HARVEST.

F. carpentier), a worker in timber.—Late L. carpentarius, a carpenter.—Late L. carpentaria, to work in timber; with special reference to the making of carriages.—L. carpentum, a carriage, chariot, used by Livy; a word (like car) of Celtic origin. (Cf. Gael. and Irish carbaid, Olrish carpa, a carriage, chariot, litter, bier; W. cerbyd, a chariot; Olbret. carpit. Stokes-Pick, p. 71. Probably allied to L. corbis, a basket, with reference to 'the basket character of the body of these chariots'; Machain. Der. carpent-ry.

CARPET, a thick covering for floors. (F.—L.) 'A carpet, tapes, etis.' Levins (A.D. 1570). 'A ladies carpet.' Hall, Edw. IV, an. xiv. § 6. 'A carpet, an. 1284; J. E. T. 'The articles [there] manufactured are machinery, agricultural implements, cannon, carronades, which take their name from this place, &c.' Engl. Cycl. s. v. Stirlingshire.

CARROT, an edible root. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'A carote, pastinaca.' Levins (A. D. 1570). 'Their savoury parsnip next, and carrot, pleasing food.' Drayton's Polyolbion, s. 20, l. 49.—MF. carote, carrote, the carrot, Cot.; mod. F. carotte.—L. carota, used by Apicius. Der. carro-y.

Parv. p. 62; see Trench, Select Glossary. ¶ A modern sense of carriage, viz. vehicle, is prob. partly due to association with CAROCHE, q. v.

CART, a two-wheeled vehicle. (Scand.) In early use. ME. karre, carre; Ormulum, 54. Chaucer has carter, C. T. 7122 (D 1540). [AS. crat, by the common metathesis of r; pl. cratu, chariots, A. S. version of Gen. l. 9. Cf. 'veredus, crate-hors, i.e. cart-horse; AElf. Gloss.; Voc. 108. 24.] From Icel. kartr, a cart; whence, probably, Picard carli, a cart. ¶ The W. cart, Gael. and Irish cairt, are from E. Der. cart, v.; cart-age, cart-er.

CARTE, a paper, a card, bill of fare. (F.—L.—Gk.) Modern, and mere French. Compare the phrase carte blanche. 'Carte blanche, a blank paper, seldom used but in this phrase, to send one a carte blanche, signed, to fill up with what conditions he pleases; Bailey's Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1731.—F. carte, a card. See further under CARD (1), of which carte is a doublet. Der. cart-el (F. cartel, from Ital. cartello), the dimin. form; cart-oon (F. cartoon, from Ital. cartone), the augmentative form; also cartidge, cartulary, which see. Cartel is spelt chariel in Ben Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, i. 5. Cartoon is spelt cartoon in the Spectator, no. 226. CARTOON; see under CARTE.

CARTOUCHE, CARTOUCHE, a paper case for the charge of a gun. (F.—Ital.—L.—Gk.) Cartridge is a corruption of cartridge, a form which appears in Dryden's Annus Mirabilis, st. 149 (altered to cartridge in the Clar. Press ed. of Selections from Dryden). A still older form was cartage, itself a corruption of cartouche, the true F. form. Cf. 'their cartage or cartridge boxes; Dampier, A New Voyage (1699); i. 231.—F. cartouche, 'the corner of paper wherewith Apothecaries and Grocers put the parcels they retail; also, a cartouch, or full charge for a pistol, put up within a little paper, to be the reader for use; Cot. 2. A tablet for an ornament, or to receive an inscription, formed like a scroll, was also called a cartouche, in architecture; and Cot. also gives: 'Cartouche, [the same] as Cartouche; also, a cartridge or roll, in architecture.' This shows that the corrupt form cartridge (apparently made up, by popular etymology, from the F. carte, a card, and the E. ridge, used for edge or projection) was then already in use.—Ital. cartuccio, a roll of paper, a cartidge.—Ital. carta, paper.—L. charta (Late L. carta), paper.—Gk. χάρτιον, χάρτιον, a leaf of papyrus. CASCADE, a waterfall. (F.—Ital.—L.) Not given in Cotgrave. Used by Addison, in describing the Teverone (Todd's Johnson), and in Anson's Voyages, bk. ii. c. 1. 'Artificial casades.' See Capable. Der. cas, verb; cash, q. v.; also en-case, casement. Doublet, chase (3), q. v.

CASEMATE, a bomb-proof chamber. (F.-Ital.) Originally, a bomb-proof chamber, furnished with embrasures; later, an embrasure. 'Casemate, a loop-hole in a fortified wall to shoot out at; or, in fortification, a place in a ditch, out of which to plague the assailants,' Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. 'Secure your casemates,' Ben Jonson, Staple of News, i. 1. -F. casemate, 'a casemate, a loop, or loop-hole, in a fortified wall'; Cot. -Ital. casematta, 'a casemate, or a slaughter-house, and is a place built low under the wall or bulwarck, not arriving unto the height of the ditch, serving to skoure the ditch, annoying the enemy when he entrench into the ditch to skale the wall'; Florio. -Ital. cas, a house; and matta, fem. of adj. matt, mad, foolish, but also used nearly in the sense of E. 'dummy'; whilst the Sicilian matta, according to Diez, means dim, dark. Hence the sense is dummy-chamber, or dark chamber. Cf. Ital. carromatto, 'a block carriage, sometimes used to spare fire-carriages'; Torriano. -L. cas, a cottage; and Late L. mattus, sad, foolish, dull, lit. check-mated, for the origin of which see Checkmate. See Körting, §§ 1979, 5966. And see Casino.

CASEMENT, a frame of a window. (F.-L.) A casement is a small part of an old-fashioned window, opening by hinges, the rest of the window being fixed; also applied to the whole window. It occurs in Shak. Merry Wives, i. 4, 2. cf. Gwill's Architecture, § 2531. β. In the latter case, the word is equivalent to en-casement, from the verb to en-case; cf. the verb to case, in the sense 'to engrave, adorn,' which is short for en-case. Observe, too, that en-case is a doublet of en-case; see En-case. γ. The difference is merely one of dialect; ONorthF. case being the same as OF. casus, mod. F. chasse; from L. casus; see Case (2); and, just as casement in the sense of 'moulding' is connected with en-case, so casement in the sense of window, or rather 'window-frame,' is connected with en-case. δ. In other words, casement is short for en-casement; and was formed from the MF. encasser, 'to case, or in-case, to make up in, or put up into, a case or chest'; Cot. Cf. MF. en-cassiller, 'to set in, to enclose, compass, bind, hold in with a wooden frame'; id. Also en-casser en or, 'to en-case, or set in gold'; also 'en-casement, an encasing or encasement'; and 'en-casement, an encasement, an encasing, or setting in'; id. 4. Godefroy has OF. en-casement, en-casement, a frame; and the ONorthF. form of en-casement would have been en-casement, from which casement followed easily by the loss of the prefix. Similarly, Shak. has case for en-case, Com. Err. ii. 1. 85. Both case and the suffix -ment are of L. origin. See En-case and Case (2). ¶ The Ital. casamento, a large house, is quite a different word. Observe a similar loss of the first syllable in fence, for defence, casier for incenser, &c.

CASERN, a lodging for soldiers, barrack. (F.-Prov.-L.) Phillips (1796) has casern, a lodging raised between the rampart and houses of a fortified town, for the soldiers. -F. caserna. -Prov. caserna. Perhaps from L. quaternus, a lodging or watch-house for four soldiers. -L. quattuor, four; see Four. See Körting, § 7647; and Hatzfeld.

CASH (1), coin or money. (F.-Ital.-L.) So in Shak. Hen. V. ii. 1. 120. But the original sense is 'a chest,' or 'a till,' i.e. the box in which the ready money was kept; afterwards transferred to the money itself. 'So as this bank is properly a general cash [i.e. till, money-box], where every man lodges his money,' Sir W. Temple, On the United Provinces, c. 2 (R.). And see the quotation from Cotgrave below. -F. cas, 'a box, case, or chest, to carry or keep wares [wares] in'; also, a merchant's cash or counter; &c. -Ital. casca, 'a chest, . . . a merchant's cash or counter'; Florio. -L. caps, a chest. This cash is a doublet of Case (2), q. v. Der. cash-ier, sb.; but see Cashier, vb. below.

CASH (2), a coin of low value in India and China. (Tamil-Skt.) Spelt cash (1699), Dampier, Voy. II. 1. 4. 72 (N.E.D.). -Tamil kāsu, a small coin, money. -Skt. kāśka-s, a weight, abt. 180 grains Troy. See Yule, and II. H. Wilson's Glossary.

CASHEW-NUT, the nut of a W. and E. Indian tree. (F.-Brazil.) In Dampier's Voyages, iii. 68 (1703). Cashew is an E. form of acajou. -F. acajou. -Brazil. acajú, (Yule, s. v. Cashew) or acaiú, in the Hist. Nat. Brasil. (1648), vol. ii. p. 94; which is the fruit of the tree named acaciaba (F. acajaba).

CASHIER, v., to dismiss from service. (Du.-F.-L.) [Quite unconnected with cashier, sb., which is simply formed from cash.] In Shak. Merry Wives, i. 3. 6. [Occasionally also written cash; from F. casier, directly. 'He cashed the old soldiers and supplied their rooms with young beginners,' Golding, Justine, fol. 63 (R.). And the pp. cashied for cashiered, occurs in a Letter of The Earl of Leicester, dated 1585; Nares, ed. Wright and Halliwell. Also spelt cas. 'But when the Lacedaemonians saw their armies casied,' North's Plutarch, 180 E; quoted in Nares, s. v. cas, q. v.] -Du. casieren, 'to cashier'; Hexham. -F. casier, 'to break, bust, . . . quash asunder, also to casier, casier, discharge.' Cot. -L. quassare, to shatter, frequentative of quater, to shake (which, in Late L. annexed the senses of L. casare, to bring to nothing, to annul, discharge; used by Sidorius and Cassiodorus; from cas, empty, void; of uncertain origin). Kirtling, §§ 1988, 7645. ¶ It is easy to explain the suffix. This form casier has been already quoted from Cotgrave; this is really the Du. casieren, to cast off, break, discard. This Du. cas-ieren is nothing but the F. casier with the Du. suffix -ieren, used in forming Du. verbs from Romance ones. So also G.-ieren, as in in-lieren, to isolate, from F. isoler.

CASHMERE, a soft wool. (India.) Esp. applied to a rich kind of soft woollen shawl; so called from the country of Cashmere, which lies close under the Himalayan Mountains, on the S. side of them. Also a name given to the stuff of which they are made, and to imitations of it. See Cassimere.

CASINO, a public room for music or dancing. (Ital.-L.) Modern. -Ital. casino, a summer-house, country-box; dimin. of casa, a house. -L. casa, a cottage.

CASK, a barrel or tub for wine, &c. (Span.-L.) 'The cask will have a taste for evermore With that wherewith it seasoned was before;' Mirror for Magistrates, p. 193 (R.). -Span. casco, a skull, sherd, coat (of an onion); a cask; helmet; casque; cf. Span. casaca, peel, rind, hull; Port. casca, rind. See Casque, of which cask is a doublet. ¶ Imported from Spain, together with the wine.

CASKET, a little chest or coffer. (F.-L.) In Shak. Mer. of Ven. i. 2. 100. Earlier; 'the two shyrts that wer in my casket'; Paston Letters, iii. 7 (1471); and as early as 1467. It looks like a dimin. of cask, in the sense of 'chest'; as in 'A jewel, locked into the wofullest cask,' a Hen. VI. iii. 2. 499; but this cask is not found before 1593. The form is anomalous, and must be regarded as a corrupt substitution for F. cassette, 'a small casket, chest, cabinet,' &c.; Cot. A dimin. form. -F. cas, a box, case, or chest. -L. caps, a chest. See Case (2). ¶ The objection in N. E. D. that F. cassette dates from the 16th century is founded on a mistake. See Supp. to Godefroy, who gives the form quacete in 1348; much earlier than examples of E. casket.

CASQUE, a helmet. (F.-Span.-L.) In Shak. Rich. II. i. 3. 81. -F. casque, 'the head-piece teamed a casque, or casket.' Cot. -Span. casco, 'a caske or burganet, a tile-shard'; Minshieu. The Span. has also casaca, peel, rind, shell (cf. Port. casca, bark, rind of trees); and these words, with numerous others, appear to be all derivatives from the very common Span. verb casar, to burst, break open, crush; formed (as if from *L. quassare) from an extension of L. quassare, which also gives F. casier, to break. See Quash. Doublet, cas, q. v. CASSATION, abrogation. (F.-L.) In Cotgrave, 'F. cassation, 'a cassation, a quashing, casing, breaking'; Cot. -Late L. acc. casationem. -Late L. casare, for L. quassare, to quash; see Quash. CASSAVA, a plant; also called mandioc. (Hayti.) In Eden's First Three Books on America, ed. Arber, pp. 159, 168, 175, 215, the Hayti name is given as cazabibi. In the tr. of Acosta by E. G., bk. iv. c. 17, it is capivi.

CASSIA, a species of laurel. (L.-Gk.-Heb.) Exod. xxx. 24; Psalm xlv. 8 (A.V.), where the Vulgate has casia. -L. casia, casia. -Gk. kasia, a spice of the nature of cinnamon. -Heb. qetzi'ah, in Ps. xlv. 8, a pl. form from a fem. qetzi'ah, casia-bark; from the root qāts, to cut away; because the bark is cut or peeled off. See Gesenius.

CASSIMERE, a twilled cloth of fine wool. (India.) Also spelt kerseymer in Webster. These terms are nothing but corruptions of Cashmere, q. v.; and distinct from Kersey, q. v. Cashmere is spelt Cassimer in Herbert's Travels, 1665, p. 70.

CASSINO, a game at cards; the same word as Casino. CASSOCK, a kind of vestment. (F.-Ital.-L.) Sometimes 'a military cloak'; All's Well, iv. 3. 192. -F. casaque, 'a cassock, long coat'; Cot. -Ital. casacca, a great coat, surcoat. Apparently formed from Ital. casa, properly 'a house'; hence 'a covering,' used in a half jocular sense. Cf. Ital. casaccia, a large ugly old house. Indeed, Florio gives casacca as meaning 'an habitation or dwelling; also, a casocke or long coat'; as if from L. casa, a cottage. See Casino. And see Chasuble, a word of similar origin; which renders this account of casack probable. (F. Korting, § 1078.)

CASOLET, CASOLETTE, a vessel in which perfumes are burnt. (F. Span., Arab.). In casolets and silver urns; Moore, Lalla Rookh, Tale I, pt. 2, l. 67. — F. casolette. — Span. cazoleta, a pan; dimin. of cazuela, an earthen pan; from cazo, a sauce-pan, an iron ladle (Hatzfeld). — Arab. hisa, a cup, a bowl; hisa(h), a cup, plate, saucer (Devic).

D. — Malay kassowari; also suwari; C. P. G. Scott, p. 125. 'The cassowary is a bird which was first brought into Europe by the Dutch, from Java, in the East Indies, in which part of the world it is only to be found;' Eng. tr. of Buffon's Nat. Hist., ii, 9; London, 1792.

CAST, to throw. (Scand.) In early use, and one of the most characteristic of the Scand. words in English. ME. casten, hesten; St. Marharette, ed. Cockayne, pp. 4, 7; Havellok, li. 1784, 2101. — Icel. kasta, to throw; Swed. kasta; Dan. kaste. — β. The orig. sense was probably to 'throw into a heap,' or 'heap up'; cf. Swed. dial. kas, Icel. kústr, kú, a pile, heap; L. con-gere, to heap together, pp. con-gestus. Der. cast, sb.; cast-er, cast-ing, cast-away, out-cast. Also castor, as in pepper-castor; a variant of caster.

CASSTANETS, instruments composed of two small, concave shells of ivory or hard wood, loosely fastened together by a ribbon passing over the thumb, and made to snap together by beating one of them with the middle finger. (F. Span., —). In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Spelt castanetas in Dryden, Ind. Emperor, iv, 3. — F. castagnettes, pl., 'finger-knackers, wherewith players make a pretty noise in some kind of dances;' Cot. — Span. castanetas, castanets; pl. of castaneta; so called (according to Pineda and Monlau) because the castanet is shaped like a piece of the shell of a chestnut. (Some think the sound of the castanet resembled the cracking of roasted chestnuts.) — Span. castaña, a chestnut, — L. castanea, the chestnut-tree. — Gk. kástanon, a chestnut; see Chestnut.

Chiefly used in speaking of classes of men in India. — Port. casta, a race, stock; a name given by the Portuguese to classes of men in India. — Port. casta, adj. fem., chaste, pure, in allusion to purity of breed; from mase. casti. — L. castum, acc. of castus, chaste. Wedgwood derives this from Gk. καταρᾶσσειν, to dash down, fall down headlong; but this is not quite clear. Littre takes the same view. γ. CATER, to buy provisions, provide food. (F.—L.) Originally a sb. and used as we now use the word caterer, wherein the ending -er of the agent is unnecessarily reduplicated. So used by Sir T. Wyatt, Satire i. l. 26. To cater means 'to act as a cater', i.e. a buyer. The old spelling of the sb. is catur. 'I am our catur, and bere our all purs'—I am the buyer for us, and bear the purse for us all; Gamely, l. 321. 'Catur of a gentylmans house, despensier'; Palsgrave. β. Again, catur is a shortened form of acatur, by loss of initial a. Acatur is formed (by adding the OF. suffix -our of the agent) from (NorthF. acater (OF. achater, F. acheter), to buy. [Cf. acat, achat, a buying, a purchase; a word used by Chaucer, Prol. 571.]—Late L. accapillare, to purchase, in a charter of A.D. 1000 (Brachet, s. v. acheter). Scott defines caterans as being 'robbers from the Highlands'; see also Jamieson.—Late L. caterinus, due to Gael. ceathairne, yemanyr, lit. 'common people.' From Gael. ceatharn, Irish ceathern, Olrish ceithern, a troop; allied to L. caterus, a troop; Machain. See Kern.

CATER-COUSIN, a remote relation, good friend. (F.—L.) We find 'Cater-cousin, quatre-cousin, remote relation, misapprehended by Gobbo to persons who peaceably feed together; Merch. Ven. ii. l. 239; Schmidt, Shak. Lexicon. 'Quater-cousins, fourth or last cousins, good friends'; Coles (1684). But the form quater-cousin (with the explanation) seems to have been invented by Skinner (1671); and turns out to be baseless. It is more probable that cater is from cater, to provide food (as above); and that cater-cousins are cousins who feed (or are catered for) together. So N. E. D. And so Nares, who has 'Cater-cousins, friends so familiar that they eat together.' See Cater and Cousin.

CATERPILLAR, a kind of grub. (F.) In Shak. Rich. II. ii. §. 166. Used also by Sir Jo. Cheeke, Hurst of Sedition (K.) Spelt catyrryl, Prompt. Parv. p. 63; to which the suffix -ar or -er of the agent was afterwards added; so as to assimilate it to piller, i.e. one who pills, or robs or spoils. Palsgrave has 'caterpyllar worme, chatepelouse'. The ME. catyrryl is a corruption of (NorthF. catelpeuse; cf. catelpeuse in Godefroy; and Norm. dial. carpeuse, catelpeuse, a caterpillar (Robin). Cotgrave has: 'Chatepelouse, a come-devouring mite, or weevell.' β. A fanciful name, meaning literally 'hairy she-cat', applied primarily to the hairy caterpillar.—OF. chate, a she-cat, fem. of chat (Cotgrave); and pelose, orig. equivalent to Ital. peloso, hairy, from L. pilosus, hairy, which again is from L. pilus, a hair. See Cat and Pile (4).

CATERWAUL, to cry as a cat. (F.) ME. caterwawen. Chaucer has 'gon a caterwawed'—go a-caterwauling (the pp. -ed being used with the force of the -ing of the (so-called) verbal substantive, by an idiom explained in my note on blakberwed in Chaucer); C. T., 5936 (D 354). Formed from cat, and the verb waul, to make a noise like a cat, with the addition of -i to give the verb a frequentative force. 'Where cats do waul;' Return from Parnassus, v. 4. Cf. Low G. katterwaulen, to caterwaul (Schambach). The word waul is imitative; cf. waif, q. v.

CATES, provisions. (F.—L.) In Baret's Alveary, 1580, we find: 'A Cater, a steward, a mancipie, a provider of cates, . . . qui emit opsonia.' Again: 'The Cater buyeth very dere cates.' IIorman's Vulgaria. Thus the cates were the provisions bought by the cater, or, as we now say, the caterer, and were thence so called. Cate is a shortened form of acate, sb.; just as cater is of acater or acatur; see Chaucer, Prol. 568 (Camb. MS.). See further under Cater. We may note that Ben Jonson uses the full form acates, Staple of News, Act ii. sc. 1, l. 16; Sad Shepherd, Act i. sc. 2, l. 40. Shak. has cates, Tam. Shrew., ii. 1. 190.

CATGUT, the dried and twisted intestines (chiefly of sheep) used for the strings of violins, &c. (L.) Lit. 'gut of a cat'; though it is not known that such were used. 'Tunes played upon cat's guts;' Middleton, Women beware Women, iii. 2. Cf. Du. kattedarm, cat-gut; from darm, gut. See Notes on E. Etymology.

CATHARTIC, purgative, lit. cleansing. (Gk.) Cathartical and catharticks occur in Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. 'Cathartics or purgatives of the soul,' Spectator, no. 507.—(Gk. καθαρτικός, purgative.—Gk. καθαίρειν, fut. καθαίρω, to cleanse, purify.—Gk. καθαρός, clean, pure. Der. cathartic, sb.; cathartic-al.

CATHEDRAL, a church with a bishop's throne. (L.—Gk.) Properly an adj., being an abbreviation for cathedral church. 'In the cathedral church of Westminster,' 2 Hen. VI. i. 2. 37. 'Chyrche cathedra;' Rob. of Glouc, p. 282, l. 5715.—Late L. cathedrālis, adj.; whence cathedrālis ecclesia, a cathedral church.—1. Cathedra, a raised seat; with adj. suffix -ālis.—Gk. καθέδρα, a seat, bench, pulpit.—Gk. κατά, down (> κατ- before an aspirate), and θῆρα, a scat, chair; cf. θῶς, a seat.—Gk. ῥοπία (root ῥδ), I sit. The Gk. root hed is cognate with E. sit. See Sit.

CATHOLIC, universal. (F.—L.—Gk.) Spelt catholyke; Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, bk. iii. c. 23, §. 2.—F. catholique, 'catholic, universal'; Cot.—L. catholicus, used by Tertullian, adv. Marc. ii. 17.—Gk. καθολικός, universal, general; formed with suffix -i-ka from Gk. καθόλου, adv., on the whole, in general.—Gk. καθ' ὅλου, where καθ' is for κατά (on account of the following aspirate), and ὅλου is the gen. case of ὅλος, whole, governed by the prep. κατά, according to; lit. 'according to the whole,' or 'on the whole.' The Gk. ὅλος is cognate with Skt. sarva-, all. Der. catholic-i-ty, catholic-ism.

CATKIN, a loose spike of flowers resembling a cat's tail. (Du.) Used in botany; and borrowed by Lyte from Dutch; see Lyte, tr. of Dodoens, b. vi. c. 58: 'catkins of Hasell.' Cotgrave has: 'Chattons, the catkins, cat-tails, aglet-like blowings, or bloomings of nut-trees, &c.' Called kattkens in MDutch; see katten, kattkens, the blossom of the spikes of nuts and hazels, Oudemans; kattchen, a young cat, Ilexham.—MDu. katte, cat; with dim. suffix -ken. See Cat.

CATOPTRIC, relating to optical reflexion. (Gk.) A scientific term; spelt catoptrick in Phillips (1658). Bailey has 'catoptrical telescope' for reflecting telescope; vol. ii. ed. 1731.—Gk. κατοπτρικός, reflexive.—Gk. κατοπτρον, a mirror.—Gk. κατά, downward, inward; and ὤρα-ρο-μα, I see; with suffix -ρον, of the instrument. See Optics. Der. catop-trics, sb. pl.

CATTLE, live stock; collectively. (F.—L.) In early use. Properly 'capital,' or 'chattel,' i.e. property, without necessary reference to live stock. The ME. words cattel and chattel are mere variants of one and the same word, and alike mean 'property.' Spelt catel, Havelok, 225; Layamon, iii. 232, later text. Spelt chattel, Old Eng. Homilies, i. 271; chetal, Ancrer Kniwe, p. 224.—ONorthF. catel, OF. chattel.—Late L. capitale, also capitūle, capital, property, goods; neut. sb. formed from adj. capitālis. [Whence Late L. unum capitūle, i.e. live stock, cattle. Capitūle also meant the 'capital' or principal of a debt.]—L. capitālis, excellent, capital; lit. belonging to the head.—L. caput (decl. stem capit-), the head; see Capital (2). ¶ Hence it appears that capital is the Latin form, and cattle, chattel are the North and Central French forms, of the same word. From chattel is formed a pl. chattels, in more common use than the singular. CATTY, a weight; see under Caddy.

CAUCUS, a name applied to a private meeting of the representatives of a political party. (American Indian?) We first hear of a caucus-club in 1763. The origin of the name is obscure; but Dr. Trumbull (Proc. Amer. Philol. Association, 1872) shows the probability of its being an adaptation of an Algonkin word meaning to speak, counsel, incite; whence kaw-kaw-naw, a counsellor. 'Their elders, called caucawwassoughes.' Capt. Smith's Works, ed. Arber, p. 347; cf. p. 377.

CAUDLE, a warm drink for the sick. (F.—L.) In Shak. L. L. L. iv. 3. 174. 'A caudle, potio;' Levins, col. 56 (A.D. 1570). But found much earlier, viz. in Rob. of Glouc, p. 561, l. 11767.—ONorthF. caudel, OF. chaudel, a sort of warm drink.—OF. chaud, formerly chald, hot; with adj. suffix -el, properly dimin., as in L. -ellus.—Late L. caldus, hot, a contr. form of calidus; Quintilian, i. 6. 10.

'Reticula, a lytell nette or kalle;' Prompt. Parv. p. 270, note 1. Chaucer, C. T. 6600 (D 1018). And see Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 258 (1327). —OF. cale, 'a kind of little cap;' Cot. Of unknown origin. Cf. kelle, reticulum; Prompt. Parv. p. 270.

CAULDRON; see Caldron.

CAULIFLOWER, a variety of the cabbage. (F.—I.) Spelt coliflor in Cotgrave, who gives: 'Chou, the herb cole, or coleworts. Chous fleuris, fleurs, et flor, the coliflor, or Cypres colewort.' Thus the word is made up of the ONorthf. col (OF. chol), whence colly; and flor, for OF. flori, pp. of OF. florir (F. fleurir), to flourish; the sense being 'flowered cabbage.' 1. The ONorthf. col (OF. chol, in Supp. to Godefroy) is from l. caulem, acc. of caulis, a cabbage, orig. the stalk or stem of a plant, cognate with Gk. καλός, a stalk, stem, cabbage; see Cole. [From the l. caulis was thus formed OF. chol, whence mod. F. chou, a cabbage. The corruption of col to colly was probably due to an attempt to bring the word nearer to the original l. caulis, an attempt which has been fully carried out in the modern spelling caulifl.] 2. The F. floris or fleuris is the pl. of fleurir, the pp. of the verb fleurir, to flourish; from l. florire, to flourish. See Flourish. We have also modified this element so as to substitute the sb. fleur (F. flower) for the pp. pl. of the verb. The spelling coliflower occurs in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, 1665, p. 400.

CAULK; see Calk.

CAUSE, that which produces an effect. (F.—L.) In early use. So spelt in the Ancien Kiwi, p. 316.—OF. and F. cause.—L. causa, a cause; better spelt caussa. Der. caus-ul, caus-al-ly, caus-al-ion, caus-al-ive, caus-ive. And see ac-cause, re-cause, re-causant.

CAUSEWAY, a raised way, a paved way. (F.—L.) A compound word; formerly causey-way; the word way being added to ME. cause, cause; later causey, as in Milton, P. L. x. 415; and in Berners' tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 413 (R.). Still earlier, cause occurs in Harboure's Bruce, ed. Skeat, xvii. 128, 140; causeway, xviii. 146.—ONorthf. caucir, OF. chawier (mod. F. châssier, Prov. causada, Span. calzada).—Late L. calciata, short for calciata via, a causeway.—Late L. calciatus, pp. of calciare, to make a road way by treading it down; from l. calcare, to tread.—L. cala (stem calc-), the heel. See Calk.

CAUSTIC, burning, corrosive, severe. (I.—Gk.) Properly an adjective; often used as a sb., as in 'your hottest causticks'; Ben Jonson, Elegy on Lady Pawlet, l. 54.—L. causticus, burning.—Gk. καυστικός, burning.—Gk. καίνω, fut. καύω-αι, to burn. Der. caustic, sb.; caustic-ly; and see cauterise.

CAUTERISE, to burn with caustic. (F.—Late L.—Gk.) The pp. cauterized is in Holland's Pliny, bk. xxxvi. c. 7.—MF. cauterizer, 'to cauterize, scar, burn'; Cotgrave.—Late L. cauterizāre, also found as cauterīre, to cauterise, scar.—Gk. καυρῖσθαι, to scar.—Gk. καυρῖσθαι, a branding-iron.—Gk. καίνω, to burn (above). Der. cauteris-at-ion, cauteris-m; also cautery (from Gk. καυρῖσθαι).

CAUTION, carefulness, heed. (F.—L.) ME. caucione, Rolt. of Glouc. p. 506, l. 10118. Spelt cau-yeon, K. Alisaundre, 2811.—OF. caution.—L. cautionem, acc. of cautio, a security; occurring in Luke, xvi. 6 (Vulgate) where Wyclif has caucione; cf. cautus, pp. of cautere, to take heed. Allied to Skt. kau-, wise. And see Show. Brugm. i. § 635. Der. caution-ary; also cautious (expanded from l. cautus, heedful), cautious-ly, cautious-ness; and see cauent.

CAVALCADE, a train of men on horseback. (F.—Ital.—L.) In Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, l. 1817.—F. caualcade, 'a riding of horse'; Cotgrave. Introduced from Ital. in the 16th century.—Ital. caualcata, a troop of horsemen.—Ital. caualcare (pp. caualcato, fem. pp. caualcata), to ride.—Ital. cauallo, a horse.—L. caballus, a horse. Cf. Gk. καβάλλω, a horse, nag; also W. ceffyl, a horse, Gael. capull, a mare, lech. kapall, a nag; all from Latin. See below.

CAVALIER, a knight, horseman. (F.—Ital.—L.) In Shak. Hen. V. iii. chor. 24.—F. chevalier, 'a horseman, cavalier'; Cotgrave.—Ital. cavaliere, a horseman.—L. caballarius, acc. of caballarius, the same.—L. caballus, a horse (above). Der. cavalier, adj.; cavalier-ly. Doublet, chevalier, q. v.

CAVALRY, a troop of horse. (F.—Ital.—L.) Spelt cavallerie in Holland's Ammannius, p. 181 (R.)—MF. cavallerie, in Cotgrave, who explains it by 'horsemanship, also, horsemen'.—Ital. cavalleria, knighthood; also cavalry.—Ital. cavaliere, a chevalier, knight (above). Doublet, chivalry, q. v.

CAVE, a hollow place, den. (F.—I.) In early use; see Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 1137.—OF. cave, a cave; Folk-L. cava.—L. cauus, hollow. Cf. Gk. κῆρα, a cavity, a hollow.—GK. κευ, to swell, to hollow out. Der. cav-ly; cav-er (L. caerna), cavern-ous. From the same root, con-cave, ex-cave-at; cage, q. v.

CAVE IN. (E.) A first notice, as a literary phrase, in America, in 1796; but borrowed from prov. E. cave, or fade in, found in many dialects, esp. in Linc. and East Anglia; see F. D. D. Influenced by association with cave, as if the ground were hollow. Wedgwood shows that cave is here a corruption of calve (the pronunciation of cave being formerly much the same as that of the modern pronunciation of calve). 'Properly to calve in, as it is still pronounced in Lincolnshire. It is said of a steep bank of earth at which men are digging, when a portion of the wall of earth separates and falls in upon them, the falling portion being compared to a cow dropping her calf.' He then cites 'the rock calved in upon him'; N. and Q. 4 S. xii. 166; also 'Tak heed, lad, there's a cauf-a-comin'; Peacock's Linc. Gloss. E. D. S. s. v. cauf. He suggests that the word was introduced by Dutch navvies (which is unnecessary, as it may well be native), and adds: 'This explanation of the expression is rendered certain by the W. Flanders inkalven, used in exactly the same sense. De gracht kalf in, the ditch caves in.—De Ho, W. Flem. Dict.' But the phrase also occurs in E. Friesland; and Koolman cites kalfen, to calve as a cow, also to fall in, as in de slot-kante kalf in, the brink of the ditch caves in; and further, kalfen in E. Friesland means (1) to cave in, (2) to skip like a calf. Cf. Du. uit-kalven, to fall or shoot out, said of the sides of a cutting or the like. In Northamptonshire, when the earth is expected to fall, it is commonly said, 'we shall have a calf.' E. D. D., s. v. Calve. See Caif.

CAVEAT, a notice given, a caution. (L.) 'And gave him also a special caueat;' Bacon's life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumly, p. 85. From the l. caueat, let him beware.—L. cautere, to beware, take heed. See Cautious.

CAVIARE, the roe of the sturgeon, pressed and salted; as a relish. (F.—Ital.) In Shak. Hamlet, ii. 2. 457; see the article on it in Nares.—F. caviar, formerly also spelt caviol (Hatzfeldt).—Ital. caviaro, in Florio, who explains it by 'a kind of salt meat made of the roes of fishes, used in Italy'; also spelt caviade. Of unknown origin; the Turk. kahyâr, given as the equivalent of E. caviare in Redhouse's Eng.-Turkish Dictionary, is borrowed from Italian. [It is made in Russia; but the Russian name is ikra.]

CAVILL, to raise empty objections. (F.—L.) Spelt cavill (u for v), in Udall, on St. Mark, c. 2. vv. 6-12; cavil, Levins, 126. 47. The sb. cavillation occurs early; spelt cavillaciōne (u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 7718 (D 2136).—MF. caviller, 'to cavill, wrangle, reason crossly'; Cot.—L. cavillari, to banter.—L. cavilla, a jeering, cavilling. Der. cavill-er.

CAVY, CAVEY, a rodent quadruped. (F.—Carib.) 'The long-nosed cavy;' Steedman's Surinam, ii. 153.—F. cavé (Littre); a modification of cabiai, the Caribbean name in French Guiana (N. E. D.); allied to Brazil. capibara, q. v. Cf. cavia cuboya, a kind of rabbit; Hist. Brasilia, p. 124.

CAW, to make a noise like a crow. (E.) Shak. Mid. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 22. The word is merely imitative, and may be classed as English. Cf. Du. kaawe, a jackdaw, Dan. kaw, Swed. kaj, a jackdaw; all from imitation of the cry of the bird. See Chough.

CAYYENNE, the name of a pepper. (Brazil.) Cayenne is a later spelling, due to a popular etymology; early spellings are cayin, kayin, chian, &c. 'Tis Chian pepper indeed;' Garrick, A Peep behind the Curtain, A. 1 (1767). From the Tupi (Brazilian) kayenne; N. E. D.

CAYMAN, CAIMAN, an American alligator. (Caribbean.) 'Lezards or Caymans;' F. G., tr. of Acosta (1604), bk. iii. c. 15, p. 165. (There are three islands called Cayman to the S. of Cuba.) Span. cayman, caiman; F. caiman.—Galibi (Mainland Carib) cayman, in Martini's Dict.; F. Carib. caiyunman, Dict. F.-Carib by P. R. Breton (1661), p. 13, col. 1. Not acayman, as in Littre.

CEASE, to give over, stop, end. (F.—L.) ME. cessen, P. Plowman, B. vi. 181; vii. 117; iv. 1.—F. cesser.—L. cessare, to loiter, go slowly, cease; frequent, of cider (pp. cessus), to go away, yield, give place. See Cede. Der. cess-ly, cess-less-ly, also cessat-ion (from L. cessatium, acc. of cessatio, a tarrying, cf. cessare, pp. of cessare).

CEDAR, a large fine tree. (L.—Gk.) In very early use. AS. ceder-beam, a cedar-tree; Ælfric's Homilies, ed. Thorpe, ii. 578.—L. cedrus.—Gk. κέδρος. Der. cedar-ous; Milton, Comus, gr. 578.

CEDE, to give up, to yield. (L.) A late word in the transitive use; not in Pope's poems. It occurs in Drummond's Travels (1754), p. 256 (Todd). [Probably derived from the L. rather than from the l. cedere.]—L. cedere, pp. cessus, to yield. Der. cess-ion. ¶ From the L. cedere we have many derivatives; such as cede, accede, concede, exceed, intercede, precede, proceed, recede, secede, succeed, and the derivatives. Also retrocedere, decede, abcede, necesse, predecessor, &c.

CEDELLA, a mark under the letter c (ç), to indicate that it has the sound of s, z, or th, not k. (Span.—Ital.—Gk.) In Minshew, Span. Gram. (1623), p. 6. The symbol was derived from the sign for z.—Span. cedilla (Pineda).—Ital. zediglia (Dierx).—Gk. ζέδω.

CEIL, CIEL, to line the inner roof of a room. (F.—L.) Older form syle. 'And the greater house he syled with fyre-tree;' Bible, 1551, 2 Chron. iii. 5 (K.). Also spelt syle (Minshew), and ciel, as in most modern Bible. ME. ceelen; as in 'Ceelny wythe syllyre, celo'; Prompt. Parv. p. 65; and see p. 452. The sb. is seeling in North's Plutarch, p. 36; and ceiling in Milton, P. L. xi. 743 (R.) See cielo, ceiling in the Bible Wordbook, by Eastwood and Wright. β. The verb to ciel, settle, or style is closely connected with the sbs. celure or selure, and style of cyll, a canopy, as in: 'The chamber was hang'd of [with] red and of blew, and in it was a cyll of state of cloth of gold.' Fyancells of Margaret, dau. of K. Hen. VII, to Jas. of Scotland (R.) The verb to style meant to canopy, to hang with canopies, as in: 'All the tent within was *style*d with clothe of gold and blew velvet.' Ifall, Hen. VIII, an. 5, § 30. γ. The word was afterwards extended so as to include the notion of covering with side-hangings, and even to that of providing with wainscoting. Cotgrave has: 'Plancher, a boarded floor; also, a ceiling of boards.' It seems to be connected with the idea of canopy, and with L. caelum, used in the sense of ceiling in the 13th century; Way's note to Prompt. Parv. p. 65. — MF. ciel, pl. ciels, which Cotgrave explains by: 'a canopy for . . . a bed; also, the canopy that is carried over a prince as he walks in state; also, the inner roof [i. e. ceiling] of a room of state.' [This word is precisely the same as the F. ciel, heaven, pl. cieux: though there is a difference of usage. The Ital. cielo also means (1) heaven, (2) a canopy, (3) a ceiling; see Florio; and Minshew explains Span. cielo as 'the heaven, the sky, the tester of a bed.'] — L. caelum, heaven, a vault; a 'genuine Lat. word, not to be written with oe.' Curtius, l. 193. ¶ The derivation appears to be tolerably certain, but many efforts have been made to render it confused. The word has no connexion with F. sill; nor with F. seal; nor with F. siller, to seel up the eyes of a hawk (from L. alium, an eyelid); nor with L. celare, to hide; nor with AS. þel, a plank. Yet all these have been needlessly mixed up with it by various writers. It has, however, certainly been influenced by the L. celare, to emboss, which is the word intended by the entry 'celo' in the Prompt. Parvulorum; and it was confused with the sb. celure (selure, syllure), from a F. form due to the Late L. caeliſtura, a vaulted roof, a derivative of that verb. And perhaps, in Late L., celare was meant to be a derivative of calum. See calum in Ducange, misspelt caelum in the latest edition (1883). The other words are not at all to be considered. Der. ceiling.

CELANDINE, a plant; swallow-wort. (F. — Late L. — Gk.) Orig. the greater celandine. It occurs in Cotgrave. It is spelt cellandine in Palsgrave. But Gower has celidaine. C. A. iii. 131, bk. vii. l. 1370. — F. celidaine, the herb celandine, tetter-wort, swallow-wort; also spelt celidaine by Cotgrave. — Late L. chelidonium (the botanical name). — Gk. χελιδών, swallow-wort; neut. from χελιδώνος, adj., relating to swallows. — Gk. χελιδών (stem χελιδών-), a swallow. ¶ The n before d is intrusive, like n before g in messenger, for mesenger.

CELEBRATE, to render famous, honour. (L.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 84. 'Chaucer has the adj. celebrable, noted, in his tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 9, 48; b. iv. met. 7, 20. — L. celebratus, pp. of celebrare, to frequent; also, to solemnise, honour. — L. celebr, frequented, popular; also written celebris. Der. celebrat-ion; celebrat-ly (from L. celebrat-ia, sb., from the adj. celebris).

CELERITY, quickness, speed. (F. — L.) In Shak. Meas. v. 399. — F. celerité, 'celerity, speediness'; Cotgrave. — L. celeritatem, acc. of celeritas, speed. — L. celer, quick; Gk. κῆλξ, a runner. — ✓QEL, to drive; Brugm. i. § 633; cf. Skt. kal, to drive, urge on.

CELERY, a vegetable; regarded as a kind of parsley. (F. — Ital. — L. — Gk.) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. — F. celeri, introduced from prov. Ital. celeri, a Piedmontese word [bracketed]; where r must stand for an older n; cf. Mital. seleni, pl. of seleno, parsley (Florio). — L. selino, parsley. — Gk. κῆλινος, a kind of parsley. CHAPS, CHOPS, the jaws. (E.) In Shak. Macb. i. 2. 22. The sing. appears in the compounds chaffallen, i.e. with shunkun jaw, or dropped jaw, Hamlet, v. 1. 212; chappless, without the (lower) jaw. Hamlet, v. 1. 97. Of disputed origin; but the double form, and the late appearance of the sb., show that it is a mere derivative of the verb chap, chop, to cut, hack. Cf. prov. E. chap, to mash; chapper, an instrument for mashing potatoes; chop, to break small, pulverise, chop, sb., food for horses, of chopped hay, &c. See Chap (1). ¶ Possibly suggested by prov. E. chaff, chaff, the jaw; which is from Icel. kjafir (pron. kjafir), Swed. käft, the jaw; but this supposition is not necessary.

CHAPTER, a division of a book; a synod or corporation of the clergy of a cathedral church. (F.—L.) Short for chapitre, q.v. ME. chapitre, in very early use. The pl. chapters, in the sense of chapters of a book, occurs in the Ancien Riwle, p. 14. The comp. chapitre-hous (spelt chapitre-hous) occurs in Piers Ploughman's Crede, ed. CHAR (1), to turn to charcoal. (E.) In Boyle's Works, v. ii. p. 141, we read: 'His profession . . . did put him upon finding a way of charring sea-coal, wherein it is in about three hours . . . brought to charcoal; of which having . . . made him take out some pieces, . . . I found them upon breaking to appear well char'd' (K). First found in 1679, in Plot's Staffordshire, p. 148 (ed. 1686): 'They have a way of charring it [coal], if I may so speak without a solecism, in all particulars the same as they do wood.' It thus appears to be a back-formation from char-coal, which is in much earlier use; see Charcoal.

CHAR (2), a turn of work. (E.) Also chare; and does the meanest char.? Ant. and Cleop. iv. 15. 75; cf. v. 2. 231. Also chewre, as in: 'Here's two chewres char'd, i. e. two jobs done, Beaumont and Fletcher, Love's Cure, iii. 2. Also chore, a prov. E. form which is also a modern Americanism. Cf. mod. E. 'to go o'-charing'; and see my note to The Two Noble Kinsmen, iii. 2. 21; and see Nares. ME. cherr, chaur, cher, char; of which Mätzner gives abundant examples. It means: (1) a time or turn; Ancien Riwle, p. 408; (2) a turning about, Bestiary, 643 (in Old Eng. Misc. ed. Morris); (3) a movement; Body and Soul, 158 (in Mätzner's Sprachproben); (4) a piece or turn of work, Politi. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 341; Towneley Myst. p. 106. AS. cierr, cyrr, a turn, space of time, period; Grein, i. 180; whence cierran, cyrran, to turn; id. AS. cierr (also ceir) answers to a Teut. type karriz*, kurziz*. Hence it is difficult to connect it with Du. keer, a turn, time, circuit; or with G. kehren, to turn, which seem to be from an unrelated stem kair-*; see Franck. Der. char woman.

CHAR (3), a kind of fish. (C.) The belly is of a red colour; whence its name. 'Chare, a kind of fish'; Kersey's Dict. 2nd ed. 1715. 'Chare, a kind of fish, which breeds most peculiarly in Winandermere in Lancashire'; Phillips, World of Words, ed. 1658. [The W. name is torguck, i. e. red-bellied; from tor, belly, and cock, red.] Of Celtic origin; cf. (obsolete) Gael. ceara, red, blood-coloured, from cear, blood; Irish cear, sb., blood, adj. red, ruddy. (Doubtful)

CHARACTER, an engraved mark, sign, letter. (F.—Gk.) In Shak. Meas. iv. 2. 208; and, as a verb, As You Like It, iii. 2. 6. [Shak. has charact, Meas. v. 56; which answers to the common ME. caract, carvet, Wyclif, Rev. xx. 4; from OF. caracte, recorded in Godefroy as a variant of characte. This is merely a clipped form of the same word.]—L. characteris, a sign or mark engraved.—Gk. χαρακτήρ, an engraved or stamped mark.—Gk. χαρακτεῖν (= χαράσσειν), to furrow, to scratch, engrave. Brugmann, i. § 605 (3). Der. character-ise, character-istic, character-istic-al-ly.

CHARADE, a sort of riddle. (F.—Prov.) Modern; and borrowed from F. charade, a word introduced into French from Provençal in the 18th century; Brachet. Hatfield gives the Prov. form as charrado, orig. 'talk'; from the verb charra, to talk. Cf. Languedoc charrado, grumbling, from chara, to grumble (D'Hombres). Cf. also Span. charrada, 'a speech or action of a clown'; from Span. (and Port.) charro, a churl, peasant. See also Körtig, § 1919.

CHARCOAL, the solid residue obtained from the imperfect combustion of wood, &c. (E.) ME. charcole, Gawain and Gr. Knt., 76, 875; and Prompt. Parv. β. The mod. vb. char, to burn partially, is evolved from the comp. char-coal; but this is not against a prob. derivation of the comp. from the old verb char, to turn; as no other origin seems possible. For the sense, cf. 'Then Nestor broiled them on the cole-turn'd wood'; Chapman's Odyssey, b. iii. 621. And: 'Though the whole world turn to coal'; G. Herbert's Poems; Vertue. ME. cherren, to turn, represents AS. cierran, to turn; see Char (2). And see Coal. ¶ The spelling charecole occurs ab. 1400, in Henslow's Med. Werkes, p. 135. 20.

(and F.) charger, to load.—Late L. carriāre, to load a car, used by St. Jerome; later, carroire (Brachet).—L. carrus, a car. See Car. Der. charge, sb.; charge-able, charge-able- ness, charge-able-y, charg-er (that which bears a load, a dish, Mat. xiv. 8; also a horse for making an onset). See Charge, Charger in the Bible Word-book. Also car, car-g.

CHARIOT, a sort of carriage. (F.—L.—C.) In Shak. Hen. V. iii. 5. 54; and in Trevisa, tr. of Higden, ii. 341. Cf. ME. chariet, Maunde-ville's Travels, p. 241. CHART, a paper, card, map. (L.—Gk.) Richardson quotes from Skelton, Carl. of Laurell, l. 503, for this word; but the word is hardly so old; chart in that passage is a misreading for charter; see Dyce's edition. However 'charts and maps' is in North's Plutarch (1580), p. 307 (R.); and 'figures and chartis, i. e. drawings and maps, occurs in H. v. 642's Governor (1531), bk. i. ch. 8. § 3.—F. charte, a paper, card; Cot.—L. charta, a paper.—Gk. χάρτιον, χάρτις, a sheet of paper. CHARY, careful, cautious. (E.) See Nares. ME. chari, full of care; hence (sometimes) sad. 'For turtle ledeth chary lif'—for the turtle leads a mournful life; Ormulum, l. 1274. (Not often used.) AS. cearig, full of care, sad; Grein, i. 158.—AS. cearu, caru, care; id. + G. karg, sparing; OHG. charog, from chara, care; MDu. karig, niggardly; EFries. karig, sparing. ¶ Thus chary is the adj. of care, and partakes of its double sense, viz. (1) sorrow, (2) heedfulness; the former of these being the older sense. See Care. Der. chary-ly, chary-ness.

CHASE (1), to hunt after, pursue. (F.—L.) ME. chacen, chacen; Will. of Palerne, 1207; Maunde-ville's Trav. p. 3.—OF. chacier, Picard chacier, to chase. Chase is a doublet of catch; see further under Catch. Der. chase, sb.

CHASM, a yawning gulf. (L.-Gk.) 'The chasms of thought'; Spectator, no. 471. = L. chasma, an opening. = Gk. chasma, an opening, yawning; cf. chasma, to gape. See CHAOS.

CHASTE, clean, pure, modest. (F.-L.) In early use. Chaste and chasteté (chastity) both occur at p. 308 of the Ancien Riwle. = OF. chaste, caste. = L. castus, chaste, pure. = Skt. chastha, disciplined; pp. of chā, to teach, govern, punish. Brugmann, i. § 193. Dor. chaste-ness, chaste-ly; chast-ly; also chast-en, chast-ise; see below. And see CASTE.

CHASTEN, to make pure, to correct. (F.-L.) ME. chastien, chasten, often written chasty in the infinitive (Southern dialect). [The final -en may have been suggested by the free use of the old disyllabic form chasty.] = OF. chastier, castier, to chasten, castigate. = L. castigare, to castigate, make pure. = L. castus, chaste. Dor. chastening; also chast-ise. See CHASTEN. Dor. chastise-ment, Aynb. of lawry, p. 17; formed from chastise in imitation of ME. chastiment (Ancien Riwle, p. 72), chastiment (Cursor Mundi, 26004), which is a derivative of ME. chastien, to chasten.

CHASUBLE, an upper priestly vestment. (F.-L.) ME. cheshile, F. Ploymann, B. vi. 12. = F. chassuble, which Cotgrave explains as 'a chassuble'. [The ME. cheshile points to an OF. chassuble.] = Late L. casubula*, later casubla, casubula, Duacange; also casubula; dimin. forms equivalent to Late L. casula, used by Isidore of Seville to mean 'a mantle', and explained by Duacange to mean 'a chassuble'. The L. casula means properly a little cottage or house; being a dimin. of ca, a house, cottage. Cf. Ital. casupola, casupola, a little house.

CHAT, CHATTER, to talk, talk idly. (E.) The form chat (though really nearer the primitive) is rare in Middle English, and came into modern use only as a familiar abbreviation of ME. chaterren (with one t). It first occurs in the York Mysteries, xxiii. 3 (ab. 1440). ME. chaterren, chaterren, to chatter; with a dimin. form chiterren, in very early use. 'Sparuwe is a chatternde bryd, chatererz cuer ant chirmed'; the sparrow is a chattering bird; it ever chatters and chirps; Ancien Riwle, p. 152. 'As eny swalwe chitering in a berne' [harn]; Chaucer, C. T. 3258 (Harl. MS.). The word is imitative, and the ending -er (ME. -eren) has a frequentative force. The form chatter is parallel to FFries. kwatieren, Du. kwatieren, to chatter, to warble; and chiteren to Scot. chutieren, to twitter, Dan. kvidre, Swed. quittera, to chirp. Dor. chatter-er, chatter-ing; chatt-y.

CHATEAU, a castle. (F.-L.) 'Fine chateaux in air'; Cowper, Sonnet to W. Hayley (1793). = Mod. F. château; OF. chastel. = L. castellum. A doublet of CASTLE, q. v.

CHATELAIN. (F.-L.) A derivative of F. château is châtelaine, used instead of chaîne châtelaine, a chain to which keys, &c. are suspended, orig. a chain to which a castellan's keys were fastened (Ilatzfeld). Here châtelaine is fem. of châtelain, adj.; from Late L. castellānus, adj. = L. castellum, a castle.

CHATELLETS, goods, property. (F.-L.) Used also in the singular in old authors. ME. chattel (with one t), a mere variant of ME. catel, cattle, goods, property. 'Aihwer with chattel mon mai lue cheape' - everywhere with chattels may one buy love; Old Eng. Homilies, i. 271. See further under CATTLE, its doublet.

CHATTER; see CHAT.

CHAW, verb, to chew; see CHAW.

CHAWDRON, entrails of a beast. (F.-L.) In Macb. iv. 1. 33. The r is intrusive, and due to confusion with F. choudron, a caldron. ME. choudoun, a dish containing entrails; see N.E.D. = OF. choudoun, also caldoun, caldun (Godefroy). = Late L. cauldūnus*, variant of caldūna, entrails. [Cf. G. kaldunen, entrails.] Probably from L. caldus, for calidus, warm (F. chaud). See CALDRON.

CHAWS, s.pl., another spelling of jaws; in the A.V. of the Bible, Ezek. xxix. 4; xxxviii. 4. So also in Udal's Erasmus, John, fol. 73; Holland's Pliny, b. xxiii. c. 2 (end). A by-form of jaw, due to association with the verb to chew or chaw. See JAW.

CHEAP, at a low price. (K.) Never used as an adj. in the earlier periods. The ME. chepe, cheap, cheep was a sb., signifying 'barter', or price.' Hence the expression god chep or god cheep, a good price; used to mean cheap, in imitation of the F. phr. bon marche. 'Tricolonius . . . Makth the corn god chep or dere'; Gower, C. A. ii. 168, 169; b. v. 1239. A similar phrase is so liht cheap, i.e. so small a price; Ancien Riwle, p. 398. We have the simple sb. in the phrase 'hire cheep was the wrse', i.e. her value was the worse [lcs];

Layamon, i. 17. AS. clap, price; Grein, i. 159; whence the verb clapian, to cheapen, to buy. = Du. koop, a bargain, purchase; goedkoop, cheap, ill. 'good cheap'; koopen, to buy; Icel. kaupa, a bargain; ill kaup, a bad bargain; gott kaup, a good bargain; kaupa, to buy; Swed. köp, a bargain, price, purchase; käpa, to buy; Dan. kiøb, a purchase; kiøbe, to buy; Goth. kaupjan, to traffic, trade, Lu. xix. 13; OHG. choufjan, MHG. koufen, G. kaufen, to buy; G. kauf, a purchase. ¶ Curtius (i. 174) holds that all these words, however widely spread in the Teutonic tongues, must be borrowed from Latin; so that OHG. choufo, a huckster, is merely the L. caupo, a luctator. But this is now held to be unlikely (Kluge, Franck). Dor. cheap-ly, cheap-ness, cheap-en; also cheap-man, q. v.

CHEAT, to defraud, deceive. (F.-L.) The verb is formed from the ME. chite, an escheat; to cheat was to seize upon a thing as eschated. The want of scruple on the part of the eschator, and the feelings with which his proceedings were regarded, may be readily imagined. The verb, in the modern sense, first occurs in Shakespeare, who uses it several times, esp. with the prep. of, with relation to the thing of which the speaker is defrauded. 'We are merely cheated of our lives'; Temp. i. 1. 59; 'hath cheated me of the island', id. iii. 2. 49; 'cheats the poor maid of that'; K. John, ii. 572; 'cheated of lecture'; Rich. III. i. 1. 19. In Merry Wives, i. 3. 77, Shak. uses cheaters in the very sense of 'eschators', but he probably rather intended a quibble than was conscious of the etymology. β. The ME. chete, as a contraction of eschate, variant of eschete, was in rather early use. 'Chete for the lorde, caduente, confiscarium, f-eca'; Prompt. Parv. p. 73. 'The kyng . . . seide . . . I lese many chetes, i.e. I lose many escheats; P. Ploymann, B. iv. 175, where some MSS. have eschetes. Hence were formed the verb cheten, to confiscate, and the sb. cheting, confiscation. 'Chetyng, confiscacio, fisco'; Prompt. Parv. p. 73. 'Chetyng, confiscacio'; id. For further information see ESCHATE, of which cheat is a doublet. The intermediate form appears in 'Achetyng, confiscacio'; Prompt. Parv. p. 6. ¶ He further remarks on the word in Trench's Select Glossary. See his clear example of the serious use of cheater with the sense of eschator. We also find a description of some rogues called cheatours in Awdelay's Fraternity of Vacabonds, ed. Furnivall, pp. 7, 8; but there is nothing to connect these with the cant word chete, a thing, of which so many examples occur in Harman's Caveat, and which Mr. Wedgwood guesses to be the origin of our word cheat. On the contrary, the word cheat seems to have descended in the world; see the extract from Greene's Michel Munchance, his Discoverie of the Art of Cheating, quoted in Todd's Johnson, where he says that gamblers call themselves cheaters; 'borrowing the term from our lawyers, with whom all such casuals as fall to the lord at the holding of his leets, as waives, strais, and such like, be called chetes, and are accusumably said to be eschated to the lord's use.'

CHECK, a sudden stop, a repulse. (F.-Arab.-Pers.) ME. chek, found (perhaps for the first time, but in a transferred sense) in Rob. of Brunne's tr. of Peter Langtoft. He has: 'for they did that chek' - because they occasioned that delay, p. 151; and see pp. 100, 225. Chaucer has chek as an interjection, meaning 'check!'; as used in the game of chess: 'Therwith Fortune seyde "chek here!" And "mate" in myd poynt of the chekkers, i.e. thereupon Fortune said 'check! here!' and 'mate' in the middle of the chessboard; Book of the Duchesse, 658. β. The word was clearly taken from the game of chess, according to the received opinion. [The game is mentioned earlier, in the Romance of King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, l. 2096.] The orig. sense of the interj. chek! was 'king!' i.e. mind your king, your king is in danger. = OF. eschec, echec, which Cotgrave explains by 'a check at chess-play'; pl. eschecs, the game of chess. [The initial e is dropped in English, as in stable from OF. estable, and in chess, q. v.] = Arab. shāh, lit. 'king'; which is merely an Arab. pron. of Pers. shāh (Devic). = Pers. shāh, a king, the principal piece in the game of chess; Palmer's Pers. Diet. col. 274; whence also shāh mād, check-mate, from shāh, the king, and mād, he is dead, id. col. 518; the sense of check-mate being 'the king is dead.' Dor. check, verb; check-mate; check-er, q. v.; chess, q. v.; escheker, q. v.; cheque, for check. ¶ The Arab. pron. of the Pers. word gave rise to Late L. scaccus; whence Ital. scacco; Span. jaque; Port. aque, check! (also shah); Icel. skák, G. schach; &c. The game was denoted by the pl.; Late L. scacci, Ital. scacchi, F. echecs, OF. eschecs. See CHESS.

CHECKER, CHEQUER, to mark with squares. (F.-Arab.-Pers.) The term chekky in heraldry means that the shield is marked out into squares like a chess-board. To chekker in like manner is 'to mark out like a chessboard'; hence, to mark with cross-lines; and, generally, to variegate. The verb is derived from the ME. chekker, cheker, or chekere, a chess-board; used by Rob. of Glouc, p. 102, l. 3067; Chaucer, Book of the Duchesse, 660. The word is still used in the plural form The Checkers, not uncommon as the name of an inn; see below. —OF. eschequier, a chess-board; also an exchequer. —Late L. scacchūm, orig. a chess-board; from scacci, chess. See Check, and Exchequer.

CHECKERS, CHEQUERS, the game of draughts. (F.—Arab.—Pers.) Sometimes so called, because played on a chesskerd board, or chessboard. As the sign of an inn, we find mention of the 'Checker of the hope,' i.e. the chequers on [or with] the hoop, in the Prologue to the Tale of Beryn, l. 14; and Canning, in his Needy Knife-grinder, makes mention of 'The Chequers.' See Larwood, Hist. of Sign-boards, p. 488; and see above.

Texts); AS. cēce, the cheek; of which the pl. cēcan occurs as a gloss to maxillās, Ps. xxxi. 12. We also find the Northumb. and Midland forms ceica, ceke, as glosses to maxillā in Matt. v. 39. —Du. kaak, the jaw, the cheek; Swed. käk, jaw, käben, cheek-bone, MSwed. and OFries. keke; NFries. keek; EFries. kake. Teut. type kēwōn-*, f.

CHEEP, to twitter shrilly, like young birds or mice. (E.) Levins (1570) has: 'To cheepe, pipilare.' Of imitative origin; cf. pipe.

CHEER, mien; entertainment. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. chere, commonly meaning 'the face'; hence, mien, look, demeanour; cf. the phr. 'be of good cheer,' and 'look cheerful.' 'With glad chere' with pleasant mien; Hali Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 33. 'Maketh drupie chere' = makes drooping cheer, looks sad; Ancien Kiewle, p. 88. —OF. chere, chiera, the face, look. —Late L. cara, a face, countenance, used by Corippus, a 6th-cent. poet, in his Paneg. ad Justinum (Brachet). Cf. Span. and Port. cara, face (not Ital.). Relationship to Gk. kápa, head, is doubtful. Der. cheerful, cheer-ful, cheer-fulness: cheer-less, cheer-less-ness; cheer-y, cheer-i-ness.

CHEESE, the curd of milk, coagulated. (L.) ME. chese, Havelok, 643; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 53. OMerc. cise, AS. cise (for earlier cēse* < cēsi*, with i-mutation); prehistoric OE. cēsi-* < cēisioz*. The pl. cīsas (cīsas in some MSS.) occurs in the Laws of Ine, sect. 70; in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, i. 146. —L. cāseus, cheese; whence also Irish cais, Gael. caise, W. caus, Corn. caus, cis; Du. kans, G. käse. CHEMISE, a lady's shift. (F.—Late L.) 'Hire chemise smal and hwit'; Reliquiae Antiquae, ed. Halliwell and Wright, i. 129; also in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, and Ser. p. 162. —F. chemise. —Late L. camisia, a shirt, a thin dress; whence also Old Irish caimise, shirt; Arab. qamis, shirt. Of unknown origin; hardly from Teutonic, but rather of classical origin, and allied to Chamber; cf. AS. ham, a shirt (O. F. Texts), G. hemd; Goth. af-hamōn, to unclothe. Der. chemise's.

CHEMIST, CHYMIST, a modern 'alchemist.' (F.—L.—Gk.) The double spelling (chemist, chymist) is due to the double spelling alchemy, nichymy. 'Alchymist' (alchymista) one that useth or is skilled in that art, a chymist; Blount's Glossographia, 1681. Chymist is merely short for alchymist, and chemist for alchemist; see quotations in Trench's Select Glossary. 'For she a chymist was and Nature's secrets knew And from amongst the lead she antimony drew'; Drayton's Polyolbion, s. 26, l. 374. [Antimony was a substance used in alchemy.] Dropping the al-, which is the Arabic article, we have reverted to the Gk. khymia, chemistry. Cf. Span. quimista, for alquimista. See further under Alchemy. Der. chemistry; and, from the same source, chem-ic, chem-i-al.

CHEERY, a well-known stone-fruit. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. chery, chiri (with one r). 'Ripe cherries manye'; P. Plowman, B. vi. 296; A. vii. 281. Cheri or chiri was a mistake for cheris or chiris, the final s being mistaken for the pl. inflection; the same error occurs in several other words, notably in pea as shortened from pease (L. pisum). Cherise is a NorthF. modification of OF. cerise; representing a Folk-L. ceresia*, ceresca*. —L. cerasus, a cherry-tree; whence also the AS. cyras. [We find the entry 'Cerasus, cyras-treum,' in Ælfric's Glossary, Nomina Arborum.] —Gk. κέρσος, a cherry-tree; see Curtius, i. 181, who ignores the usual story that the tree came from Cerasus, a city in Pontus; cf. Pliny, bk. xv. c. 25. Prellwitz connects κέρσος with κέρναια, a cornel-tree, and L. cornus; see Cornel.

CHERT, a kind of quartz, also called horn-stone. (E.) 'Flint is most commonly found in form of nodules; but 'tis sometimes found in thin strata, when 'tis called chert;' Woodward, qu. in Todd's Johnson (no reference). Woodward the geologist died A.D. 1738. First in Plot's Staffordshire (1679); 'beds of cherts,' p. 124 (1686). The word was probably taken up from provincial English. 'Cherty, [of] rocky soil; mineral; Kent;' Halliwell's Dict. 'Chirt, sb. (Durh. Derb. Nott.) a hard, flinty, stratified white or black substance;' E. D. D. Of unknown origin. Cf. Swed. dial. kart, a pebble; Irish ceart, a pebble.

A.D. 1300), Ps. xviii. 11, where the Vulgate has: 'et ascendit super cherubim.' The Heb. pl. is cherubim, but our Bibles wrongly have cherubims in many passages. The usual ME. form was cherubin, sing., as in Chaucer, Prolog. 624; with pl. cherubins. —Heb. כְּרֻב, כְּרֻבִּים, pl. כְּרֻבִּים (the initial letter being kaph), a mystic figure. Of non-Semitic, perhaps Accadian origin; see Encycl. Brit. s.v. Babylon. —A. L. M. Der. cherub-ic.

'pleasant leaf.' —Gk. χαίρ-iv, to rejoice; and φύλλον, a leaf. The Gk. χαίρειν is from GILER*, whence also E. yearn; and φύλλον is cognate with L. folium. CHEVRON, an honourable ordinary in heraldry, in the shape of a reversed V. (F.—L.) ME. cheuron, Book of St. Albans, pt. ii, fol. f. i, back. Usually said to represent two rafters of the roof of a house; I think it must be in heraldry, rather have had reference to the (gable-like) peak of a saddle, as there is nothing highly honourable in a house-roof.—OF. chevron, 'a kid, a chevron of timber in building, a rafter, or sparre'; Cot. Augmentative form of OF. chevre, 'a she-goat', id.—L. capra, a she-goat; see Caper (1). 'Many who choose to chicane.' Burke, on Economical Reform. OF F. origin. Cotgrave has: 'Chicanerie, wrangling, pettifoggling'; also 'Chicamer, to wrangle, or pettifog it.' B. Brachet says: 'Before being used for sharp practice in lawsuits, it meant a dispute in games, particularly in the game of the mall; and, originally, it meant the game of the mall: in this sense chicane represents a form cicannum*, which is from the medieval Gk. χικάνω, a word of Byzantine origin.' γ. This Late Gk. word is apparently borrowed from Pers. chigān, a club used in the game of polo; Palmer's Pers. Diet. col. 189; Kich. Diet. p. 545, col. 2. ¶ Diez supposes the word to be connected with OF. chic, little (cf. 'de die à chic, from little to little' in Cotgrave), and derives it from L. cicum, that which is of little worth, whence modi F. chiche, niggardly. See an article on Chic in N. and Q. 5. vii. 261; and see Chigo. Devic declares in favour of the Pers. origin.

See further under Cymbal. ¶ Perhaps the ME. chymbe-belle was a popular form for chymble, a variant of cymbale in Cotgrave; yet we actually find a Late L. cinba, a dinner-bell, in the Chronicle of Abingdon, ed. Stevenson; doubtless from L. cymbalum. Der. chime, verb.

Of unknown origin (not basma). The Sardinian acciamarra (in Diez), if for acciamarra*, suggests an Arabic origin.

CHIMNEY, a fire-place, a flue. (F.—L.—Gk.) Formerly, 'a fire-place'; see Shak. Cymb. ii. 4. 80. 'A chamber with a chymney'; *P. [La Brosse has quimpeze.] From the native name in Angola, W. Africa; see N. E. D. The Bantu form is kampezi;

'China, or China-ware, a fine sort of earthen ware made in those parts' [i. e. in China]; Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Named from the country. Der. Chinese, a native of China. Milton, P. L. iii. 438, has the pl. Chineses, correctly. The final -se has come to be regarded as a plural; and we now say Chinese in the plural. Hence, as a 'singular' development, the phrase 'that heathen Chinese'. Cf. cherry, pen, sherry, shay (for choise), &c.

CHINCHILLA, a small rodent quadruped. (Span. — L.) 'Chinchillas, like squirrels'; E. G., tr. of Acosta, bk. iv. c. 38. — Span. chinchilla; dimin. of chinche, a bug, from an erroneous notion that it had a fetid smell. — L. cinicem, acc. of cinex, a bug.

CHINCUGH, the whooping-cough. (F.) 'No, it shall ne'er be said in our country Thoud diest o' the chin-cough'; Beaumont and Fletcher; Bonduca, i. 2. It stands for chink-cough, a form found in W. Yorkshire; prov. Eng. and Scot. kink-cough or kink-host, where host means 'a cough'. Cf. Scot. kink, to labour for breath in a severe fit of coughing; Jamieson. It is an F. word, as shown by 'cincung, cacinatio' in a Glossary, pr. in Wright's Vocab. i. 50, col. 2; which shows that kink was also used of a loud fit of laughter. Kink is a nasalised form of a root kik-*, appearing in G. keich-en, to gasp, pant. Cf. Du. kinkhoest, the chincough, whooping-cough; M. Du. kiechhoest, kickhoest, the same (Kilian); Swed. kikhoest, the chincough; kik-na, to gasp, to pant; Dan. kighoste, the whooping-cough. See Chink (2).

Cf. Shin.

CHINK (1), a cleft, crevice, split. (E.) 'May shine through every chinke'; Ben Jonson; Ode to James, Earl of Desmond, l. 16. And see Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 66. Formed, with an added k, probably expressive of diminution (as in prov. E. chir-kie, the rift, from the base of ME. chine, a chink; cf. prov. Eng. chine, a rift in a cliff (Isle of Wight). 'In the chyne of a stone-wall'; Wyclif, Song of Solomon, ii. 14. — AS. cinu, a chink, crack; Ælfric's Hom. ii. 154. — AS. cin, weak grade of cinan, to split, crack (intransitively), to chap; 'cal rocinem', i. e. chapped all over, Ælfric's Hom. i. 336. +Du. keen, a cleft; also, a germ; M. Du. kene, a split, rift; kenen, to shoot up, as a plant, bud. Cf. G. keimen, to germinate; keim, a bud. β. The notion is that a chine signified originally a crack in the ground caused by the germination of seeds; and the connexion is clear between the AS. cinu, a rift, cleft, crack, and the Goth. keinan, to spring up as a plant, Mark, iv. 27; uskeinan, to spring up, Luke, viii. 8; uskeian, to produce, Luke, xiii. 6. CHINTZ, parti-coloured cotton cloth. (Hind. — Skt.) In Pope, Moral Essays, i. 248; ii. 170. Formerly chints, pl. of chint (N. E. l.). 'Two new pieces of chints'; W. Dampier, New Voy. i. 517. — Hind. chint, spotted cotton cloth; cf. chhintā, a spot; chhintni, to sprinkle. More elementary forms appear in chhit, chintz, also, a spot; chhitki, a small spot, speck; chhitni, to scatter, sprinkle. Chintz is accordingly so named from the variegated patterns which appear upon it. For the above words, see Duncan Forbes, Hindustani-Eng. Dict., p. 120. The simpler form chhit appears in Du. sits, G. zitz, chintz; and is derived from Skt. chitra-s, spotted, orig. visible, clear; from chit, to perceive. See Cheeta.

CHIP, to chop a little at a time. (E.) The dimin. of chop. ME. chypen, chypfen. 'I chyppe breed, je chappelle du pain; I chyppe wodie, je coeppelle'; Palsgrave. The sb. chip is a derivative from the verb, yet it happens to occur rather earlier; ME. chippe, a chip, Chaucer, C. T. 3746 (A 3748); spelt chip, Rob. of Brunne's tr. of Langtoft, p. 91. For the change of vowel from chop (older form chap), cf. clink with clank, click with clack. Lye cites for-cyppud (presumably for for-cippod) from a gloss to Cantium Ezechiel, where another gloss (in Sweet, O. E. Texts, p. 402, last line) has for-cyppud as a gloss to præcia. Ælfric's chypen, to cut. β. Cf. G. kippen, to chip money; Low G. hippen, to cut away; M. Du. kippen, to hatch chickens (i. e. to chip eggs) Hexham; MSwed. kippa, as a variant of MSwed. kappa, to chop; Ibre (s. v. kappa). See Chop. Der. chip, sb.

CHIROGRAPHY, handwriting. (Gk.) 'Chirograph (chirographum), a sign manual, a bill of ones hand, an obligation or handwriting'; Blount's Glossographia, ed. 1674. [The term chirograph is, however, rather formed directly from the Gk. than from the Late L. chirographum, a contract, indenture, or deed.] — Gk. χειρογραφειν, to write with the hand. — Gk. χειρ, for χείρ, the hand; and γραφειν, to write. The Gk. χείρ is cognate with O. Lat. hir, the hand; cf. Skt. hr, to seize; Curtius, i. 247. Der. chirograph-er, chirograph-ic, chirograph-ist; from the same Gk. χειρ — we have also chiro-log, chiro-mancy, chiro-podist; also chir-urgeon, q. v.

CHIRP, to make a noise as a bird. (E.) Sometimes extended to chirrup, by the trilling of the r. ME. chirpen, whence the sb. chirp-inge. 'Chyrrynges, or claterynges, chirkinge or chaterynges of byrds, garritus'; Prompt. Parv. p. 76. 'To chirpe, pipilare'; Levinus, p. 191. This ME. chirpen is a mere variant of ME. chirken. 'haucer has: 'And chirketh as a sparwe'; C. T. 7386 (D 1804). We also find the form chirmen. 'Sparwe cheatered euer ant chirmed' — the sparrow ever chatters and chirms; Ancren Riwle, p. 152. β. These forms, chir-p, chir-k, chir-m, are connected with the form chir-, or rather chir, which is an imitative word, intended to express the continual chattering and chirping of birds; cf. Du. hirren, to coo.

CHIRURGEON, a surgeon. (F. — L. — Gk.) Now always written surgeon, q. v. Shak. has chirurgon-ly, surgeon-like, Temp. ii. 1. 140. ME. chirurgian, Rob. of Glouc. p. 566; l. 11925. — OF. chirurgien; F. chirurgien, a surgeon; Colgrave. — OF. chirurgie; F. chirurgie, surgery. — Late L. chirurgia. — Gk. χειρουργία, a working with the hands, handicraft, art; esp. the art of surgery (to which it is now restricted). — Gk. χειρ, for χείρ, the hand; and εργειν, to work, cognate with E. work, q. v. On Gk. χειρ, see Chirography. From the same source we have chirurg-ic, chirurg-ical, words now superseded by surgical. ¶ The vowel u is due to Gk. ou, and this again to the coalescence of o and e.

CHISEL, a sharp cutting tool. (F. — L.) ME. chisel, chysel; Prompt. Parv. p. 76; Shoreham's Poems, p. 137. Other spellings are schesselle, scessel, in Wright's Vocab. i. 276. — AF. chisel, A. Neckam, in Wrt. Vocab. i. 118, l. 8; ONorthF. chisel, OF. cisel, mod. F. ciseau. Colgrave gives the verb ciseler, 'to carve, or grave with a chisel'; also, to clip or cut with sizers. — Late L. cissellum, acc. of cissellus, forceps (Ducange); but lit. 'a cutting instrument'; cf. Ital. cesello, chisel, answering to L. type cassellum*; also L. cis-urium, a cutting instrument. — L. cis-um, for cass-um, supine of cassere, to cut (cf. F. con-cise, pre-cise). See Cassura. And see Scissors. Der. chisel, verb.

CHIT (1), young of a beast, whelp, cub; also a child, brat. (E.) 'There hadde dicthes the yrchoun, and nurshede out litle chittes'; Wyclif, Isa. xxxiv. 15, where the Vulgate has 'ibi habuit foueam ericulus, et entruitiu catulos'; so that chit here means 'the young one' of a hedgehog. In modern times associated with Chit (2), as when applied to 'a slip' of a girl, and the like. Another form of kit, whence kitten. Cf. E. kit-ling, Icel. ket-lingr, a kitten; prov. E. chit, a cat (E. D. D.). See Kitten.

CHIT (2), a shoot or sprout. (E.) Halliwell gives: 'Chit, to germinate; the first sprouts of anything are called chits'. Holland, tr. of Pliny, bk. xiii. ch. 4, has 'the root or chit beginneth first to put forth'. Apparently a later substitute for ME. chite, from AS. cið, a germ, sprig, sprout; Grein, i. 161. Cf. Goth. uskeian, to produce as a shoot, from a Teut. root kei-, to sprout, whence ki-choz, m., as in AS. cið, OSax. kið, OHG. kidi, Bavarian heid (Schmoller), a young shoot. See Chink (1).

CHITTERLINGS, small intestines. (E.) Levinus (1570) has chitterling, chytterling, 'omasum'. See E. D. D. Cf. Low G. kut, G. kuttel, entrails; Du. kuit, spawn.

CHIVALRY, knighthood. (F. — L.) ME. chivalrie, chivalerye. In K. Alisaunder, l. 1496, we have 'with al his faire chivalrie' = with all his fair company of knights; such being commonly the older meaning. — OF. chevalerie, horsemanship, knighthood. — OF. cheval, a horse. — L. caballus, a horse. See Cavalry. Der. chival-ic, chival-ous (ME. chivalerous, Gower, C. A. i. 89), chival-ous-ly.

CHIVE, a small onion. (F. — L.) Palsgrave has: 'Chyve, an herbe, cive'. — Norm. dial. chive (Moisy); F. cive, 'a scallion, or unset leek'. — Cot. — L. cepa, an onion.

CHLORINE, a pale green gas. (Gk.) Modern. Named from its colour. The gas was discovered in 1774; the name was conferred on it by Sir H. Davy in 1810; Engl. Cyclopædia. From Gk. χλωρός, pale green; cf. Gk. χλόη, verdure, grass; χλός, green colour; Skt. hari-, green, yellow. Allied to Yellow, q. v. Der. chlor-ic, chlor-ide, chlor-ite; also chloro-form, where the latter element has reference to formic acid, an acid originally obtained from red ants; from L. formica, an ant.

CHOCOLATE, a paste made from cacao. (Span.—Mexican.) First in E. G., tr. of Acosta, 1604, p. 271 (bk. iv. c. 22); also in Pope, Rape of the Lock, ii. 135; Spectator, no. 54. R. also quotes from Dampier's Voyages, an. 1682 [ed. 1699, i. 60] that the Spaniards making chocolate from the cacao-nut. Todd says that it was also called chocolata at first, and termed 'an Indian drink;' for which he refers to Anthony Wood's Athenæ Oxonienses, ed. 1692, vol. ii. col. 416.—Span. chocolate, chocolate.—Mexican chocolatl, chocolate (Simcon). Wholly unconnected with the word cacao, of which the Mex. name is cacaull. Prescott confuses them.

CHOICE, a selection. (F.—Teut.) Not English, so that the connexion with the verb to choose is but remote. ME. chois, choys, Rob. of Glouc. p. 111, l. 17; l. 2415.—OF. chois, choice.—OF. choisir, to choose; ONorthF. cuisir. β. Of Teut. origin.—Goth. haujan, to prove, test; causal of kisan, to choose. See Choose.

CHOIR, a band of singers; part of a church. (F.—L.—Gk.) Also spelt quire. The choir of a church is so called because the choir of singers usually sat there. In the former sense, we find the spellings quir, quer; Barbour's Bruce, xx. 203 (l. 287 in Pinkerton's edition). We also find 'Queere, chorus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 420. Quire is in Shak. Hen. VIII. iv. 1. 90; but it is altered to choir in modern reprints. The spellings quire, quire resemble those of frere, frier (friar); choir is pedantic, and our prayer-books have quire still.—OF. cuer (Littre); MF. choeur, 'the quire of a church; also, a round, ring, or troop of singers;' Cotgrave.—L. chorum, acc. of chorus, a band of singers.—Gk. χορός, a dance in a ring, a band of dancers and singers; see Prelwitz. Doublet, chorus; whence chor-al, chor-al-ly, chor-ist. See Chorus.

CHOKE, to throttle, strangle. (F.). Thus doth S. Ambrose choke our sophisters; Frith's Works, p. 130, col. 1. 'Chekenyd or querkenyl, choaked or querkened, suffocated, strangulated;' Prompt. Parv. p. 72. The form cheke, to choke, occurs in Rob. of Brunne, Handling Synne, l. 3192; see Stratmann, s. v. cheoken, p. 114. [Cf. chese as another form of choose.] An E. word; Sommer gives 'accod, suffocatus,' but without a reference; yet ii-ecod occurs in Filic. Hom. i. 216. We also find AS. æ-cœow, to translate L. ruminatio, which the glossator hardly seems to have understood; see Voc. 179. 1. Thus the AS. form was cœcian, whence ME. chicken, regularly; also by change of cœ to cœi, as in the case of F. choose an ME. chiken, later choken (with short o, as in chock-ful) and subsequent regular lengthening. The Teut. base is heuk*. Perhaps chuck-le and Icel. hök, 'the gullet,' may be related. Der. choke-ful.

CHOLER, the bile; anger. (F.—L.—Gk.) The k is a 16th century insertion, due to a knowledge of the source of the word. ME. colere, bile; Gower, C. A. iii. 100; bk. vii. l. 459. The adj. colerik is in Chaucer's Prolog. 587.—OF. colere, which in Cotgrave is also written cholere, and explained by 'choler, anger,' . . . also the complexion or humour termed choler.—L. cholera, bile; also, cholera, or a bilious complaint (Hiny).—Gk. χολέρα, cholera; χολή, bile; χόλος, bile, also wrath, anger. The Gk. χολή is cognate with L. fel, and E. gall. See Gall (1). Der. chol-ic. Doublet, cholera, as shown.

CHOOSE, to pick out, select. (E.) ME. cheosen, chesen, chusen; of which chesen is the most usual. Spelt chus in the imperative, St. Marharet, l. 103; cheosen, Iayamon, l. 210. AS. cfoan (pt. t. cfoan), later form cfoan, to choose; Green, l. 160. AS. cfoan gave ME. chisen regularly; the E. choose is from cfoan (with fo for eo). + Du. kiezen; G. kiesen; Icel. kjōna; Goth. kisjan, to choose, also to prove, test. Teut. type heusan*, pt. t. husan*. Further allied to L. gustare, to taste; Gk. γεύσασθαι, I taste; Skt. jush, to relish, enjoy.—cf. GEUS, to choose, taste. Brugmann, i. § 602. From the same root, choice, q. v.; also gust (2), dis-gust.

CHOP (1), to cut suddenly, strike off. (E.) ME. choppen, to cut up, strike off. 'Thei choppen alle the body in smale peces;' Maunde-ville's Travels, p. 201. The imperative chop occurs in P. Plowman, A. iii. 253. A later form of Chap (1), q. v. Der. chop, sb., chop-er. CHOP (2), to barter, exchange. (E.) A variant of chap, to barter; due to the fact that chap, to cut, was also pronounced as chap. Further, this verb to chap seems to have been made out of chap-man, sb., a merchant. See Chapman. Hence also the plur. 'to chap and change;' we say also, 'the wind chops,' i.e. changes, veers.

CHOPINE, a high-heeled shoe. (F.—Span.—L.) In Hamlet, ii. a. 447. An error for chopine.—MF. chopine, chappin; Cotgrave has 'chappine, choppins, a kind of high slippers for low women;' OF. chopin, Godefroy.—Span. chapin, a clog with a cork sole; and see chapin in Minshew.—Span. chapa, the same as E. chape; see Chape. See Notes on Eng. Etym., p. 36.

CHOP, the jaws, cheeks; see Chaps.

CHORD, a string of a musical instrument. (L.—Gk.) The same word as cord, which spelling is generally reserved for the sense 'a thin rope.' Milton has chords, P. L. xi. 561. In old edd. of Shak., it is spelt cord.—L. chorda.—Gk. χορδή, the string of a musical instrument. See further under Cord.

CHOUGH, a bird of the crow family. (E.) MF. chough, in Chaucer, Parl. Fowles, 345. 'The crows and the choughes;' Maunde-ville, p. 59. The pl. choughen occurs about 1305, in E. E. Poems, ed. Furnivall, p. 76, l. 185. Not found in AS., which has the form cwō; we find 'Gracculus vel monedula, cwo;' Jelf. Gloss, Nomina Avium; and in O. E. Texts we find the strange forms ciae, chay. The various names imitate its cry; somewhat similar are NFries. kauke, a chough; Du. kaauw, a chough, jackdaw; Dan. kaa, a jackdaw; Swed. koja, a jackdaw. We also find AF. chouue, a chough, in Wright's Vocab. i. 145, l. 16; and even OF. choe, choue, kanue (Godefroy).

CHOUSE, to cheat; orig. a cheat. (Ital.—Turkish.) Now a slang word; but its history is known. It was orig. a sb. Ben Jonson has chiaus in the sense of 'a Turk,' with the implied sense 'a cheat.' In his Alchemist, Act i. sc. 1, Dapper says: 'What do you think of me, That I am a chiaus? Face. What's that? Dapper. The Turk was [i.e. who was] here: As one would say, do you think I am a Turk?' The allusion is to a Turkish chios, or interpreter, who, in 1609, defrauded some Turkish merchants resident in England of £4000; a fraud which was notorious at the time. See Richardson, French's Select Glossary, and Gifford's Ben Jonson, iv. 27. Gifford copied the story (without acknowledgment) from W. R. Chetwood, Memoirs of Ben Jonson, 1756; p. 15 (N. & Q. 9 S. v. 25). The pl. chouses occurs in Ford's Lady's Trial, ii. 2; and the pp. chous'd in Butler's Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 1010 (ed. Bell, i. 53).—Ital. chiaus, an officer of the great Turk (Florio, 1611).—Turk. chawush, explained as meaning 'a sergeant, a licitor; any officer that precedes a magistrate or other great man; a herald, a pursuivant, a messenger; the head of a caravan;' Richardson's Pers. Dict. p. 534.

CHRISM, holy unction, holy oil. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'Anoynted with the holy crisme;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 377 c. It occurs also in Gen. and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 2458. Hence chrisme-child, a child wearing a chrisme-cloth, or cloth with which a child, after baptism and holy unction, was covered. [The o is merely inserted for facility of pronunciation.] The spelling crisme or chrisme is due to a knowledge of the Greek source. It was formerly also spelt ereme or creyme, as in William of Shoreham's Poems, De Baptismo, l. 144 (in Spec. of Eng., ed. Morris and Skeat).—OF. creme, chrisme, explained by Cotgrave as 'the crisme, or oyle wherewith a baptised child is anointed.'—Late L. chrisma, sacred oil.—Gk. χρίσμα, an unguent.—Gk. χρίω, I grieve, rub, besmear, anoint. Der. chrism-al; chrisme-cloth, chrisme-child.

CHRIST, the anointed one. (L.—Gk.) L. Christus.—Gk. Χριστός, anointed.—Gk. χρίω, I rub, anoint. See Chrim. Hence AS. crisat, Christ; AS. cristen, a Christian (Boethius, cap. i), afterwards altered to Christian to agree with 1. Christiānus; also AS. cristnian, to christen, where the suffix -ian is active, so that the word is equivalent to cristen-ian, i.e. to make a Christian; also AS. cristen-dōm, cristenan-dōm, Christendom, Christianity, the Christian world; Boethius, cap. i. These words were introduced in very early times, and were always spelt without any k after the c. The k is now inserted, to agree with the Greek. Der. Christ-ian (formerly cristen, as explained above); Christen-dōm (i.e. Christian-dom, as shown); Christ-ian-like, Christ-ian-ly, Christ-ian-ly, Christ-ian-be; christen AS. crist-nian, explained above; Christ-mas, for which see below. The mod. E. long is due to F. influence.

CHRISTMAS, the birth-day of Christ. (Hybrid; Gk. and L.) ME. cristemesse, Aeynleite of Inwyt, p. 213; cristenmas, Gawain, l. 985; cristemasse, Chaucer, C. T., Group B, l. 126. AS. cristes masse, Chron. an. 1021 (MS. 11). From B. crist, i.e. Christ; and AS. messe (ME. messe), a mass, festival. See Mass (2). Der. Christmas-box; see Box (2).

CHROMATIC, lit. relating to colours. (Gk.) Holland has the expression 'never yet to this day did the tragedy use chromatic music nor rhyme;' Plutarch, p. 1022. And Dryden speaks of 'the third part of painting, which is chromatique or colouring;' Parallel bet. Poetry and Painting (near the end).—Gk. χρωματικός, suited for colour.—Gk. χρωματίζω, stem of χρῶμα, colour; closely related to Gk. χρῶς, skin, covering, χρῶς, surface; and allied to χρῆω, to rub over. Der. chromatics.

CHROME, the same as Chromium, a metal. (Gk.) Its compounds are remarkable for the beauty of their colours; hence the

CHRONICLE, a record of the times. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. cronicle (always without h after c); Trevisa, ii. 77; Prompt. Parv. p. 104. The pp. croneyld, i.e. chronicle, occurs in Sir Eglamour, 1339. The sb. croneiler also occurs, Prompt. Parv.—AF. cronele, Gaimar, 954; with unoriginal l; we also find ME. cronique or cronike, a word frequently used by Gower in his C.A., ll. 101, 817, &c.—OF. cronique, pl. croniques; 'chronicles, annals'; Cotgrave.—Late L. chronica, a catalogue, description (Duange); a sing. sb. formed (mistakenly) from the Gk. plural.—Gk. χρονικός, sb. pl. annals.—Gk. χρονός, relating to time (mod. E. chronic).—Gk. χρόνος, time. Der. chronical-er; from the same source, chronic, chronic-al; also chronology, chrono-meter, for which see below.

CHRONOLOGY, the science of dates. (Gk.) Raleigh speaks of 'a chronological table'; Hist. of the World, b. ii. c. 22, s. 11. Either from F. chronologie (Cotgrave), or directly from the Gk. χρονολογία, chronology.—Gk. χρόνος, for χρόνος, time; and -λογία, from λόγος, discourse, from λέγειν, to speak. Der. chronolog-ic, chronolog-ic-al, chronolog-ic-al-ly, chronolog-er, chronolog-ist.

CHRONOMETER, an instrument for measuring time. (Gk.) 'Chronometrum or Chronoscaphium perpendiculum, a pendulum to measure time with'; Kersey's Dict. ad. ed. 1715.—Gk. χρόνος, stem of χρόνος, time; and μέτρον, a measure.

CHRYSALEIS, a form taken by some insects. (Gk.) Given in Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731.—Gk. χρυσάλεϊς, the gold-coloured sheath of butter-flies, a chrysalis; called in Late L. aurelia (from aureum, gold).—Gk. χρυσός, gold. Prob. of Semitic origin; cf. Heb. hārūn, gold. The pl. is properly chrysalides.

CHRYSAETHUM, a flower. (L.—Gk.) In Lyte's Dodones, bk. ii. c. 30.—L. chrysaethum.—Gk. χρυσάινθρον, a marigold.—Gk. χρυσός, gold; ἄνθος, a bloom, from ἀνθεῖν, to bloom, related to ἀνθός, a flower, a bud.

CHRYSOLEITE, a stone of a yellow colour. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. crysolit, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 1009; with ref. to Rev. xxi. 20.—OF. crisolit.—L. chrysolitus (Vulgate).—Gk. χρυσόλιθος, Rev. xxi. 20; lit. 'a gold stone'.—Gk. χρυσός, for χρυσός, gold; and λίθος, a stone.

CHRYSPRASE, a kind of stone. (L.—Gk.) ME. cryspase [sic], Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 1013; crispase [sic]. An Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 98, l. 174; with ref. to Rev. xxi. 20.—L. chrysprasus (Vulgate).—Gk. χρυσόπρασος, Rev. xxi. 20; a precious stone of a yellow-green colour, and named, with reference to its colour, from Gk. χρυσός, gold, and πράσινος, a leek.

CHUB, a small but fat fish. (F.) 'A chubbe, bruscum'; Levinus, Manip. Vocab. col. 181, l. 29. [Sometimes said to be named from its large head, but it is rather its body which is thick and fat. Besides, the resemblance to AS. ceof, which signifies 'top, summit' rather than 'head', is but slight.] B. Not to be separated from the adj. chubby, i.e. fat; nor (perhaps) from the ME. chuffy, fat and fleshy; see Prompt. Parv. p. 77, note 1. Marston even speaks of a 'chub-faced fool'; Antonio's Revenge, A. iv. sc. 1. γ. The word is, doubtless, English, though the characteristic ch has not been explained. The prov. E. chub, a log of wood (E. D. D.), may be compared with prov. Swed. (and Swed.) kubb, a block, log of a tree; Icel. trí-kumbr, trí-kubbr, a log of a tree, a chump; Norw. kubbe, a log. These words are further allied to prov. Swed. kabba, kubba, to lop, Norw. kubba, to lop. Even more remarkable are Swed. dial. kubbing, chubby, fat, plump; Norw. kubben, stumpy. See CHUMP. ¶ The word chub does not appear to have been in early use; we commonly find the fish described as 'the chevin', which is a French term. Cotgrave gives 'Cheviniau, a chevin', a word apparently derived from chef, the head, and properly applied rather to the 'bull-head' or 'miller's-thumb', by which names Florio explains the Ital. capitone, derived from L. capito, large-headed; from L. caput, the head. Der. chubb-y (see explanation above); chubb-i-ness.

CHUCK (1), to strike gently; to toss. (F.—O. Low Ger.) We use the phrase 'to chuck under the chin'. Sherwood, in his Index to Cotgrave, writes 'a chocke under the chinne'. Chuck, to toss, was also formerly chock, as shown by a quotation from Turberville's Epitaph on Master Win Drowned (R., s. v. chock). Imitative; but prob. suggested by F. choquer, 'to give a shock'; Cotgrave.—Du. schokken, to jolt, shake; schok, a shock, bounce, jolt; allied to E. shock and shake. See SHOCK. Der. chuck-farthing, i.e. toss-farthing; Sterne, Tristr. Shandy, c. 10.

CHUCK (2), to chuck as a hen. (E.) A variant of cluck. Chaucer has chuck for the sound made by a cock, when he had found a grain of corn; C. T. 15180 (B 4364). The word is clearly imitative, like Cluck. Der. chuck-le, in the sense of 'cluck'; also in the sense 'to fondle'; both of which senses appear in Dryden, as cited by Todd. Cf. Norw. kukla, to chuckle, to cluck as a hen (Ross).

CHUCK (3), a chicken; Shak. L. L. v. 1, 117, &c. (E.) Merely a variant of chicken, q. v. Cf. Icel. hjúklingur, a chicken.

CHUCKLE, to laugh in the throat. (E.) 'Chuckle, to laugh by fits'; Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. The suffix -le gives it a frequentative force. The sense now refers to suppressed laughter; as if related to choke more immediately than to chuck. See CHOKE, CHUCK (2).

CHUM, a familiar companion. (F.—L.) The N. E. D. quotes 'my chum Mr. Hody' from Creech, Dedication to tr. of Theocritus, in 1684. This is the earliest instance. Origin uncertain. [Some say it is a 'corruption' of chamber-fellow, which seems incredible; and the Bremen Wörterb. identifies it with Low G. kumpan, (often shortened to kump), a familiar companion (from French), which does not seem to be possible.] Cf. prov. F. chumny, a chimney-sweep (which is from chimney); E. D. D. Surely for chimney-fellow, i.e. fireside companion (chimney—fireplace). Cf. Brand, Pop. Antiq. ii. 452; i. 232; and see Phil. Soc. Trans., 1902, p. 656.

CHUMP, a log of wood. (E.) 'Chump, a thick and short log, or block of wood'; Phillips, ed. 1706. A late formation; prob. affected by chop, clump, &c. Common in dialects. Cf. Norw. kump, a round eminence, a lump (Ross); also Icel. kumbr, as seen in trí-kumbr, a tree-chump, a log. Cf. Icel. kumbr, equivalent to kubbr, a chopping; from kubba, to chop. See CHUB. Der. chump-end, i.e. thick end.

CHURCH, the Lord's house. (Gk.) In very early use. ME. chirche, chirche, also (in Northern dialects), kirk, kirke. 'Chirche is holi godes hus, . . . and is cleped on bok kirika i. dominicalis'; the church is God's holy house, and is called in the book kirika, i.e. dominical; O. Eng. Hom. ii. 23. AS. cirice, cire; the pl. ciricean occurs in Gregory's Liber Pastoralis, tr. by Ælfred; ed. Sweet, p. 5; and see O. E. Texts. Cf. OSax. kerika, kirika; Du. kerk; Dan. kirke; Swed. kyrka; Icel. kirkja; OIIG. chiricha, MHG. kirche, G. kirche. B. But all these are borrowed from Gk. κυριακή, a church; neut. of adj. κυριακός, belonging to the Lord, from Gk. κύριος, the Lord; or (rather) from Gk. κυριακή, pl., treated as a fem. sing. (as in other cases). Κύριος orig. signified 'mighty'; from Gk. κράτος, might, strength. Cf. Skt. cāra-s, a hero; Zend cūra, strong. Brugm. i. § 474. ¶ The etym. has been doubted, on account of the rareness of the Gk. word κυριακή; but see the discussion in N. E. D.; and consider the high probability that the word must be Greek. Der. church-man; church-warden (see warden); church-yard (see yard).

CHYLE, juice, milky fluid. (F.—L.—Gk.) A white fluid, due to a mixture of food with intestinal juices; a medical term. In Sherwood's Index to Cotgrave we have: 'the Chylus, chyle, chile'; so that it was at first called by the Latin name, which was afterwards shortened to the F. form chyle (given by Cotgrave), for convenience. Both F. chyle and L. chylus are from the Gk. χυλός, juice, moisture.—Gk. χύνω (for χύνω), I pour.—GHEU, to pour; whence also F. gush, q. v. Der. chyl-ous, chyl-ae-ous.

CIDDER, a drink made from apples. (F.—L.—Gk.—Heb.) There is no reason why it should have been restricted to apples, as it merely means 'strong drink.' ME. sicer, cyder, syder. In Chaucer, C. T., Group B. 3245, some MSS. have sicer, others syder, sythir, cyder; the allusion is here to Judges, xiii. 7: 'cave ne unum bibas, nec siceram.' Sicer is here the L. form, and cyder the F. form.—F. cidre, cider; OF. sire, sudre, cidre (Supp. to Godefroy, s.v. Cidre).—L. sicera, strong drink.—Gk. oiespa, strong drink.—Heb. shkir, strong drink.—Heb. shkar, to be intoxicated. [The Icel. verb sindra, to glow or throw out sparks, is a derivative from sindr, not vice versa; and therefore does not help forward the etymology.] ¶ The spelling cinder has superseded sinder, through confusion with the F. cendre (with excrement d), which is a wholly unconnected word, from the L. acc. cinerem, accus. of cinis, dust. The F. cendre would have given us cender, just as F. genre has given us gender. See below. The correct spelling sinder (in use from the 8th century to the 16th) is not likely to be restored. Der. cinder-y.

Both are from the Heb. qinnāmōn, cinnamon; a word of non-Semitic origin; cf. Malay kayu manis, sweet wood, cinnamon; from kayu, wood, manis, sweet (Gesenius). ¶ In ME., cinnamon was called canel, from the OF. canelle, which Cotgrave explains by 'our modern cannell or cinnamon'; where 'cinnamon' is a misprint for 'cinnamon.' Ælfric, klacken. ¶ Du. klak, a crack; klakken, to crack, to crack (cf. Du. klakkebas, a cracker, a popgun); Icel. klaka, to twitter as a swallow, to chatter as a pie, to wrangle; MHG. klac, a crack, break, noise; cf. also F. claqueur. β. Evidently a variant of CRACK, q. v.; cf. also Swed. knaka, to crack, make a noise. Note the analogies; as clink; clank; click; clack; and again, as clack: crack: κλάειν; κλάειν. Cf. clap, clatter; also Gk. κλάειν, to sing aloud, Irish glag-an, the clapper of a mill.

CLAD, a form of the pp. of the verb to clothe, q. v.

CLAIM, to call out, for demand. (F.—L.) ME. clamen, clamen, clamen, to call for; Will. of Palerne, 4481; P. Ploverman, ll. xviii. 327.—OF. claim, accented stem of clamer (clamer) to call for, cry out.—L. clamare, to call out; a secondary verb, formed from the base cal- appearing in L. calare, to cry out, publish, and in the Gk. καλέειν, to convoke, summon. Similarly, in Greek, we have καλῶς, a call, καλέω, I summon.—√KAL, to make a noise, cry out; whence also Irish caileach, W. ceiliog, a cock; Stokes-Fick, p. 73. Der. claim-able, claim-ant; and, from the same source, clam-our, clam-our-ous, &c.; see clamour.

CLAM (1), to adhere, as a viscous substance. (E.) Dryden has: 'A chilling sweat, a damp of jealousy hangs on my brows, and clams upon my limbs'; Amphitryon, Act iii (R.). [This word is not to be confused with clen, to pinch, starve, as in Richardson. See clam and clen distinguished in Atkinson's Cleveland Glossary; and see Clamp.] The verb is due to confusion of ME. clam, sticky (see Clammy) with ME. clamen, AS. clāman, to smear, from AS. clām, clay (also a plaster), Exod. i. 14; cf. prov. Eng. clame, earthenware, clamer, a potter. The AS. clām corresponds to a West Germanic form klam-maz*, m. from a Teutonic root klei*, which is also the base of clay. CLAM (2), a kind of clamp or vice. (E.) Closely allied to clamp.

CLAW, the talon of a beast or bird. (E.) ME. claw, claw, clow; also claw, claw (from AS. clāw). 'Claw, or cle of a beste, ungula'; Prompt. Parv. p. 80. 'Oxō gāp o clōfenn fot and shādēp [divides] iisē clāwus'; Ormulum, 1224. AS. clawu, Voc. 307. 35; clā, Grein, i. 162; pl. clawas, clawes, as in 'clawe tōdādele', i.e. divided hoofs, Levit. xi. 3; also clēa (O.E. Texts); clēa, Grein, i. 163. †Du. klaauw, i. paw, claw, clutch, talon, weeding-hook; klaauwen, to claw, scratch. Cf. Icel. klá, a claw; klá, to scratch; Dan. klo, a claw; klá, to scratch; Swed. klo, a claw; klá, to scratch; G. klau, a claw; klau, to scratch. β. Claw is related to clew, a ball of thread, q.v.; from a base klaw-, 2nd grade of klew, to draw together; cf. OHG. kluwī, forceps. See Clew.

CLAY, a tenacious earth. (E.) ME. clai, clai, clay, clay. 'What a man hot herth [earth] and clay'; Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, i. 411. AS. clæg, in Ælfric's Gloss; Voc. 146. 19. †Dan. kæg, kleg, clay; Du. klei; G. klei. β. Teut. type klaī-jā*, fem.; from klaī*, and grade of Teut. root klei*, to stick; cf. AS. clām (for klaī-maz*), earthenware; Gk. κλαί-ός, sticky matter. See Cleave (2) and Glue. Der. lay-ey.

CLAYMORE, a Scottish broadsword. (Gaelic.) Spelt glaymore by Dr. Johnson, Journey to the Western Islands (Todd); but better laymore, as in Jamieson's Sc. Diet. — Gael. claidheamh mor, a broadsword, lit. 'sword-great'; where the dh is no longer sounded, and he mā is iv. The sound somewhat resembles that of clī in clī-ent, followed by the sound of F. env. in environ. β. The Gael. claidheamh, sword, is cognate with W. clwyd, a sword, Olirish claidhe; cf. also clad-ēs, slaughter, per-celler, to strike. The Gael. mor, great, is cognate with W. maur, great, Irish maur, Corn. maur, Breton mair, great, AS. murē, illustrious.

CLEAN, pure, free from stain. (E.) ME. clenē, clanē (disyllabic), ayamon, i. 376. AS. clēne, clīne, clear, pure, chaste, bright; Grein, i. 162. †OSax. clēni, clēni; OFries. klen; Du. klein, small; OHG. kleini, MHG. kleine, fine, excellent, small; mod. G. klein, small. β. The original sense seems to have been 'bright' or 'shining'; cf. Irish clé, shining, pure, clean; Stokes-Fick, p. 119; Brugmann, i. 196. Der. clean-ness, clean-ly, clean-li-ness, cleane (AS. clēansian, Grein, i. 163).

CLEAR, loud, distinct, shrill, pure. (F.—L.) ME. cler, cler. On morwe, when the day was clere; King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, i. 1978; cf. Floriz and Blancheffer, 280. — OF. cler, clair, clair, pure, right. — L. clarus, illustrious, clear, loud. β. Curtius remarks that the belongs to the suffix, as in mī-rus, so that the word is clī-rus. It is probably related to dāmāre, to cry aloud; see Claim. Cf. Gk. κλῆ-ρος, called, chosen; from κλέω, to call. Der. clear, verb; clear-ess, clear-ance, clear-ing, clear-ly; cf. claret, clarify, clarion.

CLEAT, a piece of iron used to strengthen the soles of shoes; a piece of wood or iron to fasten ropes to. (F.) The radical sense is 'clump', s applied to a firm and close mass. ME. clete, a wedge, also clite; Prompt. Parv. p. 81; (where clote is prob. an error for clete). As if from AS. clēaf (whence clēte* > clite); from a Teut. type klautaz*, n.; clearly seen in Du. kloot, a ball, G. kloz, a clod, lump, ball; the weak grade klut-* appears in CLOT, q.v.

CLEAVE (1), strong verb, to split asunder. (E.) The pt. t. is lave, Ps. lxxviii. 15 (A.V.), sometimes claw; the pp. is clowen, Acts, i. 3, sometimes cleft (Micah, i. 4), but the latter is unoriginal. ME. leoven, cleven, cleven. 'Ful wel kan ich kleuen shides'; Havelok, i. 917. AS. clēfan (pt. t. clēaf, pp. clōfen), Grein, i. 163. †Du. lieven; Icel. kljāfa (pt. t. kljaf, pp. kljōfnn); Swed. kljafa; Dan. løve; OHG. clibban, G. kleben. Teut. type kleuban*, pt. t. klauib*, p. klubanoz*. β. Perhaps related to Gk. κλύω, to hollow out, to engrave; L. clūbere, to peel. From †GLEUBH; Brugmann, i. § 762 1). Der. cleav-enge, cleav-er; also cleft, q.v. [But not cliff].

CLEAVE (2), weak verb, to stick, adhere. (E.) The true pt. t. is cleaved, pp. cleaved; but by confusion with the word above, the pt. most in use is claw, Ruth, i. 14 (A.V.) Writers avoid using the p., perhaps not knowing what it ought to be. However, we find t. t. cleaved in Job, xxix. 10; and the pp. cleaved, Job, xxxi. 7. ME. leovien, clivien, clieven, clieven. 'Al Egipte in his wil clievēd'; Genesis nd Exodus, ed. Morris, i. 2384. 'Cleaved faste'; Layamon, i. 83. AS. clifan, clōfan, Grein, i. 163; a weak verb, p. t. clifode, pp. clifod. †Du. kleuen, to adhere, cling; Swed. kläba sig, to stick to; OHG. kleben, G. kleben, to cleave to. All from Teut. base klīb-, weak rade of Teut. strong verb kleiban, pt. t. klāib*, pp. klībanoz*. rades of the strong form appear in AS. ōð-clifan, to cleave to; cf. Iso OHG. kliban, MHG. kliben, to cling to, take root; Icel. klifa, to limb, viz. by grasping the tree; Du. kliff, ivy. See Climb. [Observe the complete separation between this word and the preceding one; all attempts to connect them are fanciful. But we may dmit a connexion between E. cleave (2) and Gk. κλῆα, κλῆα, L. klēn, glue. See Clay and Glue.]

CLEVER, a large hook or crook, used by fishermen, and in playing off. (E.) From cleak, verb, to clutch or grasp; a Northern form allied to ME. clecken (pt. t. clachte), to seize firmly, grasp with hands or claws; Stratmann, p. 121. AS. form (not found) clēc(e)an*, pt. t. clēhte*. Apparently from Teut. base klai-, klei-; see Clay and Cleave (2); and not related to Clutch.

CLEF, a key, in music. (F.—L.) Formerly also spelt cliff. 'Whom art had never taught cliffs, moods, or notes'; Ford, Lover's Melancholy, A. i. sc. 1. F. clēf, 'a key. . . a cliff in music'; Cot. — L. clavum, acc. of clavis, a key. See Clavicle.

CLEFT, CLIFFT, a fissure, a crack. (Scand.) Spelt clift, Exod. xxxiii. 22 (A.V.); some copies have cliff; for clifts, Job, xxx. 6. 'Cliff, clift, or ryste, scissura, rima,' Prompt. Parv. p. 81; clifte in Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, bk. 4. pr. 4. l. 198. And in Cursor Mundi, 10842. The form cliff is corrupt; the final t distinguishes the word from clift. Apparently Scandinavian. — Icel. kluft, a cleft; Swed. kluft, a cave, den, hole; Dan. kluft, a cleft, chink, crack, crevice. β. The Icel. kluft is from the weak grade of kljūfa, to cleave, split. See Cleave (1). ¶ The mod. spelling cleft is due to the feeling that the word is connected with cleave, so that the word is now thoroughly English in form, though originally Scandinavian (unless there was an AS. clift).

CLEMATIS, a kind of creeping plant. (Gk.) 'Clema or Clematis, a twig, a spray; a shoot, or young branch: among herbalists, it is more especially applied to several plants that are full of young twigs'; Kersey's Dict. 2nd ed. 1715. — Late L. clēmatī, which is merely the Gk. word in Latin letters. — Gk. κλήματις, brushwood, a creeping plant; dimin. from κλήμα, stem of κλήμα, a shoot or twig. — Gk. κλέω, to break off, to lop or prune. Brugm. ii. § 661.

CLEMENT, mild, merciful. (F.—L.) Rare; in Cymb. v. 4. 18; and in Cath. Angl. (1483). — F. clement, 'clement, gentle, mild'; Cot. — L. clēmētē, acc. of clēmēns, mild. Der. clement-ly, clemency (clemencia, Gasconie, i. 52, The Recantation of a Lover, l. 9; from L. clēmēntia, mildness).

CLENCH, to fasten; see Clinch.

CLEPSYDRA, a water-clock. (L.—Gk.) 'They measured the hours. . . in glasses called clepsydrae'; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, bk. v. c. 18, § 2. — L. clepsydra. — Gk. κλεψύδρα. — Gk. κλέω, for κλέπτω, to steal, and ὕδωρ, water; from the constant flow of the water.

CLERESTORY. (F.—L.) 'And all with clere-story lyghtys'; Arnold's Chron. ed. 1811, p. li. 'Englaid glittering with many a clere story'; Skelton, Garland of Laurel, 479. It might as well be spelt clear story, since clere is merely the old spelling of clear. The pl. clere stories occurs in the Will of Hen. VI; Nichols, Royal Wills, p. 303. So called because it is a story furnished with windows, rather than because 'it rises clear above the adjoining parts of the building,' as sometimes said. 'The triforium, or series of arches between the nave and clerestory are called iblyndstoris in the life of Hp. Cardmery'; Oxford Gloss. p. 571; quoted in Bury Wills, ed. Tyms, note on p. 252. See Clear and Story (2).

CLERGY, the ministry, body of ministers. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. clergie, frequently used in the sense of 'learning'; [like F. clergie, from Late L. clericus, clerkship]; but also with the modern meaning, as: 'Of the clergie at London . . . a counsel he made'; R. of Glouc. p. 563, l. 11812. — OF. clergie, formed as if from a Late L. clēricia*, a form not given in Ducange. — Late L. clēricus, a clerk, clergyman. — Gk. κληρικός, belonging to the clergy, clerical. — Gk. κλήρος, a lot, allotment, portion; in eccl. writers, the clergy, because 'the Lord is their inheritance,' Deut. xviii. 2; cf. Gk. τῶν κληρῶν, A.V. 'God's heritage,' in 1 Pet. v. 3; but more especially Acts i. 17, where the lit. sense is 'the lot of this ministry.' Moisy has the mod. Norman clergi, the clergy. Der. clergy-man.

CLERK, a clergyman, a scholar. (F.—L.—Gk.) Orig. a clergyman; ME. clerc, clerk, Ancien Riwle, p. 318. AS. clere, a priest, A. S. Chron. an. 963. Either from OF. clerc, or immediately from L. clēricus, by contraction. — Gk. κληρικός, belonging to the clergy, clerical, one of the clergy. See further above. Der. clerk-ship; and, from the L. clēric-us, we have cleric, cleric-nl.

CLEVER, skillful, dexterous. (E.) Rare in early use. 'As cleverly as th' ablest trap'; Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1. 398 (first published A.D. 1663). It is not easier to find an earlier example. Sir T. Browne cites clever as a Norfolk word, in his Tract VIII (Works, ed. Wilkins, iv. 205); see my edition of Ray's Collection of Eng. Dialectal Words, Eng. Dial. Soc. pp. xv, xvii. The Norfolk word is commonly pronounced 'klav-ur', and is used in many various senses, such as 'handsome, good-looking, healthy, tall, dexterous, adroit' (Nall); also, 'kind, liberal' (Wilkin). β. Mr. Wedgwood ingeniously suggests a connexion with ME. cliver or clivre, a claw, Owl and Nightingale, ll. 78, 84, 270; in this case 'clever' would have meant originally 'ready to seize' or 'quick at seizing,' and the connexion would be with Lowl. Scot. clever (to climb), and cleave (2), to adhere. In accordance with this, the word cliver once occurs (in the Bestiary, l. 221, pr. in An Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris) as an adj. with the apparent sense of 'ready to seize,' or 'expert with the claws; cf. ME. clivers, claws, clutches, from AS. clifer, a claw. So also, in Dunbar, Feuntein Freir, 86, we find: 'Scho was so cleverous of her cluk, she was so skilful to seize in her clutch. The base clif- is the same as that of the AS. clif-ian, to cleave; to see Cleave (2). + EFries. klifer, cleaver; Dan. dial. kløver, kløver (Molbech); all for klifer, kliver; the Norw. kliva, to climb, becoming klive in Danish. Kalkar has MDan. kløver, sprightly, wily; so that the E. word may be of Scand. origin; cf. Dunbar's clever-ous. ¶ It is remarkable that cleave practically took the place of ME. deliver, nimble, Chaucer, prol. 84. But the words are not connected. Der. clever-ness.

CLEW, CLUE, a ball of thread. (E.) The orig. sense is 'a mass' of thread; then a thread in a ball, then a guiding thread in a maze, or 'a clue to a mystery'; from the story of Theseus escaping from the Cretan Labyrinth by the help of a ball of thread. Thus Trevisa, ii. 385: '3f eny man wente thider yn withoute a clewe of threde, it were ful harde to fynde a way out.' Cf. 'a clue of threde'; Gower, C. A. ii. 306; b. v. 5343. AS. cliewen, clýwen, a ball of thread; by loss of the final n. We find 'glomus, clýwen'; Ælfric's Gloss., ed. Sommer, Nomina Vasorum. And the dat. cliewene (cliewene) occurs in Gregory's Pastoral, sect. xxxv. ed. Sweet, p. 240. + Du. klusen, a clew; whence klusenen, to wind on clews (cf. E. to clew up a sail); OHG. chliuwa, chliuwt, chliue, M11G. chliuwe, a ball, ball of thread; MDu. klusen; and cf. G. knäuel (for knäuel*), a clew. Allied to L. glu-ere, to draw together, glu-men, a clew; from GLEU (Teut. kleu-*), to draw together. (F. Skt. glau-, a lump (Macdonell). See Clew. Der. clew, verb (Dutch).

CLICK, to make a quick, light sound. (E.) Rather oddly used by Ben Jonson: 'I hath more confirm'd us, than if heartning Jove Had, from his hundred statues, bid us strike, And, at the stroke, click'd all his marble thumbs'; Sejanus, ii. 2. EFries. klikken. An imitative word, derived, as expressing a slighter sound, from clack, by the thinning of a to i. This is clearly shown by the Du. klikkak, the clashing of swords, and klikkakken, to clack together, lit. 'to click-clack.' See Clack, and Clink.

CLIENT, one who depends on an adviser. (F.—L.) ME. client, Gower, C. A. i. 284, bk. iii. 160; P. Plowman, C. iv. 396. (F.) client, 'a client or suitor'; Cot.—L. clientem, acc. of cliens, a client, a dependent on a patron. Cliens represents cliens, one who hears, i.e. one who listens to advice; pres. pt. of cluerre, to hear, listen. The L. cluerre is cognate with Gk. κλυειν, to hear, and Skt. krū, to hear.—KLEU, to hear; whence also E. loud. Curtius, i. 185. See Loud. Der. client-ship.

CLIFF, a steep rock, headland. (E.) ME. clif, clef, cleve. Spelt clif, Layamon, i. 82, where the later text has clif; spelt clive, id. i. 81 (later text). AS. clif, a rock, headland; Grein, i. 164. + Du. klif, a brow, cliff; Icel. klif, a cliff; also kleif, a ridge of cliffs. We also find G. klippe; whence Du. klip, a crag, Dan. klippe, Swed. klippa, a crag, rock. ¶ Cf. AS. clif, cliff, with clifian, to cleave to; Icel. klif with Icel. klifa (pt. t. klif), to climb. The connexion is probable.

CLIMACTER, a critical time of life. (F.—Gk.) Used by Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 12, § 18. Now only used in the derivative adj. climacteric, often turned into a sb. 'This is the most certain climacterical year,' Massinger, The Old Law, Act i. sc. 1. 'In the year of his climacteric, sixty-three,' Sir T. Herbert, Trav. (1665), pp. 337–8. —MF. climactere, 'climacterical (sic); whence l'an climactere, the climacterical year; every 7th, or 9th, or the 63 year of a man's life, all very dangerous, but the last, most,' Cot.—Late L. climacter, borrowed from Gk.—Gk. κλιμακτήρ, a step of a staircase or ladder, a dangerous period of life.—Gk. κλιμαξ (stem κλιμαξ-), a ladder, climax; with agential suffix -της. See Climax. Der. climacteric.

CLIMATE, a region of the earth. (F.—Gk.) See Climate in Trench, Select Glossary. ME. climat; Chaucer's treatise on the Astrolabe, ii. § 39, l. 18; Maundeville, p. 162; Gower, C. A. i. 8; prol. 137. —OF. climat (F. climat), a climate.—Late L. climat-, stem of clima.—Gk. κλίμα, gen. κλιματος, a slope, a zone or region of the earth, climate.—Gk. κλίμαξ, to lean, slope; cognate with E. lean. See Lean (1). Der. climat-ic, climat-ic-al, climat-ic. Doublet, clime.

CLIMAX, the highest degree. (Gk.) Pottenham has climax; Arte of E. Poesie, iii. 19; ed. Arber, p. 217. 'Climax, a ladder, the step of a ladder, a stile; in Rhetoric, a figure that proceeds by degrees from one thing to another.' Kersey's Dict. 2nd ed. 1715.—L. climax.—Gk. κλιμαξ, a ladder, staircase; in rhetoric, a mounting by degrees to the highest pitch of expression, a climax.—Gk. κλίμαξ, to lean, slope, incline; cognate with E. lean. See Lean (1).

CLIMB, to ascend by grasping. (E.) Very common. ME. climben, Layamon, l. 37; pt. t. 'he clamb,' Ancrer Riwle, p. 354; 'the king... clam,' Rob. of Glouc. p. 333. AS. climban, pt. t. clamb, pl. climbun; AS. Chron. an. 1070. We find also the derivative clymman, Grein, i. 164. + Du. klimmen; OHG. chlimban, M11G. klimmen, to climb. β. The original sense is 'to grasp firmly,' as in climbing a tree; and the connexion is with Icel. klifa, to climb, AS. clifan, to cleave to. Streiberg, § 203. See Cleave (2), and Clamber.

CLIME, a region of the earth. (Gk.) In Shak. Rich. II. i. 3. 285.—L. clima, a climate.—Gk. κλίμα, a climate. Doublet, climate. See Climate.

CLINCH, CLENCH, to rivet, fasten firmly. (E.) ME. clenchen, 'Clenchyn, retundo, repando,' Prompt. Parv. p. 80. 'I clenche a nayle'; also 'I clynche nayles'; Palsgrave. 'The cros was brede, whon Crist for us theron was cleynt,' i.e. fastened; Legends of the Holy Rood, ed. Morris, p. 138. The pp. cleyn points to an infin. clenchen, just as the pp. dreyn is from drenchen, to drown. We also find ME. clenken, to strike smartly, Allit. Morte Arthure, l. 2113. This is the causal of clink, a by-form of cling, and means 'to make to clink,' to make to stick fast (see below). + Du. clinken, to clink, to rivet, clink, a blow, rivet; Dan. klinke, a latch, rivet, klinke, to clinch, to rivet; Swed. klinka, a latch, also, to rivet; OHG. chlanckhan, clenkan, MHG. klenken, to knot together, knit, tie; M11G. klinke, a bar, bolt, latch. Teut. type klankjan* (> klenkan*, klinkan*), causal of a type klinkan-* (pt. t. klank*), as seen in EFries. and Low G. klinken, klingen, to cling, to become drawn, to shrivel up. See Cling. Cf. ME. clengen, causal of clingen (Stratmann). Der. clinch-er.

CLING, to adhere closely. (E.) ME. clingen, to become stiff; also, to adhere together. 'In cloddres of blod his her was clunge,' i.e. his hair was matted; Legends of the Holy Rood, ed. Morris, p. 142. AS. clingan (pt. t. clang, pp. clungen), to shrivel up by contraction, to dry up; Grein, i. 164. Cf. Dan. klunge, to cluster, klunge, a cluster; Swed. klänge, a tendir, a clasper; OHG. clunga, a clew.

CLINICAL, relating to a bed. (F.—L.—Gk.) Sometimes clink occurs, but it is rare; it means one lying in bed; 'the clink or sick person'; Bp. Taylor, Sermons, Of the Office Ministerial; see too his Holy Dying, s. 6. c. 4.—F. clinique, 'one that is bedrid'; Cot.—L. clinicus, a bedrid person (St. Jerome); a physician that visits patients in bed (Martian).—Gk. κλινικός, belonging to a bed; a physician who visits patients in bed; cf. κλινική, his art.—Gk. κλίνη, a bed.—Gk. κλινειν, to slope, to lie down. See Lean (1).

CLINK, to tinkle, make a ringing noise. (E.) Intrans. 'They herde a belle clinke;' Chaucer, C. T. i. 12598 (C 664). Also trans. 'I shal clunken yow so mery a belle,' id. 12925 (B 1186). EFries. klinken; pt. t. klunk (orig. klank), pp. klunken, to clink. + Du. klinken, to sound, tinkle (pt. t. klunk; pp. geklunken); Dan. klinge, to sound, jingle, klingere, to jingle (frequentative); Swed. klinga, to ring, clink, tinkle; Icel. kling, interj. ting! tang! klingin, to ring. Clink is the nasalized form of clink, and the thinner form of clank. As clink: clank: clink. Der. clink-er.

CLINKER, a cinder, or hard slag. (Du.) 'Clinkers, those bricks that by having much nitre or salt-petre in them (and lying next the fire in the clamp or kiln) by the violence of the fire, run and are glazed over;' Bailey's Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1731. Evelyn, in his Diary, Aug. 19, 1641, refers to the clinkers, or sun-baked bricks, with which Amsterdam was paved. Not in early use, but borrowed from Dutch; however, the word simply means 'that which clicks,' from the sonorous nature of these hardened bricks, which tinkle on striking together.—MDu. clinkeker, 'a hard and sounding brick,' Hexham; Du. klinker, that which sounds, a vowel, a hardened brick; from klinken, to clink; cf. Dan. klinke, a hard tile. See above.

CLINKER-BUILT, applied to boats in which over-lapping boards are clinched together with copper nails. (E.) From clinker, a clinch-nail; which is from clink, to fasten together by a blow, a Northern verb of which clink is the usual form. See Clinch.

CLINQUANT, glittering. (F.—Du.) In Shak. Hen. VIII. i. r. 19. Said of spangles; lit. 'tinkling.'—OF. clinquant (Godfrey); pres. pt. of clinquer, to clink.—Du. klinken, to clink; see Clink.

CLIP (1), to shear, to cut off. (Scand.) ME. clippen, to cut off, shear off; Ormulum, ll. 1189, 1106, 1142.—Icel. klippa, to clip, cut the hair; Swed. klippa, to clip, shear, cut; Dan. klippe, to clip, shear. Cf. also NFries. klappe, kleppe, to clip, shear; which suggests a connexion with clap; with reference to the clicking of the shears. Der. clipp-er, clipp-ing.

CLIP (2), to embrace, to grip. (E.) In Shak. Coriolanus, i. 6. 29. ME. clippen, Chaucer, C. T. i. 2413; cluppen, Ancrer Riwle, p. 424. AS. clippan; Grein, i. 164. Teut. type kluppjan*; cf. OHG. kluppa, forceps, tongs; from the weak grade of the Teut. klep-—Idg. kleb-, to embrace, as in Lith. gleb-ys, an armful, OHG. kläfer, a cord of wood.

CLIPPER, a fast horse, a fast ship. (Du.) Modern; modified from Du. klepper, a steed.—Du. kleppen, to clap; with reference to the noise of hoofs. See Clap. Cf. Notes on E. Etym. p. 38.

CLIQUE, a gang, set of persons. (F.—Du.) Modern. From F. clique, 'a set, coterie, clique, gang;' Hamilton and Legros, French Dict. And see Hatzfeld.—MF. cliquer, to click, clack, make a noise; Cot.—Du. klikken, to click, clack; also, to inform, tell; whence klik- ker, a telltale. [It probably meant a noisy gang, a set of talkers; cf. F. claqueur, a clapper of hands.] The Du. word is cognate with F. click. See Click.

CLOAK, CLOKE, a loose upper garment. (F.-C.) Cloke in S. Matt. v. 40 (A.V.). ME. cloke, Chaucer, C. T. prol. 157; Layamon, ii. 122 (later text).—OF. cloke, cloque, also cloche; Godefroy, s. v. cloche.—Low L. cloca, a bell; also, a horseman's cape, because its shape resembled that of a bell; see Chaucer, Prol. 263. See further under Clock, which is its doublet.

CLOCK, a measurer of time. (F.-C.) ME. clot, clocke, Chaucer, C. T., 4434 (B.14). [Cf. AS. clugga, a bell (Lat. campina), Ælfred's tr. of Isid., iv. 23 (Hosworth).] The clock was so named from its striking, and from the bell which gave the sound. 'A great clock put up at Canterbury, A.D. 1292.' Haydn, Dict. of Dates.—AF. cloke, a bell, Gaimar, l. 2728; ONorthF. cloque, OF. and F. cloche, a bell; cf. MDu. clocke (Du. klok), a bell.—Low L. clocca, a bell. 'B. The origin of the word is disputed, and some difficulty is caused by its being so widely spread; still, the Celtic languages give a clear etymology for it, which is satisfactory. Cf. Irish clóg, a bell, a clock; clogan, a little bell; clógaim, I ring or sound as a bell; Olrish clóg, a bell; W. and Corn. clóg, a bell. y. In other languages we find Low L. clocca, cloca, a bell (whence F. cloche). Du. klok, a bell, clock; Icel. klukka, old form klōka, a bell; Dan. kløkke, a bell, clock; Swed. klōcka, a bell, clock, bell-flower; Du. klok, a clock, orig. a bell; G. clocke, a bell, clock; all, apparently, of Celtic origin. Celtic types klukko, klukki; Stokes-Fick, p. 103. Cf. Gael. clag, a bell; Gk. klāgēr, to clash. See Clang. Der. clock-work.

CLOD, a lump or mass of earth. (E.) A parallel form to clot, which has much the same meaning. 'Clodde, gleba.' Prompt. Parv. p. 83. Pl. clodde, Palladius on Husbandry, bk. ii. st. 3; bk. xii. st. 2. [But, earlier than about A.D. 1400, the usual spelling is clot. 'The clottis therof ben gold.' Lat. glebe illius aurum; Wyclif, Job, xlviii. 6.] But as clod occurs in compounds, as in clod-hamer, a field-fare; and clod in proper names; cf. W. Flem. klodde, a ball (as of tow), De Ho; Swed. dial. klodd, a lump of snow or clay. Teut. type klut-* from the weak grade of kleu-*, to stick together. See Clew, Cloud. Der. clod-hopper (a hopper, or dancer, over clods); clod-poll, clod-pate. ¶ Irish and Gael. clod are borrowed from English.

CLOG, a hindrance, impediment. (Scand.) The verb to clog is from the sh., not vice versa. The sense of 'wooden shoe' is merely an extension of the notion of block, clump, or clumsy mass. ME. clogge, as in: 'Clogge, truncus,' i.e. a block; Prompt. Parv., p. 83. 'Clogge, bilot.' Talsgrave. The final hard g makes a Scand. origin probable. Cf. Norw. klungu, a hard knotty log of wood (Ross). ¶ The Lowl. Se. elng, a clot, and claggy, covered with adhesive mire, were associated with clog to some extent in late uses, but are of different origin; they appear to be connected with clay. Der. clog, verb.

CLOKE, old spelling of Cloak, q. v.

CLOSE (1), to shut in, shut, make close. (F.-L.) In early use. ME. clousen; the pt. t. cloused, enclosed, occurs in Havelok, l. 1310. The verb was formed from the pp. clous of the French verb, or from other parts of the verb in which the stem clous occurred; cf. OF. clous, pp. of OF. clorre, to enclose, shut in.—L. claudere (pp. clausus), to shut, shut in. See Claude.

CLOSE (2), adj., shut up, confined, narrow. (F.-L.) In Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, l. 183. Also as sb., ME. close, clous, close, an enclosed place; Rob. of Glouc. p. 7, l. 154.—OF. close; see above. Der. close-ly, close-ness, close-ness, close-ly, q. v.

CLOSTER, a small room, recess. (F.-L.) 'The higher closet of hir hows,' Wyclif, Tubit, iii. 10; Chaucer, Troil. and Cres. ii. 1215.—OF. closet, in Godefroy, who gives: 'Closat, Closat, s.m., petit clos, petit enclos.' A dimin. from OF. clous, an enclosed space, a close, by affixing the dimin. suffix -et. Clos was orig. the pp. of OF. clorre, to shut, L. claudere; see above. Der. closet, verb.

CLOT, a mass of coagulated matter. (E.) Still in use, and now somewhat differentiated from clod, though in ME. the senses of the two words differed but little. ME. clot, clotte; 'a clot of earth'—a clot of earth, Ancr. Riwe, p. 172. 'Stony clottes,' Trevisa, ii. 23, where the Lat. text has 'globos saxos'. The orig. sense is 'lump.' AS. clot, clot (rare); 'Massa, of clyne wel clotum;' Haupt's Zeitschrift, ix. 488; 'massa, clyne, clotie;' Napier's OF. Glosses, 4-MDu. klot, 'a clot of earth,' Hexham; allied to MDu. klōge, 'a clot of earth,' id.; and to EFries. klute, klüte, a lump; G. klotz, a log. Teut. type klut-* from the weak grade of Teut. base kleu-*. See Cleat, Clout, Cluster, Clew.

CLOTH, a garment, woven material. (E.) ME. cloth, clath; Ancr. Riwe, p. 418; Layamon, ii. 318. AS. clāþ, a cloth, a garment; Grein, l. 162.—Du. kleed, clothes, dress; G. kleid, a dress, garment. 'B. Origin unknown, but evidently a Teutonic word. The Icel. klæði, Swed. kläde, Dan. klæde, cloth, do not exactly correspond in form. Der. cloth-es, from AS. clāþan, the pl. of clāþ; also clōke, verb, q. v.

CLOTHE, to cover with a cloth. (E.) ME. clathen, clathen, clēben; Ormulum, 2710; Havelok, 1138. The pt. t. is both clathede and cladde, the pp. both clathed and clad. Clad occurs in the Romaunt of the Rose, l. 219; and is still in use. ONorthumb. clāþen, pt. t. clāþite, Matt. xxv. 36; which accounts for the form clad. Formed from AS. clād, cloth; see above.—Du. kleeden, from kleed; so also G. kleiden, from kleid. The Icel. verb was klæða, pt. t. klæðti, pp. klæðtr. Der. cloth-ier, cloth-ing.

CLOUD, a mass of vapours. (E.) ME. cloud, clowde. 'Morris clustered clowde' = many a clustered cloud, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 367. The spellings cloud, clowde, clowde, clout, occur in the Cursor Mundi, 2585, 2582. Earlier examples are scarcely to be found in the same sense, but the word is identical with ME. clūd, a mass of rock, a hill. 'The hulle was bioclosed mid clouds of stone'—the hill was enclosed with masses of stone; Layamon, l. 370, 371.

β. In corroboration of this identification, we may observe (1) that the sense of 'mass of rock' passed out of use as the newer application of the word came in; (2) that both words are sometimes found with a plural in -en as well as in -s; and (3) the orig. sense was simply 'conglomeration' or 'cumulus.' Indeed, we find the expression 'clouds of clay,' i.e. round masses of clay, Coventry Mysteries, p. 402. γ. From AS. clūd, properly 'a round mass,' used in AS. to mean 'a hill' or 'mass of rock,' but easily transferred to mean 'cloud' at a later period, because the essential idea was 'mass' or 'ball,' and not 'rock.' In Orosius, iii. g. sect. 73 (ed. Sweet, p. 132, 10), we read of a city that was 'mid clūdum ymb-weaxen,' i.e. fortified with masses of rock. δ. The AS. clūd-d is connected with the root seen in clow (Teut. root kleu-*) the weaker grade appearing in clod.- See Clew, Cloud. Der. clowdy, cloud-ly, cloud-iness, cloud-ness, cloud-let (diminutive).

CLOUGH, a hollow in a hill-side. (E.) 'A clough, or clough, is a kind of breach or valley down a slope from the side of a hill, where commonly shrugges, and trees doe grow. It is the termination of Colclough or rather Coldclough, and some other surnames; Verstegan, Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, c. 9. ME. clough, clough; 'Sende him to seche in elif and clow;' Cursor Mundi, Trin. MS., l. 17590. Also spelt clow, Allit. Morte Arthur, 1639; and (in Scottish) clouch, Wallace, iv. 539. The corresponding AS. form would be clōh*, not yet found; but the parallel OIG. klōh occurs in Klōhede (Foerstemann, ii. 371). These answer to Teut. klauy-* from klauy-, 2nd grade of a root kleu-*, appearing in OIG. cling-o, a torrent, a gorge (Schade). Cf. Low G. kleng, also klinge, a torrent (Schambach); klinge, a defile, klingende beek, a rushing stream (Berghaus). From the noise. (Academy, Aug. 31, and Sept. 7, 21, 1889).

CLOUT, a patch, rag, piece of cloth. (E.) ME. clout, clut; Ancr. Riwe, p. 256. AS. clāt; we find 'commissura, clāt;' i.e. patch; in Ælfric's Glossary, ed. Sommer, Nomina Vasorum, p. 61. [Hence were borrowed W. clut, Corn. clut, a piece, patch, cloth; Irish and Gael. clud, a clout, patch, rag.] Orig. sense, 'mass, piece of stuff'; Teut. type klut-* from Teut. root kleu-*, of which the weaker grade occurs in clot. Closely allied to Cleat. Der. clout, verb.

CLOVE (1), a kind of spice. (F.-L.) 'There is another fruit that cometh out of India, like vnto pepper-cornes, and it is called cloues;' Holland's Pliny, bk. xii. c. 7. Cotgrave has: 'clou de girofle, a clove.' ME. clow, cloue; the latter is in Prompt. Parv.; and Chaucer has cloues girofle, C. T., 13692 (B 1952). In the 16th cent. it became cloue (= cloue), prob. by the influence of It. chiodo, a clove, or by confusion with cloue (2), which was an older word.—F. clou, a nail; whence clou de girofle, a clove, which resembled a nail.—L. clunium, acc. of clunus, a nail. See Clove. Der. clow-pink. [There is also a weight called a cloue (= 7 pounds of wool); see Clove (3).]

CLOVE (2), a bulb, or tuber. (E.) 'A bulb has the power of propagating itself by developing, in the axils of its scales, new bulbs, or what gardeners call clowes;' Linclay, Botany, bk. i. c. 2. sect. 2. ME. clow, cloue, cloue. 'A cloue of garykke, cloue of garlek;' Prompt. Parv. 'A lekes clou;' Guy of Warwick, A 3644. AS. clufu, Leechdoms, ii. 336; also in the compounds clufung, crowfoot, Ranunculus sceleratus, where cluf means 'tuber,' and fung, poison, from the acid principle of the juices; and in clufwyrt, the buttercup, Ranunculus acris; see Gloss. in Cockayne's Leechdoms, iii. 319. [I suspect the cluf-wyrt is rather the Ranunculus bulbosus, or bulbous buttercup; at any rate cluf-wyrt means 'bulb-wort.'] The orig. sense of AS. cluf was one of the small bulbs which make up the whole bulb of garlic, &c.; so named from its cleavage. From AS. cluf, weak grade of clōfan, to cleave; see Cleave (1).

CLOVE (3), a denomination of weight. (F.—L.) A clove of cheese is about 8 lbs.; of wool, about 7 lbs.; Phillips (1706). The word appears in the Liber Custumarum, where it is spelt clous, pl. in Anglo-French (p. 63), and claus, acc. pl., in Latin (p. 107). This gives the etymology, and shows that it is identical with clous (1); see note on Clove (1) above. Dugange has clausus linus, a certain weight or quantity of wool, which he notes as being an Eng. use of the word. Clavus seems to have meant 'lump' as well as 'nail.' Cf. Ital. chiava, 'a kind of great weight in Italy' (Torriano).

CLOVER, a kind of trefoil. (E.) ME. claver, clower; spelt clawer, Allit. Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, l. 3241. AS. clafre, O.E. Texts, p. 47, l. 375; clafre, fem. (gen. clafre), Gloss. to Cockayne's Leechdoms, q.v. + Du. klaver, clower, trefoil; whence Swed. kläver, Dan. kløver; cf. G. Klee. β. The suggestion that it is derived from AS. clōfan, to cleave, because its leaf is three-cleft, is inconsistent with phonology and impossible.

CLOWN, a clumsy lout, rustic, buffoon. (Scand.) 'This lowtish clown;' Sidney's Arcadia, bk. i. (R.; s.v. Low). 'To brag upon his pipe the clownes begoon;' Turberville, Agaynst the Jelous Heeds, st. 6. Not found much earlier. Of Scandinavian origin.—Icel. klunni, a clumsy, boorish fellow; cf. klunnageldr, clumsy; North Frisian klōne, a clown, bunkin (cited by Wedgwood); Swed. dial. klunn, a log; klunn, a hard knob, a clumsy fellow; Rietz; Dan. klun, a log, a block; klunnet, blockish, clumsy, awkward. Cf. AS. clune, a mass, lump, ball. β. It is probably connected with F. clump, q.v.; cf. Icel. klumba, a club; Dan. klump, a clump, klumfod, a club-foot; Swed. klump, a lump, klumpig, clumsy. See Clump. Der. clown-ish (Levins), ly.-ness.

CLOY, to glut, satiate, stop up. (F.—L.) In Shak. Rich. II. i. 3. 296; also clōyment, Tw. Nt. ii. 4. 102; clōyles, Ant. ii. 1. 25. 'Cloyed, or Acloyed, among farriers, a term used when a horse is pricked with a nail in shoeing;' Kersey's Dict. 2nd ed. 1715. Cotgrave has: 'Encloyer, to nail, drive in a nail; encloyer artilleirie, to cloy a piece of ordinance; to drive a nail or iron pin, into the touch-hole thereof;' also: 'Encloye, nailed, fastened, pricked, cloyed with a nail;' also: 'Encloyer (obsolete), to cloy, choke, or stop up.' Hence the etymology.—MF. cloyer, a by-form of clouer (as shown above); Cotgrave gives: 'Cloyer, to nail; to fasten, join, or set on with nails. The older form is cloer (Burguy).—(F. clo, later clo, a nail.—L. clānum, acc. of clānus, a nail. See Clove (1). Der. clōy-less. Cloy was frequently used as short for ac-cloy or a-cloy, where the prefix a- represented F. en-; see encloyer (above).

CLUB (1), a heavy stick, a cudgel. (Scand.) MF. clubbe, clōbbe, Layamon, ii. 216, iii. 35; Havelok, l. 1927, 2289.—Icel. klubba, a club; Swed. klubba, a club; klubb, a block, a club; klump, a lump; Dan. klub, a club; klump, a clump, lump; klumfod, a club-foot; klumfodet, club-footed. Cf. Dan. klunt, a log, a block. β. The close connexion of club with clump is apparent; in fact, the Icel. klubba stands for klumba, by the assimilation so common in that language (Noreen). See Clump. Der. club-foot, club-footed.

CLUB (2), an association of persons. (Scand.) Not in very early use. A good example is in the Dedication to Dryden's Medal, where he alludes to the Whigs, and asks them what right they have 'to meet, as you daily do, in factious clubs.' In Sherwood's Index to Cotgrave, A.D. 1660, we find: 'To clubbe, mettre ou despendre à l'egal d'un autre.' The word is really the same as the last, but applied to a 'clump' of people. See Rietz, who gives the Swed. dial. klubb, as meaning 'a clump, lump, dumpling, a tightly packed heap of men, a knoll, a heavy inactive fellow.' So we speak of a knoll of people, or a clump of trees. Der. club, verb.

CLUB (3), one of a suit at cards. (Scand.) a. The name is a translation of the Span. baños, i.e. cudgels, clubs; which is the Span. name for the suit. Thus the word is the same as Club (1) and Club (2). β. The figure by which the clubs are denoted on a card is a trefoil; the F. name being trèfle, a trefoil, a club (at cards); cf. Dan. kløver, clover, a club (at cards); Du. klaver, clover, trefoil, a club (at cards).

CLUCK, to call, as a hen does. (F.) 'When she, poor hen, hath cluck'd thee to the wars;' Cor. v. 3. 163; where the old editions have cluck'd. ME. clōcken. 'Clōkyn as hennys;' Prompt. Parv. p. 83. [Cf. 'He chuketh, said of a cock;' Chaucer, C. T., l. 15188 (B 4372).] AS. clōccian; Anglia, viii. 309, l. 26; cf. AS. Leechdoms, ii. 220, l. 18. The mod. E. form may have been influenced by the Danish. + Du. klukken, to cluck; Dan. klukke, to cluck; kluk, a clucking; klukhøne, a clucking hen; G. glucken, to cluck; gluckhenne, a clucking-hen. Cf. L. glocire, to cluck. An imitative verb; see Clack.

CLUE; see Clew.

CLUMP, a mass, block, cluster of trees. (F.) 'England, Scotland, Ireland, and our good confederates the United Provinces, be all in a clump together;' Bacon, Of a War with Spain (R.). The AS. pl. clumpan, lump, occurs in AS. Leechdoms, iii. 134. Cf. also AS. clump-re, a lump (Grein); EFries. klump, klunt, a lump; + Du. klomp, a lump, clog, wooden shoe; cf. klont, a clod, lump; Dan. klump, a clump, lump; klumpe, to clod; cf. klunt, a log, block; Swed. klump, a lump; klumpig, lumpy, clumsy; Icel. klumba, klubba, a club; G. klump, a lump, clod, pudding, dumpling; klumpen, a lump, mass, heap, cluster; cf. klunker, a clod of dirt. β. Besides these forms, we find Dan. klimp, a clod of earth; Swed. klimp, a clod, a lump, a dumpling; these are directly derived from the root preserved in the MIIG. klimfan (strong verb, pt. t. klampf), to draw together, press tightly together, cited by Fick, iii. 51. γ. From the same root we have F. clump, to fasten together tightly; so that clump and clump are variants from the same root. See Clamp; and see Club (1), a doublet of clump.

CLUMSY, shapeless, awkward, ungainly. (Scand.) 'Apt to be drawn, formed, or moulded... even by clumsy fingers;' Ray, On the Creation, pt. ii. In Ray's Collection of Provincial Eng. Words we find: 'Clumps, Clumpe, idle, lazy, unhandy, a word of common use in Lincolnshire; see Skinner. This is, I suppose, the same with our clumsy, in the South, signifying unhandy; clumps with cold, i.e. benumbed; and again he has: 'Clussumed, clump, a clussumed hand,' a clumsy hand; Cheshire. a. All these forms are easily explained, being deducible from the ME. clumsed, benumbed. From this word were formed (1) clussumed, for clumsed, which again is for clumsed, by a change similar to that in clasp from ME. clapen; (2) clumped, by mere contraction; (3) clumps, by loss of final i in the last; and (4) clumsy, with -y for -el, giving an adjectival form. β. The ME. clumsed, also spelt clumsed, is the pp. of the verb clumsen or clousen, to benumb, also, to feel benumbed. It is passive in the phrase 'with clumsid handis,' as a translation of 'dissolutis manibus;' Wyclif, Jerem. xlvii. 3; see also Isaiah, xxv. 3. 'He is outhel clumsed [stupefied] or wode' [mad]; Hamptole, Pricke of Conscience, l. 1651. See further in my note to Piers the Plowman, C. xvi. 253, where the intransitive use of the verb occurs, in the sentence: 'when thou clomest for colde'—when thou becomest numb with cold. γ. Of Scandinavian origin. Cf. Swed. dial. klummsen, benumbed with cold, with frozen hands; spelt also klumsun, klumsen, klumsen, klummsänd (i.e. with benumbed hands), &c., Rietz, p. 332; who also gives krumpen (p. 354) with the very same sense, but answering in form to the F. crampé. In Icelandic, klumsa means 'lockjaw.' δ. It is easily seen that ME. clumsen is an extension of clum-, weak grade of the root clam, or cram, to pinch, whence also F. clamp and cram. See Clamp, Cramp. So in Dutch we find kleumsch, chilly, numb with cold; from kleumen, to be benumbed with cold, which again is allied to klemmen, to pinch, clinch, oppress (Frank). Cf. prov. F. clém, to pinch with hunger; clum, benumbed; also Westphal. verklummen, benumbed; MDan. klums, sluggish (Kalkar).

CLUSTER, a bunch, mass, esp. of grapes. (F.) ME. cluster, clustre, claster; Wyclif, Deut. xxxii. 32, Numb. xiii. 25, Gen. xl. 10. AS. clyster, claster; the pl. clystra, clusters, occurs in Gen. xl. 10. + Low G. kluster. Cluster represents a Teut. form klus-tro-, for klut-tro-, from the base klut- which appears in Clot; so that a cluster means a bunch of things adhering closely together, as e.g. in the case of a cluster of grapes or of bees. From Teut. root kleut-*, to mass together; see Cleaf, Clout.

CLUTCH, a claw; to grip, lay hold of. (E.) The verb is ME. clutchen; 'to clutche or to clawe;' P. Plowman, B. xvii. 188. The sb. is ME. clouche, clouche, cluke; 'and in his clouches holde;' P. Plowman, B. prol. 154; 'his kene clouche,' Ancrén Kniwe, l. 130; cf. the Lowl. Scot. cluck, cluk, cluck, a claw or talon. The old sb. was superseded by the verbal form, which answers to AS. clucan*, to bend or crook the fingers; extant in the imp. s. cluce (see Clitch in N.E.D.), and in the pp. geclucht, written geclit in the Liber Scintillarum, § xxv; p. 99, l. 2. Teut. type kluk-jan-*, (perhaps) 'to bend a joint.'

CLUTTER (1), to coagulate, clot. (F.) 'The cluttered blond;' Holland, Pliny, b. xxi. c. 25. ME. clateren; the pp. clatered, also written clotterd, occurs in Chaucer, C. T., 2747 (A 2745). The same as clutter, the frequentative form of clot; see Clot.

CLUTTER (2), a confused heap; to heap up. (E.) 'Whata clutter there was with huge, over-grown pots, pans, and spits;' I. I. Strange, in Rich. and Todd's Johnson. 'Which clutters not praises together;' Bacon, to K. Jas. I. Sir T. Matthew's Lett. ed. 1660, p. 32 (Todd). The same word as Clutter (1); the sense of 'mass' suggested that of 'confused heap;' whence, further, that of 'confused noise;' see below.

CLUTTER (3), a noise, a great din. (E.) Not common; Rich. quotes from King, and Todd from Swift; a mere variation of Clatter, q.v.; affected by Clutter (2). Ith gives M. Swed. klutra, to quarrel. Cf. EFries. klüter, a rattle.

CLYSTER, an injection into the bowels. (L.—Gk.) The pl. clisters is in Holland's Pliny, b. viii. c. 27; the verb clysterize in the same, b. xx. c. 5; and Massinger has: 'Thou stinking clyster-pipe.' Virgin Martyr, A. iv. sc. 1; cf. Shak. Oth. ii. 5. 178.—L. clyster—Gk. κλύστρον, a clyster, a syringe; κλύστρον, a liquid used for washing out, esp. a clyster, a drench.—Gk. κλύστρον, to wash. Cf. L. clister, to purge, Goth. klāstr, pure.—κ/KLEU, to cleanse. Brugm. i. § 490.

CO-, prefix; a short form of con-. See CON-.
COACH, a close carriage. (F.—Hung.) In Shak. Merry Wives, ii. 2. 66.—F. caché, 'a coach.' Hist.—Hungarian kocsi, coach, a coach, travelling carriage; whence the word was introduced into many other languages. See Beckmann's Hist. of Inventions, tr. in 1846, i. 77; who says: 'Stephanus Broderithus says, speaking of 1526; . . . "he speedily got into one of those light carriages, which (from the name of the place) we called kocze." The word was used in Hungary from the reign of king Matthias Corvinus, 1458–90; and the 'coach' was named from a Hungarian village named Kocs, between Raab and Buda; see N.E.D. The word coach first appears in E. in 1556.

COADJUTOR, assistant. (L.) Spelt coadiutor, Sik T. Elyot, Governour, b. ii. c. 10. § 5.—L. co-, for con-, which con-, together; and adiutor, an assistant, allied to adjuvare, pp. of adiuvare, to assist. See Adiutor. Der. coadiutor-in, coadiutor-ship.

COAGULATE, to curdle, congeal. (L.) Shak. has coagulate as pp.—curdled: 'coagulate good.' Hamlet, ii. 2. 484.—L. coagulare, pp. of coagulare, to curdle.—L. coagulum, rennet, which causes things to curdle.—L. co- (for con- or cum, together), and ag-ere, to drive; (in Latin, the contracted form cogere is the common form); with suffix -ut-, having a diminutive force; so that co-ag-ut-n-um would mean 'that which drives together slightly.'—ag-/AG, to drive. See Agent. Der. coagulat-in, coagulat-able, coagulat.

COAITA, the red-faced spider monkey. (Brazil.) Spelt quata in Stedman's Surinam, ii. 10. [Sometimes misspelt coati.]—Tupi (Brazilian) coati, coati, coaita (N.E.D.); spelt coaita in Breton, Diet. Carabe François, 1665; p. 180. ¶ Distinct from coati.

COAL, charcoal; a combustible mineral. (F.—ME. col, Layamon, i. 2366. AS. col, coal; Grein, i. 166.—Dn. kool; Icel. and Swed. kol; Dan. kul; OHG. cholo, MHG. kol, Gk. kohle. The Skt. pyal, to blaze, burn, is originally from the same root; cf. also Old Irish géal, coal. Der. coal-y, coal-fish, coal-heaver, &c.; also collier, q.v.; also colled, i.e. blackened, dark, in Mid. Nt. Dr. i. 1. 145.

COALESCE, to grow together. (L.) Used by Newton (Todd); in Moulton's Gloss, ed. 1656; also by Goodwin, Works, v. iii. pt. iii. p. 345 (R.). R. doubtless refers to the works of T. Goodwin, 5 vols., London, 1681–1703.—L. coalescere, to grow together.—L. co- for con- or cum, together; and ale-scere, to grow, inceptive form of alere, to nourish. See Aliment. Der. coalescence, coalescent, from coalescent, stem of the pres. part. of coalescere; also coalition (used by Burke) allied to L. coalitus, pp. of coalescere.

COARSE, rough, rude, gross. (F.—L.) In Shak. Henry VIII, iii. 2. 239. Also spelt *course, course; 'Yea, though the threads [threads] be course;' Gascoigne, Complaint of the Grene Knight, l. 25; cf. Course, villis, grossus; J. Levis, 224. 39. a. The origin of course is by no means well ascertained; it seems most likely that it stands for course, and that course was used as a contracted form of incourse, meaning 'in an ordinary manner,' and hence 'ordinary,' or 'common.' The phrase in course was also used for the modern of course; Meas. iii. 1. 259. B. The examples in the N.E.D. bear out this view. The phrase 'Too course borderclothes,' i.e. two coarse tablecloths occurs as early as 1424; Early Eng. Wills, p. 56. See Course. Der. course-ly, ne-s.*

COAST, side, border, country. (F.—L.) ME. coste. 'Bi thise Englishe costes—throughout these English coasts or borders; William of Shoreham, De Baptismo, st. 9; about A.D. 1315.—OF. coste (F. côte), a rib, slope of a hill, shore.—L. costa, a rib, side. Der. coast, v., coast-er, coast-wise. From the same source is ac-cost, q.v.; also culet, q.v., coastermanger, q.v.

COAT, a garment, vesture. (F.—G.) ME. coste, kote; K. Allsander, ed. Weber, 2413.—OF. coste (F. cotte), a coat; I. Low L. costa, colla, a garment, tunic; cf. Low L. costus, a unic.—MHG. kutte, kotte, koize, OHG. chozo, a coarse mantle; whence also G. kutte, a cowl. Cognate with OSax. cot, with the same sense. See Kluge. Der. coat, vi., coat-ing.

COATI, COATI-MONDI, a carnivorous mammal. (Brazil.) Described as coati or coati-mondi in a tr. of Buffon (1792); i. 183. The nose is long and flexible, and marked with white.—Tupi (Brazilian) coati, coati, coati; from cua, a cincture, and mondi, a nose (i.e. being nasal). The word mondi is said to mean 'solitary' (N.E.D.).
COAX, to entice, persuade. (E.) Formerly spelt coke. 'They neither kisse nor coke them.' Pattenham, Arte of Poesie, lib. i. c. 8; ed. Arber, p. 36. The word coke as a sb. meant a simpleton, gull, dupe. 'Why, we will make a coke of this wise master,' Ben Jonson,

The Devil is an Ass, ii. 1. 'Go, you're a brainless coke, a toy, a fop,' Beaumont and Fletcher, Wit at Sev. Weapons, iii. 1. History unknown. ¶ We may note that Colgrave seems to have regarded it as equivalent to the F. coard. He has: 'Coard, a nice doubt, quaint goose, fond or saucie coke, proud or forward meacock.' Under the spelling coard, he gives 'undiscreetly bold, peart, cocket, jolly, cheerful.' Thus the F. coquart may have suggested cocket, and now answers to the school-slang cocky, i.e. like a lighting cock. We may also note OF. coqueret, coquigne, coquid, all meaning 'foolish'; see Godfrey. COB (1), a small round hard lump, the dimin. is cobble, as used in cobble-stones. The senses are numerous; see E.I.D. and N.E.D. In the sense of small hard lump, the dimin. is cobble, as used in cobble-stones. As applied to a pony or horse, it seems to mean short and stout. ME. cob, a head, a person, esp. a great or leading person; the pl. cobbes is used by Hoccleve, De Regim. Principum, l. 2866. The verb to cob or cop, to excel, is allied to AS. copa, a top, summit. Cf. Du. kop, a head, pate, person, man; G. kopf, the head. Der. cob-web, q.v.; cobb-le (2), sb., q.v.

COB (2), to beat, strike. (E.) In sailor's language and provincial E. Cf. ME. cobben, to fight; Destr. of Troy, li. 8285, 11025. Also prov. E. cop, to strike on the head; whence, probably, W. cobia, to strike; cf. W. cob, a bunch, a tuft; cop, a head, bunch. See Cob (1).

COBALT, a reddish-gray mineral. (G.) One of the few G. words in English; most of such words are names of minerals. Used by Woodward, who died A.D. 1728 (Todd).—G. kobalt, cobalt. β. The word is a nick-name given by the miners because it was poisonous and troublesome to them; it is merely another form of G. kobold, a demon, goblin; and kobalt itself is called kobold in provincial German; see Flügel's Dict.—MHG. kobalt, a demon, spite; in which the former element kob- answers to AS. cof- in cof-gods, household gods, used to translate L. penites; Voc. 189. 10; from AS. cofa, a chamber. See Cove. (So in Kluge.)

COBBLE (1), to patch up. (E.) 'He doth but cloute [patch] and cobbill;' Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Court, l. 524. The sb. cobbler, a cobbler, occurs in P. Plowman, R. v. 327. Origin doubtful; perhaps the same as prov. E. cobble, to beat; and from Cob (2). Der. cobb-er.

COBBLE (2), a small round lump. (E.) Chiefly used of round stones, commonly called cobble-stones. 'Illic ruder, a cobylstone;' Voc. 768. 38. A dimin. of cob, with the suffix -le (for -el). See Cob (1). Cf. Norw. koppull, a small round stone.

COBLE, a small fishing-boat. (C.) 'Cobles, or little fishing-boats;' Pennant, in Todd's Johnson. ME. coble, Scot. Legends of Saints, ed. Metcalfe, xl. (Ninian), l. 504.—W. ceubal, a ferry-boat, skiff. Cf. W. ceubren, a hollow tree; ceufad, a canoe.—W. ceuo, to excavate, hollow out; boats being orig. made of hollowed trees. Cf. Breton kobar, gobar, also kobal, a coble, small boat; from the form gobar is derived the F. gabare, MF. gabarre, 'a lighter;' Cot.

COBRA DE CAPELLO, a snake with a hood. (Port.—L.) In a tr. of Buffon (1792), ii. 277, it is called 'cobra di [error for de] capello, or hooded serpent.—Port. cobra, snake; de, of, with; capello, a hood.—L. colubra, a snake; de, of, with; capellum, acc. of Late L. capellus, dimin. of Late L. cāpa, a cape. See Chaplet and Cape (1).

COBWEB, a spider's web. (E.) ME. copweb, Trevisa, tr. of Higden, vii. 343; so also in Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 728; copwebbe in Palsgrave, and in the Golden Boke, c. 17. Copweb is a shortened form of altercop-web, from the ME. altercop, a spider. β. In Wyclif's Bible we find: 'The webbis of an altercop.' Isaiah, lix. 5; and: 'the web of altercop;' Job, viii. 14. The ME. altercop is from AS. altorcoppe, a spider, Voc. 121. 28; a word compounded of AS. ātor, poison (Hosworth), and coppe, which perhaps also meant 'spider'; cf. MDu. kop, koppe, 'a spider,' or a cob; ¶ Ilexham. The exact relation to cob (1) is obscure. Cf. Du. spinnekoep, a spider; also, a spider's web; WFlam. koppe, kobbe, a spider (De Bo); Westphal. kobbenwebbe, a cobweb.

COCA, a shrub, the leaves of which afford a stimulant. (Span.—Peruv.) In F. G. tr. of Acasto (1604), bk. iv. c. 22; and J. Frampton, Joyfull News (1577), fol. 101, back.—Span. coca—Peruv. cua; of which form the Span. coca is a corruption (Garcilasso, Comment. of Peru, bk. viii. c. 15). Der. coca-in.

COCHINEAL, a scarlet dye-stuff. (F.—Span.—L.—Gk.) Cochineal consists 'of the dried bodies of females of the Coccus caca, an insect native in Mexico, Central America, &c., and found on several species of cactus;' Webster. (These insects have the appearance of berries, and were thought to be such; hence the name.) The word cochineal occurs in Beaumont and Fletcher, Beggar's Bush, l. 3. Cf. 'the berrie of cocheante;' Iakluyt's Voy. iii. 46, l. 10.—F. cochenille. =Span. cochinilla, cochineal; cf. Ital. coeniglia, the same.—L. coccineus, coccinus (Isaiah, i. 18), of a scarlet colour.—L. coccum, a berry; also, 'kermes,' supposed by the ancients to be a berry.—Gk.

aknos, a kernel, a berry; esp. the coccus ilicis, or 'kermes-berry,' used to dye scarlet. ¶ Distinct from Span. cochinilla, a wood-louse, dimin. of cochina, a pig (Monlau).

COCK (1), the male of the domestic fowl. (E.) ME. cock; see Chaucer's Nun's Priest's Tale. AS. coec, Matt. xxvi. 34, 74; and much earlier, in Ælfred, tr. of Gregory, ed. Sweet, c. 63, p. 459. Of imitative origin: from the bird's cry. 'Cryde anon cock! cock!,' Chaucer, C. T., B 4407. Cf. Skt. kukkuṭa, a cock; Malay kukuk, crowing of cocks. ¶ So also OF. coe (F. coq). = Low Lat. cocconi, an accus. form occurring in the Lex Salica, vii. 16, and of onomatopoeic origin (Brachet). = Gk. kúkūn, the cry of the cuckoo; also the cry of the cock, since the phrase κουκουβους ὄρνις occurs to signify a cock; lit. it means 'the cock-voiced bird,' or the bird that cries cock! Cf. Cuckoo. Der. cock-rr-el, a little cock, apparently a double diminutive, ME. cockerel, Prompt. Parv. p. 86; cock-fight-ing, sometimes contracted to cock-ing; cock-er, one who keeps fighting-cocks; cock-pit; cock's-comb, a plant; and see cock-ade, cock-atrice, cocknab. ¶ The cock, or stop-cock of a barrel, is probably the same word; cf. ci. hahn, a cock, also, a faucet, stop-cock. See Cook (3), and Chickon.

COCK (2), to stick up angrily. (E.) We say to cock one's eye, one's hat; or, of a bird, that it cocks up its tail. [She] spreads and cocks her tail,' A. Marvell, Rehearsal Transposed, l. 161 (N.E.D.). Apparently with reference to the posture of a cock's head when crowing; or to that of his crest or tail. See Cook (1). So also Gael. coe, to cock, as in coe do bhàinead, cock your bonnet; cf. Gael. coe-shron, a cock-nose; coe-shronnach, cock-nosed. Der. cock's sh., in the phrase 'a cock of the eye,' &c.

COCK (3), part of the lock of a gun. (E.) 'Pistol's cock is up,' Hen. V. ii. i. 55. So named from its original shape; from the likeness to the head and neck of a cock. Similarly, the i. name is hahn; as in the phrase den Hahn spannen, i. e. to cock (a gun).

COCK (4), a small pile of hay. (Scand.) 'A cocke of hay,' Tynedale's Works, p. 450. Cf. 'cockers of harvest folkles,' Rastall, Statutes; Vagabonds, &c. p. 474 (R.). And see P. Plowman, C. vi. 13, and my note upon it. — Dan. kok, a heap, pile; Dan. dial. kok, a haycock, at kukke kuet, to cock hay; cf. Icel. kukku, a lump, a ball.

COCK (5), COCKBOAT, a small boat. (F.—L.—Gk.) The addition of boat is superfluous; see cock in K. Lear, iv. 6, 19. — OF. coque, also cogue, a kind of boat (Godefroy); cf. Ital. cocca, Span. coca, a boat. β. The word also appears in the form cog or cogges, as in Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 476; Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, Ypsiphyle, 114. This is the Du. and Dan. kug, Icel. kuggi, a boat; the same word. γ. The word was very widely used, and is perhaps to be referred, as suggested by Diez, to the L. concha, a shell; cf. also mod. F. coche, a boat, and cogue, a shell. — Gk. κύχη, a mussel, cockle-shell; κύχας, a mussel, cockle, cockle-shell. — Skt. kuṭha, a conch-shell. See Conch; and see Cockle (1). ¶ But some regard the Du. and Scand. forms as Teutonic; from Teut. types kukkon*-, kuggon*-. It is probable that these types were confused with derivatives of concha. Cf. Körtling, § 2283. Der. cock-swain, by the addition of swain, q.v.; now gen. spelt coxswain.

COCKADE, a knot of ribbon on a hat. (F.) 'Pert infidelity is wit's cockade,' Young's Nt. Thoughts, Nt. 7, l. 109 from end. The a was formerly sounded as aa in baa; and the word is, accordingly, a corruption of cockard. = F. coquarde, fem. of coquard, 'foolishly proud, saucy, presumptuous, malapert, undiscreetly peart, cocket, jolly, cheerful,' Cotgrave. He also gives: 'coquarde, bonnet à la coquarde, a Spanish cap, . . . any bonnet or cap worn proudly.' Formed by suffix -ard from F. coq, a cock. See Cock (1).

COCKATOO, a kind of parrot. (Malay.) The pl. is spelt cockatoes, and the birds are said to be found in the Mauritius; Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 383 (Todd's Johnson); or ed. 1665, p. 403. — Malay kakataua, a cockatoo; a word which is doubtless imitative, like our cock; see Cook (1). This Malay word is given at p. 84 of Pijnappel's Malay-Dutch Dictionary; he also gives the imitative words kakak, the cackling of hens, p. 75; and kukuk, the crowing of a cock, p. 94.

So also 'kakataua, a bird of the parrot-kind,' Marsden's Malay Dict. p. 261. Cf. Skt. kukkuṭa, a cock; so named from its cry. See Cook, Cuckoo.

COCKATRICE, a fabulous serpent hatched from a cock's egg. (F.—Late L.—L.). In Shak. Tw. Nt. iii. 4. 215. ME. cockatrice, hokatrice, Wyclif, Ps. xc. 13; Isa. xii. 8, xiv. 29. — OF. coatrice, coatrice, an ichneumon, a crocodile; Godefroy. Cf. Span. coatrice, a crocodile. = Late L. cōcātriciem, acc. of cōcātrix, cōcātrix, a crocodile, basilisk, cockatrice. β. The form cōcātrix is a corruption of Late L. calcatrinx (cōcātrix in Duange), lit. 'the treacher,' or 'tracker out,' used to translate Gk. λύγυραν. = L. calātre, to tread; see Caulk, and see Ichneumon. The word being once corrupted, the fable that the animal was produced from a cock's egg was invented to account for it.

COCKER, to pamper, indulge children. (Scand.) 'A beardless boy, a cockered silken wanton,' K. John, v. i. 70. 'Neuer had so cockered us, nor made us so wanton,' Sir T. More, Works, p. 337 d; see Eastwood and Wright's Bible Word-book. 'Cockeryn, carlivoeco,' Prompt. Parv. p. 163. β. Prob. of Scand. rather than of native origin. Orig. 'to cry cock!' as a cock does, repeatedly; the verb being frequentative in form. Hence to call chickens repeatedly, to be ever feeding them, to pet, pamper, &c. This is borne out by MDan. kokre, to call often, as a cock or hen does; Norweg. kokla (1), to cackle, (2), to cocker, pet; Norw. kokra, to utter monotonous cries, also to cocker; Norw. kokrebarn, a pet child; kokren, adj., cockering (Ross). So also MDu. kokelen, 'to cocker, foster,' Hexham; whence F. coqueliner, of which Cotgrave says: 'coqueliner un enfant, to dandle, cocker, fondle, pamper, make a wanton of a child.' The W. coeri, to fondle, is from E. All from Cook (1).

COCKLE (1), a sort of bivalve. (F.—L.—Gk.) In P. Plowman, C. x. 95, occurs the pl. cockles, with the sense of cockles, the reading in the Elchester MS. being cockles. Thus the ME. form is cockel, dimin. of cock or cok (F. coque), the orig. sense of which was 'shell.' The word was borrowed from the French coquille, a cockle-shell; cf. Ital. cochiglia, Walloon kukil (Remacle). = Late L. type conchyliā*, by-form of conchyliā, pl. of conchylium. = Gk. καρχήδιον, dimin. of καρχή, a mussel, a cockle. See Cock (5). Without the nasal, we find also L. cochlea, a snail; cf. Gk. καρχήδιος, a snail with a spiral shell; καρχή, a fish with a spiral shell, also a bivalve, a cockle. See Körtling, § 2283. ¶ The ME. cockles answers to the pl. of AS. sæ-cere, a sea-shell, cockle, and of OF. coque.

COCKLE (2), a weed among corn; darnel. (E.) ME. cockel. 'Or springen [sprinkle, sow] cocked in our clene corn,' Chaucer, C. T., l. 2923 (B 1183). AS. coceol, tares, translating Lat. zizania, Matt. xiii. 27; whence also Gael. coceol, tares, the herb cockle; coegull, the corn-cockle. Irish coegal.

COCKLE (3), to be uneven, pucker up. (Scand.) 'It made such a short cockling sea, . . . that I never felt such uncertain jerks in a ship,' Dampier, Voyage, an. 1683 (R.). Of Scand. origin; cf. Norw. kokkalt, lumpy, uneven, i. e. cockled up; from Norw. kokle, a little lump, dim. of kok, a lump. Cf. Swed. dial. kokkelt, dimin. of koka, a clod.

COCKLOFT, an upper loft, garret. (Hybrid; F. and Scand.) 'Cocklofts and garrets,' Dryden, tr. of Juvenal, Sat. iii. l. 329. From cock (1) and loft. 'Devan de cana, a garret or cockloft,' Minshew, Span. Dict. (1623). So in German we find hahnkublen, a roost, a cock-loft; and in Danish hannbalkloft, lit. a cock-balk-loft; cf. prov. E. hen-loft. It meant originally a place in the rafters where cocks roosted, hence, a little room among the rafters; called also in Danish loftkammer, i. e. loft-chamber. See Loft. ¶ The W. coq-luff, a garret, is nothing but the E. cockloft borrowed.

COCKNEY, an effeminate person. (E.) ME. cockney, in P. Plowman, B. vi. 287; where it means 'an egg'; so also in the Tournament of Tottenham in Percy's Reliques, last stanza. The ME. cockney represents cocken-y, lit. 'egg of cocks,' from AS. eg, an egg, where coken is the gen. pl. of cock, a cock, as clerken is of clerk. This singular name was given particularly to the small misshapen eggs occasionally laid by fowls; see prov. E. cock's egg (s.v. cock) in E.D.D.). 'The small yolkeless eggs which hens sometimes lay are called cock's eggs, generally in the firm persuasion that the name states a fact;' C. S. Burne, Shropshire Folk-Lore, p. 229. Cf. Harl. Miscell. iii. 531. Florio's Ital. Dict. (1598) has: 'Caccherelli, cacklings of hens; also eggs, as we say cockney.' Hence cockney was often a term of reproach, and meant a foolish or effeminate person, or a spoilt child; see Cockney in Halliwell. The ME. spelling was cockney or cockney, which was trisyllabic. 'I sal been halde a daf, a cockney,' Unhardy is unclay, thus men sayth,' Chaucer, C. T. 4206 (A 4208). Der. cockney-dom, cockney-ism.

COCKROACH, a kind of beetle. (Span.) 'Cockroaches, a kind of insect,' Phillips, ed. 1706. Capt. J. Smith has caracroach; Works, ed. Arber, p. 630 (1624). 'Called cukreue in Surinam,' Stedman, i. 104 (1706). 'Without question, it is from the Portuguese caroucha, chafer, beetle, and was introduced into our language by sailors;' F. Hall, Modern English, 1873, p. 128. But a friend kindly points out that the E. word is borrowed, not from Port. caroucha, but from Span. caracacha, 'a wood-louse, a kind of centipede, blatta or short-legged beetle, common aboard of American ships, a cockroach, Blatta americana, L.;' Neuman. I think the Port. caroucha is merely a clipped form of the same word, with loss of the first syllable. The etymology of caracacha is obscure.

COCKSHUT TIME, twilight. (E.) In Shak. Rich. III. v. 3. 70. 'A fine cockshut evening,' i. e. a fine evening for using cock-shoots; Middleton, The Widow, A. iii. sc. 1. A cockshoot (shortened to cockshot or cockshut) was a glade cut through a wood along which woodcocks might dart or 'shoot' and be caught in nets, esp. at twilight; see E.D.D. Palsgrave has: 'Cockeshote to take woodcocks with, uolce.' Woodcocks were taken 'in cockshote tyme, as yt is termed, which is the twilight, when yt ys no strange thinge to take a hundred or score in one wood in twenty-four hours'; A. Newton, Dict. of Birds, p. 1044. Prof. Newton adds that 'another MS. speaks of one wood having 13 cockshots.' From cock, shoot, and time. Often absurdly referred to the verb to shut. See Phil. Soc. Trans., 1904; p. 166.

COCO, wrongly COCOA (1), the cocoa-nut palm-tree. (Port.) 'Give me to drain the cocoa's milky bowl'; Thomson, Summer, l. 677. 'A fruit called coco' [at Goa]; Hakluyt, Voy. ii. 2. 101. [Misspelt cocoa in Johnson's Dict.] = Port. (and Span.) coco, a bugbear; also, a cocoa-nut, cocca-tree. 'Called coco by the Portuguese in India on account of the monkey-like face at the base of the nut, from coco, a bugbear, an ugly mask to frighten children; see De Barros, Asia, Dec. iii. bk. iii. c. 7; Wedgwood. Cf. Port. fazer coco, to play at peep; Span. ser un coco, to be an ugly-looking person; coco, to make grimaces; also, guarda el Coco, i.e. see the hussy. Pineda. Of unknown origin.

COCOA (2), a corrupt form of Cacso, q. v.
COCOON, the case of a chrysalis. (F. — Gk.) Spelt cocoon in 1609 (N.E.D.). F. cocoon, a cocoon; formed by adding the suffix on (gen. augmentative, but sometimes diminutive) to F. coque, a shell. From a by-form of L. concha, a shell. — Gk. κόκκυς, a shell; see Conch. Cook (5). Der. cocoon-ery.

COCTION, a boiling, decoction. (L.) In Boyle's Works, vol. ii. p. 109 (R). Formed from Latin, by analogy with F. words in -tion. — L. coctiōem, acc. of coctio, a boiling, digestion; allied to coculus, pp. of coquere, to cook. See Cook.

COD (1), a kind of fish. (E.) In Shak. Othello, ii. 1. 156. 'Codde, a fische, cabluere,' Palsgrave; cf. Cabluand, the shewin; and 'Cabluin, fresh cod.' Cot. Spelt cod, Statutes of the Realm, i. 356 (A.D. 1357). B. I suppose that this cod must be the same as the M.E. codde, a bolster; though the resemblance of the fish to a bolster is but fanciful. It is obvious that Shakespeare knew nothing of the Linnaean name gadus (Gk. γάδος); not is any connexion between cod and gadus possible. See Cod (2), and Cuttle. Der. cod-ling, q. v.

COD (2), a husk, shell, bag, bolster. (E.) Perhaps obsolete, except in prov. E. In Shak., in cod-pierce, Cont. of Verona, ii. 7. 53; pre-cod, i.e. pea-shell, husk of a pea, Mids. Nt. iv. iii. 1. 191. ME. codde, 'codde of frute, or be-codde'; Prompt. Parv. p. 85. The pl. coddis translates L. aliquid, Wyclif, Luke, xv. 16. [Cod also means pillow, bolster; as in F. cod, hoc cruciā, hoc pulvinar; Cath. Aug.; in this sense it is of Scand. origin.] AS. cod, codde, a bag; translating Lat. perna in Mark, vi. 8. + Icel. koddi, a pillow; kobri, the scrotum of animals; Swed. kudde, a cushion. Cf. Swed. dial. kudde, a pod; M.Du. kodde, a clut (flexham), also 'coleus, testiculus'; Kilian; Jutland kodde, a pod, the scrotum. AS. cod answers to a Teut. type kudōz*, m. i. loc. kudō to kudōn*, a weak sb. (1). The W. cod, a bag, pouch, was borrowed from English.

CODDLE, to treat as an invalid to nurse overmuch, to render effeminate. (F. — L.) Another sense of coddle (still known in prov. E.) was to parboil, to stew fruit; thus Dampier says the guava: 'It bakes as well as a pear, and it may be coddled, and it makes good pies.' A New Voyage, vol. i. c. 8. p. 222. In Beaumont and Fletcher's Philaster, A. V. sc. 4. l. 31, the phrase 'I'll have you coddled' alludes to 'Prince Pippin.' Cf. apparently short for candle, verb, i.e. to treat with candle; see Shak. Timon, iv. 3. 226. See Candle.

CODE, a digest of laws. (F. — L.) ME. code; as in 'Theodocius his code.' Trissin, tr. of Higden, iii. 255. Pope has the pl. codes, Sat. vi. 96. — F. code = L. codicem, acc. of codex, a trunk of a tree; hence, a wooden tablet for writing on, a set of tablets, a book. B. The orig. form has perhaps caudex*, connected with cauda* (i.e. cauda), a tail, and the orig. sense a shoot or spray of a tree, thus connecting i. cauda with E. scold, the tail of a hare or rabbit. See Scold. Der. cod-i-ty, cod-i-fic-ation; also cod-i-ty, q. v.

CODICIL, a supplement to a will. (F. — L.) Used by Warburton, Divine Legation, bk. iv. note 23 (R). It occurs as early as 1417-8. 'In this codicill.' Fifty E. Eng. Wills (E. F. T. S.), p. 40. — MF. codicille, 'a codicil'; Cot. = L. codicillus, a writing-tablet, a memorial, a codicil to a will. — L. codic-, stem of cod-ix, a tablet, code; with addition of the dimin. suffix -illus. See Code.

CODLING (1), a young cod. (E.) ME. codling. 'Itic mullus, a codling.' Voc. 642. 16. 'Codlinge, fische, morus.' Prompt. Parv. p. 85. Formed from cod (1) by help of the dimin. suffix -ling; cf. duck-ling.

CODLING (2), CODLIN, a kind of apple. (C.; with E. suffix -ing) In Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 5. 167, it means an unripe apple. Bacon mentions quaddins among the July fruits; Essay 46, Of Gardens. Quadding is from M.E. querdling. 'Querdlynge, appulle, Duracum.' Prompt. Parv. The suffix -ling is E.; but querd- may be Celtic; from Irish cuirt, cuirt, an apple-tree. ¶ The Irish cuirt is a very old word, as it was the name of Q in the Ogham alphabet. 'The names of the letters are taken from those of trees, as follows: B.—beith, birch. . . Q.—quirt, apple.' J. R. Allen, Monumental Hist. of Early Brit. Church; p. 71; Rhys, Lect. on Welsh Philology, and ed. p. 285. COEFFICIENT, cooperating with; a math. term. (L.) R. quotes coefficient from Glanvill, Vanity of Dogmatising, c. 12 (A.D. 1655). — L. co-, for con, i.e. cum, with; and efficient-, stem of efficiens, pres. part. of efficere, to cause, a verb compounded of prep. ex, out, and facere, to make. See Efficient. Der. coefficient-y.

COEQUAL, from Co-, q. v.; and Equal, q. v.

COERCE, to restrain, compel. (L.) Sir T. Elyot has coertion, The Governour, bk. i. c. 8. § 6. Coerce occurs in Butler, Sat. on Age of Ch. II., l. 162. — L. coercere, to compel. — L. co-, for con-, which for cum, with; and arce, to enclose, confine, keep off. From the same root is the L. arca, a chest, whence E. ark. See Ark. Der. coerc-ible, coerce-ive, coerce-ly, coerc-ion.

COEVAL, of the same age. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1681. Formed by help of the adj. suffix -al (as in equal) from L. coeuvus, of the same age. — L. co-, for con-, i.e. cum, together with; and euum, an age. See Age.

COFFEE, a decoction of berries of the coffee-tree. (Turk. — Arab.) 'A drink call'd coffa.' Bacon, Nat. Hist. s. 738. '1le [the Turk] hath a drink called cauphe.' Howell, bk. ii. lett. 55 (A.D. 1634). 'Their best drink is coffa.' Capt. J. Smith, Works, p. 856 (1603). — Turk. kahveh, coffee; — Arabic qahwah, coffee; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 476; also qahwa, qahwah (1). Rich. Dict. p. 1155.

COFFER, a chest for money. (F. — L. — Gk.) ME. cofer, cofre (with one f). But litle old in cofre; Chaucer, prol. 300. And see Robt. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, pp. 135, 224, 297. — OK. cofre, also cofin, a coffer. The learned form is cofin; the like popular change of n to r is seen in E. order, F. ordre, from L. ordinem. Thus coffer is a doublet of cofin. See Coffin. Der. coffer-dam.

COFFIN, a chest for enclosing a corpse. (F. — L. — Gk.) Originally any sort of case; it means a pie-crust in Shak. Tit. And. 2. 189. ME. cofin, coffin. Der. cog-wheel.

COG (2), to cheat, trick, delude. (Scand.) Obsolete. Common in Shak.; see Merry Wives, iii. 1. 123. 'To shake the bones and cog [cheat with] the craftie dice'; Turberville, To his Friend P. Of Courting, l. 13. To cog dice was to control their fall, in a cheating way; as by 'slyding, cogging, foystring.' Ascham, Toxophilus, ed. Arber, p. 54. Very likely, the little finger was used as a cog, being hitched against the die so as to direct it. The verb is almost certainly connected with the preceding sb.; cf. MDan. kogge, a cog. — Norw. kogge, to dupe; Swed. kugge, a cog; kugge, to cheat. See Cog (1).

Brugm. i. § 968. See Agitate, Agent. Der. cogitation, cogitation-ly.
COGNATE, of the same family, related, akin. (L.) In Howell's Letters, bk. iv. lett. 50. Bp. Taylor has cognation, Rule of Conscience, bk. ii. § 1; and scilicet cognationem in Wyclif, Gen. xxiv. 4. — L. cognatus, allied by birth, akin. — L. co-, for con, which for cum, together; and gnatus, born, old form of gnatus, pp. of gnasci, later nasci, to be born. See Natal.

COGNISANCE, knowledge, a badge. (F. — L.) We find conisantes in the sense of 'badges' (which is probably a scribal error for conisantes) in P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, l. 185; also conoisance, Gower, C. A. iii. 56; bk. vi. 1638. Conisance for 'knowledge'

COIF, a cap, cowl. (F.—MIIG.—L.) ME. coif, coife; Pol. It. Songs, ed. F., a hay-cock, heap of hay; also (through the idea of a collected crowd) confusion, bustle, stir, noise, &c. 'This mortal coil', the turmoil of life; Hamlet, iii. 1. 67. All from Coil (1). See E.D.D. and N.E.D. [Gael. coileid, a stir, is from E.]

'Coistrell, that wyethen on a speare, coistreller'; Palsgrave. From this evidence we may also infer that coistrell was an E. adaptation of the MF. word coistrellier or coistrellier, probably formed by the dropping of the last syllable and insertion of r after t (as in cart-ridge). —MF. coistrellier, 'an esquire of the body, an armour-bearer unto a knight, the servant of a man-at-arms' [which explains Palsgrave's definition]; also a groom of a stable, a 'house-keeper'; Cotgrave. The use of the word in the sense of 'paltry fellow' is precisely parallel to the similar use of groom, lackey, hind, &c. The lit. sense is one who carries a poniard, —MF. coistrell, 'a kind of long poniard, used heretofore by esquires'; Cot. Variant of OF. coistrell, spelt coistreau in Cotgrave, 'a knife, or whittle, a sword, or any such cutting weapon.' The s is unoriginal; the proper OF. spelling is coistrel or coistel, also cuitel. —L. cultellus, a knife; see Cutler, Cutlass. The Late L. equivalent of coistrel is cultellarius, a soldier armed with a cutlass (Ducange).

COKE, charred coal. (Scand.?) Not in early use. Plot, in his Staffordshire, ed. 1686, p. 128, says: 'The coal thus prepared they call coaks.' It may be identified with ME. colke, the core of an apple, the same as prov. E. coke, the core of an apple, also spelt cowk. 'Coke, pit-coal or sea-coal charred'; Coles, Dict. ed. 1684. 'Cowks, or cinders'; E. D. S., Gloss. B. 17. 'Cowk, the core: it's badly burnt lime, it's nought but cowks'; Cumberl. Gloss., E. D. S. Of doubtful origin. Perhaps allied to MSwed. kok, koka, Swed. koka, a clod, clot; Norw. kök, a clod, lump (as of earth or snow).

L. caule, openings; and prob. allied to E. hollow. See Hollow. ¶ The numerous related Teutonic words, including G. kohl, are all alike borrowed from the Latin. Cole is a variant of kail, q. v.; cf. cauliflower, colza.

See Labour.

COLLAPSE, to shrink together, fall in. (L.) The sb. is in much later use than the verb, and is omitted in Todd's Johnson; Richardson's three examples give only the pp. collapsed, as in 'collapsed state', Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 588. This pp. is a translation into English of the L. collapsus, pp. of collābi, to fall together,

This is derived from Late L. collecta, a collection in money, an assembly for prayer; used ecclesiastically to signify a collect; on which see Trench, On the Study of Words. L. collecta is the fem. of pl. collectus, gathered together.] — OF. collecter, to collect money; Roquefort. — Late L. collectare, to collect money. — L. collecta, a collection in money. — L. collecta, fem. of collectus, gathered together, pp. of colligere, to collect. — L. col., for con, i.e. cum, together; and legere, to gather, to read. Shepherd-dogs in the N. of England are called coaly dogs; 'Recreations in Nat. History, London, 1815. Supposed to be the same word as coaly, black (like coal), from the coal-black hairs. Cf. prov. F. coley, soot, also to blacken; and see below. Cf. collid, i.e. blackened, in Shak. Mid. Nt. Dr. i. 1. 145; see Colly (1).

COLLIER, a worker in a coal-mine. (E.) ME. colier, colyer; spelt also holier, choler, William of Palerne, ed. Skeat, 2520, 2523. Formed from ME. col, coal, by help of the suffix -er, with the insertion of i for convenience of pronunciation, just as in law-er for law-er, how-er for how-er, saw-er for saw-er. Thus the strict spelling should, by analogy, have been col-er. See further under Coal.

COLLIMATE, to adjust a telescope accurately. (L.) Cockeram has: 'Collimate, to level, or wink with one eye;' he means 'to aim at.' — L. collimat-us, pp. of collimare, a false form, being a misreading for collinere, to direct in a straight line, to aim, in some editions of Cicero. COLLOP, a slice of meat. (E.) 'Colloppe, fixitura, carbonacium, carbonella;' Prompt. Parv. p. 88. The pl. collopes is in P. Plowman, B. vi. 287. But in the same, C. ix. 309, a MSS. out of 6 have the older spelling colloppes. A compound word; orig. col-hoppe, where col- is the ME. col, a coal. In Noreen's Altschwed. Leseluch, p. 145, we have: 'kol-hoppadker . . . adj. roasted in the glow of the coals; cf. Swed. glöd-hoppad.' The latter means 'roasted on the glades or glowing coals;' from glöd, a glade. Rietz has Swed. dial. glü-hoppa, glüd-hoppja, glü-hyppe, a cake baked on the glades. We may conclude that ME. col-hoppe meant 'a thing baked or fried on the coals.' But the form hoppe requires further elucidation. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 44. A connexion with G. hippe (for hüppe, formerly hyp), a wafer, seems possible; see Weigand.

COLLOQUY, conversation. (L.) Used by Wood, Athenæ Oxonienses (R.) 'In the midst of this divine colloquy;' Spectator, no. 237. 'Colocynthis, a kind of wild gourd purging phlegm;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Coloquintida stands for colocynthis (iv [ii] Kings, iv. 39, Vulgate); this is the Latinised form of Gk. κολοκύνθης, the plant colocynthis, of which the acc. case is κολοκυνθίδα. The construction of new nominatives from old accusatives was a common habit in the middle ages. Besides κολοκύνθης, we find also κολοκύνθος, κολοκύνθη, a round gourd or pumpkin. β. Perhaps for κολοκυνθία, from κολο-, large, as in κολοκυμα, great wave, and κύνθη, from κύνει, to be big (as with child); see P'ellwitz.

Massinger has colonelship, New Way to pay Old Debts, Act iii. sc. 2. [Also spelt coronel, Holland's Pliny, bk. xxii. c. 23; which is the Spanish form of the word, due to substitution of r for l, a common linguistic change; whence also the present pronunciation cornel. An early example is: 'Hee was cornel of the footemen, thoughte that tearme in those dayes unuzed;' Life of Lord Grey (Camden Soc.), p. 1; written in 1575, and referring to 1544.] = F. colonel, colonel; Cotgrave has: 'Colonnel, a colonell or coronell, the commander of a regiment.' It also means the crest of a hill, of a dyke, or of a wave; as in 'the dikes combe;' Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 2564. spectacle.—Gk. κωμῶδης, a comic actor.—Gk. κωμος, for κῶμος, a banquet, a jovial festivity, festival procession; and κωδός, a singer, from κείναι, to sing; a comedy was originally a festive spectacle, with singing and dancing. For the latter part of the word, see Ode. Der. comedi-an. Closely related is the adj. comie, from L. comicus, Gk. κωμικός, belonging to comedy; whence, later, comic-al (Levins).

COMELY, becoming, seemly, handsome. (E.) ME. cumlich, cumelich, comlich, comlic, comelicke. Spelt comelicke, Will. of Palerne, ed. Skeat, 963, 987; comly, id. 294. Also used as an adv., id. 660; but in this sense comly also occurs; Chaucer, Book of the Duchess, 848. The comparative was comloker, and the superl. comlokest or comliest. AS. cymlic, comely, Grein, i. 177; cymlice, adv. id. β. According to the account in the N. E. D. (from which I dissent), the AS. cymlic was formerly cymlic (with y), and was allied to AS. cyme (formerly cyme?), fine, beautiful; which again is allied to OIIG. cūmig, weak, tender, and to OHG. kūm, with difficulty (G. kāum). Thus the orig. sense was 'like what is weak or tender'; but the y was shortened before ml, and the AS. cymlic was associated with AS. cuman, to come, and so gained the sense of 'becoming,' pleasing, decorous. γ. But we find AS. cymlicor as early as in Beowulf, l. 38, where it practically means 'stronger'; and the other examples of AS. cymlic point to a similar reference to beauty or strength. Moreover, we find MDu. komelick, 'apt, fit, or convenient.' Hexham; which is connected with komen, to come. Cf. also Become. I see no reason for connecting comely with OHG. cūmig; but prefer to connect it with Comie. See Phil. Soc. Trans. 1902, p. 658. Der. comeli-ness.

COMET, a star with a hair-like tail. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. comete, Rob. of Glouc. pp. 416, 548.—OF. comete, 'a comet, or blazing star'; Cot. It occurs as early as the 12th century (Hatzfeld).—L. comēta, comētis, a comet.—Gk. κομήτης, long-haired; hence, a comet.—Gk. κόμη, the hair of the head; cognate with L. coma, the same. Der. comet-ar-y. 66* The L. comēta occurs frequently in the AS. Chron. an. 678, and later. But the later form was due to French influence; cf. AF. comete, Gaimar, 1433.

COMFIT, a confect, a dry sweetmeat. (F.—L.) In Shak. i Hen. IV, iii. 1. 253. Spelt comfite, Hall's Chron. Henry VIII, an. 13. Corrupted from confit, by the change of n to m before f. ME. confite, so spelt in Ibbes Book, ed. Furnivall, p. 121, l. 75; cf. 'Confectio, confit,' Voc. 574, 36.—OF. confit, preserved, prepared, lit. 'steeped, confected, fully soaked'; Cotgrave. This word is the pp. of confire, 'to preserve, confect, soak'; id.—L. conficere, to put together, procure, supply, prepare, manufacture; pp. confectus; whence Late L. conficte, fruits preserved with sugar (Ducange), OF. confite, l. a confit, also confit, m. (the same); Godefroy.—L. con-, for cum, with, together; and facerē, to make. See Fact. Confit is a doublet of confect, q. v. Der. confit-ure; see Chaucer, C. T., C. 862.

COMFORT, to strengthen, encourage, cheer. (F.—L.) See Comfort in Trench, Select Glossary. Though the verb is the original of the sb., the latter seems to have been earlier introduced into English. The ME. verb is conforten, later comforten, by the change of n to m before f. It is used by Chaucer, Troil. and Cress. iv. 722, v. 234, 1395. [The sb. comfort is in Chaucer, Prol. 775, 778 (A 773, 776); but occurs much earlier. It is spelt confort in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 185; kunfort in Ancien Riwle, p. 14.]—OF. conforter, to comfort; spelt conforter in A. F.; see Vie de St. Auban, ed. Atkinson, 59, 284.—Late L. confortare, to strengthen, fortify; Ducange.—L. con-, for cum, together; and fortis, strong. See Fort. Der. comfort, sb.; comfort-able, comfort-abil-y, comfort-less.

CONFREY, the name of a plant. (F.—L.) Spelt confory, Book of St. Albans, fol. c. 6, back, l. 1; confery in the 14th cent., Reliquie Antique, i. 55; and in Mensor, Medical Werkes, 46, 10. (See also confrey in Britten and Holland's Plant-Names.)—OF. cunfrie; we find 'cunfria, cunfrie, galloe,' in a vocab. of the 13th cent., Voc. 555, 4; also OF. cunfrie, confrie in Godefroy. Here cunfrie is the OF. name, galloe the AS. name, and cunfria, the Late L. name; the last appears to be merely the OF. name Latinized. We even find the F. form consire in Cotgrave, explained as 'the herbe confrey'; but this may be an error for confire. [The mod. F. name is consoude (cf. Span. consuelda, Ital. consolida), derived from L. consolidare, from its supposed healing powers.] β. The OF. cunfrie or confrie appears to be a corruption of L. conferua, confrey, Pliny, xxvii. 8. [Another Late L. name was confirma; we find 'confirma, galloe,' in the Durham Glossary, pr. in Cockayne's Leechdoms, iii. 301; and at p. 162 of vol. i. we learn that the plant was called confirma or galloe. Halliwell gives 'galloe, confrey.' Perhaps the change from conferua or confirma to cunfrie was due to some confusion with F. confire (L. conficere)—to preserve, confect, soak, or steep in; Cotgrave.] γ. If this be right, the derivation is either from L. conferuere, to heal, grow together, said of broken limbs (Celsus); or from L. confirmare, to strengthen, from its healing powers; see Cockayne's Leechdoms, i. pref. p. liii, and cf. the Gk. name συμφύρον.

COMIC, COMICAL; see under Comedy.

COMITY, urbanity. (L.) Not very common. 'Comity, gentleness, courteous, mildness;' Mount, Glossographia, ed. 1674. It also has commixtion (MF. commixtion, Cot.: from L. commixtiōnem, acc. of commixtio, a mixing, mixture); but it occurs earlier, spelt comixtion, in Trevisa, ii. 159; see Spec. of Eng. ed. CORDWAINER, a shoemaker. (F.—a town in Spain.) 'A counterfeit earl of Warwick, a cordwainer's son,' Bacon, Life of Hen. VII. ed. Lumby, p. 177, l. 15. 'Cordwainer, alutarius,' Prompt. CORIANDEER, the name of a plant. (F.—L.—Gk.) See Exod. xvi. 31; Numb. xi. 7; where Wyclif has coriandre.—F. coriandre, 'the herb, or seed, coriander,' Cot.—L. coriandrum; Exod. xvi. 31 (Vulgate version); where the d is excrescent, as is so commonly the case after n.—Gk. κορίανδρον, κορίαν, also κόριαν, coriander. β. CORK, the bark of the cork-tree. (Span.—L.) 'Corkbarke, cortex, Corktree, suberis,' Prompt. Parv. p. 93. The earliest use of cork was in the sense of a cork shoe or slipper. In 1391, the Earl of Derby paid 3s. 'pro uno pare corkes,' for a pair of cork shoes; see Earl of Derby's Expeditions (Camden Soc.), p. 91, l. 19. The Acts of Edw. IV (in 1463-4, Act 2, 3, c. 4) have: 'Botes, shoen, galoches, or corkes' (N. E. D.). Adapted from M.Span. al-corne, 'a cork shoe, a pantofle,' Minshew. This seems to be an Arab. form allied to M.Span. (and Span.) al-corneque, the cork-tree; where al is the Arab. def. article, and corn-que is formed from L. quernus (for querquens), oaken, adj. from quercus, an oak; the tree being the Quercus Suber. 'But the bark of the tree was called, in Spanish, corcho; from L. corticem, acc. of cortex, bark. Hence F. cork is often derived from Span. corcho, though k from ch seems hardly possible. Der. cork, verb.

CORMORANT, a voracious sea-bird. (F.—L.) In Shak. Rich. II. ii. 1. 28. 'Cormerants, corvus marinus, cormeraudus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 93. Chaucer has cormeraunt, Parl. Foules, l. 362.—OF. cormorant, prob. for cormarene*, as in Godefroy (Supp.); MF. cormorant, m., cormerande, f.; Palsgrave.—OF. corpy, a crow; and OF. marne*, belonging to the sea, from L. mare, sea, with G. suffix -ing; cf. F. flam-ant, flaming, OF. flam-enc, with the same suffix; see Hatfield, Introd. § 142. [Cf. also Port. corvomarinho, Span. cuervo marino, a cormorant, lit. sea-crow; L. corvus marinus, which occurs as an equivalent to mergulus (sea-fowl) in the Reichenau Glosses, of the 8th century.] 'Another name for the bird is cormarant, 'sea-cuck,' see Godefroy (Supp.). The late spelling with o may have been due to Bret. morvan (W. morfan), a cormorant. The Breton and W. words are derived from Bret. and W. mór, the sea, and bran, a crow, by the usual change of b into v or f.

CORN (1), grain. (G.) ME. corn, Layamon, l. 166. The pl. cornes is in Chaucer, C. T., B 325. AS. corn, Grein, l. 166. + Du. koren; Iccl., Dan., and Swed. korn; Goth. kaurin; G. korn. Teut. type kern-, n.; Idg. type kern-, n.; whence OSlav. zrno, Russ. zerno, corn. Cf. L. grainum, grain; and Skt. jirya-, 'worn down,' pp. of jri, to grow old. Doublet, grain. (✓ GER.) Brugmann, i. § 628. See Grain, Kernal.

CORNE (2), an excrescence on the toe or foot. (F.—L.) In Shak. Romeo, i. 5. 19. 'Spelt corne in Prompt. Parv. = F. corne, 'a horn; a hard or horny swelling in the backpart of a horse'; Cot. Cf. OF. corn (F. cor), a horn, horny swelling.—L. cornu, horn, cognate with E. horn, q.v. Cf. prov. F. (Verdun) corne, a corn on the foot (Fertault). Der. corn-t-ous, horny; from the same source are cornea, q.v., cornel, q.v., corner, q.v., cornet, q.v., cornelian, q.v.; also corni-gerous, horn-bearing, from L. ger-ere, to bear; corni-cul-ate, horn-shaped, horned, from L. corniculatus, horned; corni-copia, q.v. See Corn.

CORNEA, a shrub; also called dogwood. (Du.) (L.) 'Cornels and bramble-berries gave the rest'; Dryden, Ovid's Metam. bk. i. l. 136. 'The cornel tree'; Lyte, tr. of Dodonæus, bk. vi. c. 51. [Cf. also F. cornille, 'a cornell-berry'; Cotgrave, cornillier, 'the long cherry, wild cherry, or cornell-tree'; id. Cornille was also spelt cornelle and cornelle; and cornillier was also cornallier and cornuillier; id.] = MDu. cornelle, 'the fruit of the cornell-tree'; Hexham; cf. MHG. cornelbaum, cornel-tree (Weigand). — Late L. cornelius, a cornel-tree. — L. cornum, a cornel-berry; cornus, a cornel-tree, so called from the hard, horny nature of the wood. — L. cornū, horn. Cf. Gk. κνῆστις, κνῆστις, a cornel. See CORN (2).

CORNELIAN, a kind of chalcedony. (F.—L.) ME. corneline; Maundeville's Travels, c. xxvii. p. 275; Palsgrave has cornalyn, p. 308. Formerly spelt corneline, cornaline, as in Maundeville and Cotgrave. — F. cornaline, 'the cornix or cornaline, a flesh-coloured stone'; Cotgrave. Cf. Port. cornalina, the cornelian-stone; also Ital. corniola, (1) a cornel-berry, (2) a cornelian, prob. so named because its colour resembles that of the fruit of the cornel-tree (Schade). — Late L. corniola, cornel-berry; cf. corniolium, cornel. — L. cornus, adj. from cornus, a cornel. See above. β. From the Ital. corniola, a cornelian, came the G. corniol, a cornelian, and the E. corniol, explained by 'a precious stone' in Kersey's and Bailey's Dictionaries. The change from corniol to corniol points to a popular etymology from L. carneus, fleshy, in allusion to the flesh-like colour of the stone. And this etymology has even so far prevailed as to cause corniol to be spelt corniol.

CORNET, a little horn; a sort of officer. (F.—L.) ME. cornet, a horn; Octovian Imperator, li. 1070, 1190; in Weber's Met. Rom. iii. 202, 207. Also a horned head-dress, a flag or standard; and then a troop of horse (because accompanied by a cornette or standard). Shak. 1 Hen. VI. iv. 3. 25; lastly, an officer of such a troop. — F. cornet, a little horn, dimin. of F. corne, a horn; cornette, f., a horned head-dress, a flag, cornet. See above.

CORNICE, a moulding, moulded projection. (F.—Ital.—L.) In Milton, P. L. i. 716. — MF. cornice, also corniche, 'the cornish, or brow of a wall, pillar, or other piece of building'; Cot.; mod. F. corniche. — Ital. cornice, 'the ledge wheron they hang tapestry in any room; also, an outcetting piece or part of a house or wall'; Florio. Origin uncertain; by some identified with Late L. corniæ, a square frame. — Gk. κορνίσις, a wreath, the cornice of a building (?); literally an adj. signifying 'crooked'; and obviously related to L. cornū, a crown. See CROWN. ¶ But Ital. cornice rightly means a crow; from L. cornicem, acc. of cornia, a crow. Cf. Corbel.

CORNUCOPIA, the horn of plenty. (L.) Ben Jonson has cornucopia, Every Man, iii. 6. 24; rightly. — L. cornū cōpia, horn of plenty; from cornū, horn, and cōpia, gen. of cōpia, plenty. See CORN (2) and COPIOUS.

COROLLA, the cup of a flower formed by the petals. (L.) A scientific term. Not in Johnson. — L. corolla, a little crown; dimin. of corōna, a crown. See CROWN. And see below.

COROLLARY, an additional inference, or deduction. (L.) 'A corollarie or mede of coroune, i.e. present of a crown or garland; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 10. l. 101. — L. corollarium, a present of a garland, a gratuity, additional gift; also an additional inference; prop. neuter of corollarius, belonging to a garland. — L. corolla, a garland; see above.

CORONACH, an outcry; a dirge. (Gael.) In Dunbar, Dance of the 7 Sins, l. 112; spelt correnach. — Gael. corranach, a dirge; lit. 'howling together'. — Gael. comh. CORONER, an officer appointed by the crown. (F.—L.) Also crowmer. 'Coroners and bailiffs'; Stow, King Stephen, an. 1142. The word coroner occurs in a spurious charter of King Athelstan to Beverley, dated A.D. 935, but really of the 14th century; see Diplomatarium Ævi Saxon., ed. Thorpe, p. 181, last line. — AF. coroner, coroner, Statutes of the Realm, i. 28, 30 (1375). — OF. corone, a crown. — L. corōna, a crown. β. The AF. coroner was Latinised as corōnarius, i.e. a crown-officer. Thus coroner is 'a crown-er', and the equivalent term crowmer (Hamlet, v. 1. 4) is quite correct.

CORONET, a little crown. (F.—L.) 'With coronettes upon their hedges'; Fabyan, Chron. an. 1432. Formed as a dimin., by help of the suffix -et (or -ette) from the OF. corone, a crown. — L. corōna, a crown. See CROWN.

Late L. corporalis, a chief, a commander; Ducange. This form is corrupt, due to association with Ital. capo, the head (from L. caput); which could never have evolved the syllable -or-. Cf. also Ital. caporarte, 'a ringleader', Florio; which may easily have suggested the change. Note Norm. dial. corporal, a corporal (Moisy). Der. corporal-ship.

CORPORAL (2), belonging to the body. (F.—L.) In Shak. Meas. iii. 1. 80. ME. corporel, Rom. Rose, 6757. — OF. corporel, corporel. — L. corporalis, bodily. — L. corpor-, for corpos*, stem of corpus, the body; with suffix -ali. (See CORPS. Brugmann, i. § 555. Der. From the same stem we have corp-ate, -ate-ly, -at-ion; -at (from L. corporeus, belonging to the body), -eal-ly, -eal-ity; and see CORPS, CORPSE, CORPUSCULE, corset, corlet.

CORPS, CORPSE, CORSE, a body. (F.—L.) Corps, i.e. a body of men, is mod. Morris, p. 28, l. 10. Corps was also in early use; MF. corps, Chaucer, C. T. 2821 (A 2819); and is derived from late O. 'Costardmonger, fruytier,' i.e. fruiterer; Palsgrave. The etymology of costard, an apple, is uncertain; but the suffix ard is properly OF., so that the word is presumably OF., and related to OF. coste, a rib, with reference to such apples as had prominent ribs. = L. costa, a rib. Cf. F. fruit côtelé, ribbed fruit; Hamilton. y. The word monger is F.; see Ironmonger. ¶ There is no reason for connecting costard with custard. The custard-apple mentioned in Dampier's Voyages, an. 1699 (R.) is quite a different fruit from the ME. costard.

COSTIVE, constipated. (F. - L.) 'But, trow, he loose or costive of laughter?' Ben Jonson, The Penates. = OF. costivi, pp., constipated (Godefroy). = L. constipatus, pp. of constipare, to constipate. See Constipate. Der. costive-ness.

COSTMARY, a plant. (F. - L. - Gk.) Lyte has costmary; tr. of Dodoeus, bk. ii. c. 76. ME. costmary, Two Cookery Books, ed. Austin, p. 110, l. 4. Compounded of rost and Marye; the latter referring to St. Mary the Virgin. Cost is F. cost, which Cotgrave explains by 'costmary, balsamine, alceost.' = L. costum, n. = Gk. κόστος, an aromatic root (of a different odoriferous plant). This is of Eastern origin; cf. Skt. śushkū, Costus speciosus; Arab. qust, costus; Rich. Dict. p. 1130.

COSY, COZY, snug, comfortably sheltered. (Scand.) This word appears to have been introduced from Lowl. Scotch. We find: 'cosie in a hoord,' Ramsay's Poems, i. 305 (Jamieson); and 'cosie if the neuk,' Burns, Holy Fair, st. 20. It seems to be from Norw. kosa, (o=oo), v., to refresh, whence kost seg, to enjoy oneself; whence also kuselig = Dan. hyggelig, which Ferrall translates by 'comfortable, snug, cosy,' and kosing, refreshment, recreation (Aasen). Larsen gives Norw. kostlig, 'snug, cosy.' Prob. allied to Swed. dial. kosa to warm, kansig, warm.

COT, a small dwelling. COTE, an enclosure. (E.) 'A luteal kot,' Ancren Riwle, p. 362. Cote, in Havelok, ll. 737, 1147. 'Hec casa, casula, a cote,' Wright's Vocab. i. 273. AS. cot, cote, a cot, den; '16 pfoða cote' = for a den of thieves, Matt. xii. 13. 'In cote flinun,' into thy chamber; Northumbrian gloss to Matt. vi. 6. [We also find AS. cote, Grein, i. 181.] Du. kot, a cot, cottage; Icel. kot, a cot, hut; G. kot, a cot (a provincial word); Flägel's Dict. [The W. cot, a cot, was borrowed from English.] Der. cott-age (with F. suffix); cott-ag-er; cott-ar, cott-er; cf. also sheep-cote, dove-cote, &c. Also cot-quean, lit. a hussy (living in) a cot, Romeo, iv. 4. 6; see Quean.

COTERIE, a set, company. (F.—Tent.) Mere French. Cotgrave gives: 'Coterie, company, society, association of people.' B. Marked by Brachet as being of unknown origin. Referred in Dietz to F. cote, a quota, share, from L. quatus, how much. But Littré rightly connects it with OF. coterie, coterie, servile tenure, cottier, a cottar, &c. A coterie (Low L. coterio) was a tenure of land by cottars who clubbed together. —Low L. cota, a cot; of Teutonic origin. See Cot.

COTILLON, COTILLION, a dance for eight persons. (F.—Tent.) It occurs in a note to v. 11 of Gray's Long Story. —F. cotillon, lit. a petticoat, as explained by Cotgrave. Formed with suffix -illon from F. cotte, a coat, frock. See Coat.

Dict. col. 472.

COTTON (2), to agree. (F.—Span.—Arabic.) 'Cotton, to succeed, to hit, to agree,' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. 'To cotton well' was orig. to form a good nap (to cloth, &c.). Thus Phillips (ed. 1706), s.v. Cotton (sic) has: 'in making flatts, to cotton well is when the wooll and other materials work well and imbode together.' From Cotton (1), above. Cf. prov. E. cotton (E.D.D.).

COTYLEDON, the seed-lobe of a plant. (Gk.) Introduced by Linnaeus in a new sense. As an anatomical term, it occurs as early as 1545. See Phillips. —Gk. κωτυλῶν, a cup-shaped hollow. —Gk. κωτῶν, a hollow, hollow vessel, small cup. Cf. Goth. hōtkjō, a chamber (Uhlenbeck). Der. cotyledon-ous.

From an imitative root kush*, weak grade kuh*, to gasp; see Chin-cough. Der. cough, sb.; chin-cough.

COUGUAR, COUGAR, the puma. (F.—Brazil.) Spelt cougar in a tr. of Buffon (1792), i. 193. —F. cougar (Buffon). From the Guarani name, given as cugucuu-arana in Hist. Brasil. (1648), ii. 235.

COUNCIL, an assembly. (F.—L.) In Shak. L. L. v. 2. 789. Often confused with counsel, with which it had originally nothing to do; council can only be rightly used in the restricted sense of 'assembly for deliberation.' Misspelt council in the following quotation. 'They shall deliver you vp to their councils, and shall scourge you in their sinagoges or council-houses;' Tyndal, Works, p. 214, col. 2; cf. conciliis in the Vulgate version of Matt. x. 17. —AF. counceille, Langtoft's Chron. i. 488; F. concile, 'a council, an assembly, session'; Cot. —L. concilium, an assembly called together. —L. con-, for cum, together; and culture, to summon; see Calends. COUNT (1), a title of rank. (F.—L.) The orig. sense was 'companion.' Not in early use, being thrust aside by the E. word earl; but the fem. form occurs earlier, being spelt countess in the AS. Chron. A.D. 1140. The derived word county, a county, occurs in P. Plowman, B. ii. 85. Shak. has county in the sense of count frequently; Merch. of Ven. i. 2. 49. —AF. count, Polit. Songs, p. 127; OF. conte, comte; Cotgrave gives 'Comte, an earl,' and 'Comte, a count, an earle.' —L. acc. comitem, a companion, a count; from nom. comes. —L. com-, for cum, together; and it-um, supine of ire, to go. I.). —OF. countenance, which Cotgrave explains by 'the countenance, looke, cheere, visage, favour, gesture, posture, behaviour, carriage.' —L. continentia, which in Late L. meant 'gesture, behaviour, demeanour'; Ducange. —L. continent-, stem of pres. part. of continere, to contain, preserve, maintain; hence, to comport oneself. See Contain. Der. countenance, vb.; discountenance.

COUNTER, in opposition (to), contrary. (F.—L.) 'This is counter;' Hamlet, iv. 5. 110; 'a hound that runs counter;' Com. Errors, iv. 2. 39. And very common as a prefix. —F. contre, against; common as a prefix. —L. contrā, against; common as a prefix. See Contra.

COUNTERACT, to act against. (Hybrid; F. and L.) Counteraction occurs in The Ramlor, no. 93. Coined from counter and act. See Counter and Act. Der. counteraction, -ive, -ive-ly.

See Counter and Fact. Der. counterfeit, vb., ME. counterfeten; whence pp. counterfets, Chaucer, C. T. 5166 (B 746). The same spelling feit occurs in forfeit, q.v.

COUNTERMAND, to revoke a command given. (F.—L.) Used by Fabian, Chron. c. 245, near end; Palsgrave has contremander, p. 497. —F. contremander, 'to countermand, to recall, or contradict, a former commandment.' Cot. Compounded of contre, against; and mander, to command. —L. contrā, against; and mandare, to command. See Mandate. Der. countermand, sb.

COUNTERPANE (1), a coverlet for a bed. (F.—L.) A twice altered form, connected neither with counter nor with pane, but with quilt and point. The English altered the latter part of the word, and the French the former. The older E. form is counterpoint, as in Shak. Tam. Shrew, ii. 353. 'Bedsteads with silver felt, embroidered coverlets, or counterpoints of purple silk;' North's Platsarch, p. 39; 'On which a tissue counterpane was cast;' Drayton, The Barons' Wars, b. vi. st. 42. —MF. contrepoinet, 'the back stitch or quilting-stitch; also a quilt, counterpoint, quilted covering;' Cot. B. Thus named, by a mistaken popular etymology, from a fancied connexion with OF. contrepointier, 'to work the back-stitch,' id.; which is from contre, against, and pointe, a bodkin. But Cotgrave also gives 'contrepoint, to quilt; and this is a better form, pointing to the right origin. [In mod. F. we meet with the still more corrupt form countrepointe, a counterpane, which see in Hatzfeld.] γ. The right form is counteipointe (Supp. to Godefroy, p. 233), where counte is from L. culeicia, the same as culeitra, a cushion, mattress, pillow, or quilt. —Late L. culeicia puncta, a counterpane; lit. stitched quilt. 'Estque total lecto quod supra ponitur alto Ornatus causa, quod dicunt culeicia puncta;' Ducange. δ. Thus counteipointe has become countrepointe in mod. French, but also produced countrepointe in Middle French, whence the E. derivative counterpoint, now changed to counterpane. See Quilt. The fem. pp. puncta is from the verb pungere, to prick; see Point. ¶ The AF. forms are countepunt, quilt poynt, Royal Wills, pp. 36, 100 (1360, 1381); cuille pointe, Vic de St. Auban.

F. point), a point. See Counter and Point. 'Counterpoint' in its literal and strict sense signifies point against point. Arts and Sciences, s. v.

COUNTERPOISE, the weight in the other scale. (F.—L.) In Shak. All's Well, ii. 3. 182.—F. contrepois, contrepoids. Cotgrave gives the former as the more usual spelling, and explains it by 'counterpois, equal weight.' See Counter and Poise. Der. counterpoise, verb.

COUNTERSCARP, the exterior slope of a ditch. (F.—Ital.—L. and Teut.) The interior slope is called the scarp. The word is merely compounded of counter and scarp. Ital. contrada.—Late L. contrāda, contrāda, country, region; an extension of L. contra, over against. β. This extension of form was explained by Diez as a Germanism, viz. as an imitation of G. gegend, country, lit. 'that which is opposite to the view,' from gegen, against; but the imitation arose in the contrary way, the G. gegend (which is meaningless) having been suggested by the Late L. contrāda, which appears as Ital. prov. and Roumansh contrada, as well as F. contrée. γ. Contrāda is regularly formed, as if a fem. pp. from a verb contrāre*, to place opposite, from contra, over against. Der. country-dance, country-man.

Remote origin uncertain; not to be confused with cave, nor covey, nor cup, nor clove, with all of which it has been connected without reason. Cf. Brugmann, i. § 658 (a). Der. cove, verb, to over-arch. ☞ The obsolete verb cove, to brood (Richardson) is from quite another source, viz. Ital. covare, to brood; from L. cubare; see Covey.

COVENANT, an agreement. (F.-L.) ME. covenant, couenaunt, covenand (with n for v); often contracted to conand, as in Barbour's Bruce. Spelt covenant, printed covenand, K. Alisaundra, ed. Weber, 2036. = OF. covenant, covenant; Godefroy. Formed as a pres. pt. from convenir, to agree, orig. to meet together, assemble. = L. convener, to come together. See Convene. Der. covenant, verb; covenant-er.

COVER, to conceal, hide, spread over. (F.-L.) ME. couveren, heueren, kiuern (with u for v). Chaucer has couvered, C. T. 6172 (D 590). = OF. covrir, covrir, to cover; cf. Ital. coprire. = L. coprire, to cover. = L. co-, for com, i. e. cum, together, wholly; and operire, to shut, hide, conceal. β. It is supposed that L. operire, to shut, is for pop-urire; cf. Lith. az-ur-iu, I shut, Lith. wariati, doors; and Oscan acc. veru, a door. See Brugmann, i. § 350. Der. covering, couver-let, q.v.; also coveit, q.v.; ker-chief, q.v.; cur-few, q.v.

COVERT, a place of shelter. (F.-L.) In early use. 'No covert mist thie cacche'—they could find no shelter; William of Palerne, 2217. = OF. covert, a covered place; pp. of covrir, to cover. See Cover. Der. covert, adj., -ly; covert-ure (Gower, C. A. i. 224). COVERT, to desire eagerly and unlawfully. (F.-L.) ME. covetien, coveten (with u for v). Who so coveteth all, at leseth, who covets all, loses all; Rob. of Glouc. p. 306. = AF. covetier, Lai d'Havelok, l. 695; (F. covetier, with inserted n), to covet; cf. Ital. cubiare (for cupiar), to covet. β. Formed, as if from a L. cupidiare*, from acc. cupidius-tem, eager desire: which is from cupidus, desirous of. = L. cupere, to desire. See Cupid. Der. covetous (AF. cuvetuis, Edw. Confessor, l. 223; OF. covoutis, F. covouteut); -ly, -ness. Covetous was in early use, and occurs, spelt covetus, in Floriz and Blanchefleur, ed. Lumley, l. 355.

COVEY, a brood or hatch of birds. (F.-L.) = Covey of pterid-chys, i.e. partridges; Prompt. Parv. p. 96. = OF. covee, F. couvee, a covey of partridges; fem. form of the pp. of OF. coveer, F. coveer, to hatch, sit, brood. = L. cubare, to lie down; cf. E. incubate. Cf. Gk. κύνειν, to bend, κύνος, bent.

COVIN, secret agreement, fraud; a law-term. (F.-L.) The Anglo-French covert occurs in the Stat. of the Realm, i. 162, an. 1311. The ME. covine, covin, counsel, trick, sleight, is in Chaucer, C. T. 606 (A 604). = OF. covin, m., covine, f., counsel, intention (Godefroy). = Late L. convension, a convention, pl. convensia (whence the OF. fem. form). = L. convener, to come together; see Covenant, Convene. Thus covin = convension.

COW (1), the female of the bull. (E.) ME. cu, cow; pl. ky, kie, kye; also kin, kyn, mod. E. kine, due to AS. cýna, gen. pl. The pl. ky is in Cursor Mundi, 4564; kin in Will. of Palerne, 2444, 480; kyen in Caxton, Godefroy of Bolyne, ch. 8, l. 125; kie in Golding's Ovid, fol. 26. AS. cū, pl. cý, formed by vowel-lengthening; Grein, l. 172. Teut. stem kū-*, whence also Icel. kýr. Cf. also Dan. køe, Swed. and Dan. ko, G. kuh; from Teut. stem kō-*. Further allied to OIrish gāi, Gael. bā, a cow; W. bua, a cow; L. bō, gen. bovis, an ox; Gk. βοῦς, an ox; Pers. gāw, Skt. gāu (nom. gāu); Russ. goviodo, oxen. Idg. stems g(w)u-, g(w)ow-. See Beef, Kine.

COW (2), to subdue, dishearten, terrify. (Scand.) 'It hath cow'd my better part of man'; Mach. v. 8, 18. = Icel. kaga, to cow, tyrannise over; lata kagask, to let oneself be cowed into submission; see Cleasby and Vigfusson; Dan. kue, to bow, cower, subdue; Swed. kufva, to check, curb, suppress, subdue. See Cuff (1).

COWARD, a man without courage. (F.-L.) ME. coward, more often coward; spelt coward in King Alisaundra, ed. Weber, l. 2108. = AF. coward, a coward, Langtoft's Chron. i. 104; OF. covari, more usually couri (Supp. to Godefroy), a coward, poltroon; equivalent to It. codardo. β. Sometimes explained as an animal that drops his tail; cf. the heraldic expression lion coward, a lion with his tail between his legs. Mr. Wedgwood refers to the fact that a hare was called coward in the old terms of hunting; 'le coward, on le court cow' = the hare, in Le Venery de Twety, in Reliquie Antiquæ, i. 153; and he thinks that the original sense was 'bob-tailed', with reference to the hare in particular. To which may be added, that Court is the name of the hare in the French version of Reynard the Fox. Or again, it may merely mean one who shows his tail, or who turns tail. γ. Whichever be right, there is no doubt that the word was formed by adding the suffix -ard (Ital. -ardo) to the OF. coe, a tail (Ital. coda). = OF. coe, a tail; with the suffix -ard, of Teutonic origin. = L. cauda, a tail; with OHG. suffix -hart, orig. 'hard'. See Caudal. Der. coward, adj., -ly, -li-ness, -ice = ME. cowardis, Gower, C. A. ii. 66 (OF. coard-ice).

COWER, to crouch, shrink down, squat. (Scand.) ME. couren. 'Courer in a cope'; Polit. Songs, p. 157 (temp. Edw. I.). 'He koured low'; William of Palerne, l. 47; 'Ye . . . cowardly as catiffs couren here in meuwe' = ye cowardly cover here in a mew (or cage) like catiffs; id. 3336. = Icel. kura, to doze, lie quiet; Swed. kura, to doze, to doze, to settle to rest as birds do; Dan. kure, to lie quiet, rest; Swed. dial. kura, to sit hunched up. Cf. G. hauern, to cower.

COWL (1), a monk's hood, a cap, hood. (L.) ME. coule. 'Coule, munkys abyte [monk's habit], cuculla, cucullus'; Prompt. Parv. p. 97. [Another form covel occurs 5 times in Havelok, ll. 768, 858, 964, 1144, 2904, spelt covel, cuel, koual, and meaning 'a coat'; from AS. cufle, a cowl (Hosworth); the f passing into ME. v.] ME. coule is from AS. cugle, cugle, cule; the last of these occurs in Ælfric's Saints' Lives, c. xxxiii. l. 237. β. These words are all from Late L. cuculla, a frock, sometimes a hood; from L. cucullus, a hood.

COWL (2), a vessel carried on a pole. (F.-L.) The pole supporting the vessel was called a cowl-staff; see Merry Wives, iii. 3. 156. 'Cowl, a large wooden tub; formerly, any kind of cup or vessel'; Halliwell. ME. cuel (= cuvet), as in cuvet-staff, Gen. and Exodus, l. 3710. = OF. cuel, later cueau, 'a little tub'; Cot. Dimin. of F. cuve, 'an open tub, a fat, or vat'; id. = L. cupa, a vat, butt, large cask. Der. cowl-staff; see staff.

COWRY, a small shell used for money. (Hind.-Skt.) = Couries (the Cypraea moneta) are used as small coin in many parts of Southern Asia, and especially on the coast of Guinea in Africa; Eng. Cycl., Arts and Sciences, s.v. Cowry. The word is Hindustani, and must therefore have been carried to the Guinea-coast by the English. = Hind. kaupri, 'a small shell used as coin; money, fare, hire'; Forbes' Hind. Diet. p. 281. = Skt. kaparda, kapardika, a cowry. See Yule. H. II. Wilson, at p. 271, cites also Bengali kari, Guzerathi kori.

COWSLIP, the name of a flower. (E.) In Milton, Comus, 898. Shak. has both cowslip, Temp. v. 1. 89; and oxlip, Mids. Nit. Dr. ii. 1. 250. ME. cowslippe, cowsloup; Prompt. Parv. p. 99. AS. cū-slyppe, cūslōppe; for the former form, see Cockayne's Leechdoms, Glossary; the entry 'britannica, cūslōppe' is in Ælfric's Glossary; Voc. 135. 26; cf. 361. 23. β. By the known laws of AS. grammar, the word must be divided as cū-slyppe or cū-slōppe, where cū means cow; cf. cū-nille, wild chervil (Leo). The word ox-slip was made to match it, and therefore stands for ox-slip or ox-slop; cf. prov. E. bull-slop, a large oxlip, E.D.D., p. 435. The word slyppe or sloppe means lit. a slop, i.e. a piece of dung. An examination of the AS. names of plants in Cockayne's Leechdoms will strengthen the belief that many of these names were of a very homely character. Cf. Icel. kú-rki, a primrose, lit. 'cow-leavings'; MDan. boðriv, marsh marigold, lit. 'cow-dirt'. See Slop.

COXCOMB, a fool, a fop. (E.) In Shakespeare, it means (1) a fool's cap, Merry Wives, v. 5. 146; (2) the head, Tw. Nit. v. 179, 193, 195; (3) a fool, Com. Err. iii. 1. 32. 'Let the fool go like a coxcomb still'; Drant's Horace, Ep. bk. i. To Scæva. For cock's comb, i.e. cock's crest. See Cockcomb in Minshew (1627), who explains it. See Cook and Comb.

COXSWAIN, COCKSWAIN, the steersman of a boat. (Hybrid; F. and Scand.) The spelling coxswain is modern; cockswain occurs in Drummond's Travels, p. 70 (Todd's Johnson); in Anson's Voyage, b. iii. c. 9; and in Cook's Voyage, vol. i. b. ii. c. 1 (R.). The word is compounded of cock, a boat, and swain; and means the person in command of a boat, not necessarily the steersman, though now commonly so used. See Cook (5) and Swain.

COY (1), modest, bashful, retired. (F.-L.) = Coy, or sobry, sobrius, modestus; Prompt. Parv. p. 86. = OF. coi, earlier quei, coit (Godefroy), still, quiet. = Folk-L. quētum*, acc. of quētus*, for L. quētus, quiet, still. = L. quēt-, stem of quies, rest. See Quiet. Der. coy-ly, -ness, -ish, -ness. Doublet, quiet.

COY (2), a decoy for wild duck. (Du.-L.) See N.E.D. and E.D.D. = Du. koer, a cage; MDu. koeye (Hexham) = Late L. cavea, a cage. See Cage; of which coy is a doublet.

COZEN, to flatter, to beguile. (F.-L.) In Shak. Merry Wives, iv. 2. 180. 'When he had played the cousining man with others . . . himself was beguiled.' Ilakluyt, Voyages, i. 586. Here the spelling agrees with that of Cousin, q.v. Cozen is, in fact, merely a verb evolved out of cousin. = F. cousiner, 'to claime kindred for advantage, or particular ends; as he, who to save charges in travelling, goes from house to house, as cozin to the honour of every one'; Cot. So in mod. F., cousiner is 'to call cousin, to sponge, to live upon other people'; Hamilton and Legros. The change of meaning from 'sponge' to 'beguile' or 'cheat' was easy. Cf. OF. cosin, a dupe (Godefroy). Der. cozen-age, cozen-er.

CRAB (1), a common shell-fish. (E.) ME. erabbe, Old Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 51. 'Crabbe, tre, acerbus, macianus, arbutus'; id. Cf. prov. E. scrab, a crab-apple, E.D.D.; and Swed. dial. skrabba, fruit of the wild apple; also, anything poor or weak; cf. Swed. skrabbig, weakly.

CRABBED, peevish; cramped. (E.) 'The awres [arrows] of thy crabbed eloquence,' Chaucer, C. T. 9079 (E 1203). Cf. Lowland Scotch crab, to provoke, in Jamieson; he cites the sentence 'thou hes crabbit and offendit God' from Abp. Hamilton's Catechism, fol. 153 b. 'Crabbid, awake, or wrawe, cernicus, bilousus, cancericus,' Prompt. Parv. p. 99. β. From the same root as Crab (1), q.v. Cf. Du. krabben, to scratch; krabben, to quarrel, to be cross, to be peevish; krabbig, peevish, forward; evidently the equivalent of crabbed in the sense of peevish. γ. As regards the phrase 'to write a crabbed hand,' cf. Icel. krab, a crabbed hand, Icel. krabba, to scrawl, write a crabbed hand; Du. krabbelen, to scribble, scrawl, scrape, a dimin. form from krabben, to scratch. 'Thus crabbed, in both senses, is from the same root. It is remarkable that the Prompt. Parv. translates crabbid by L. cancerinus, from cancer, a crab. Der. crabbed-ly, -ness.

CRACK, to split suddenly and noisily. (E.) ME. craken, kraken; Havelock, 1857. 'Speren chrakeden,' spears cracked; Layamon, iii. 94. AS. cracian, to crack (Hosworth). An imitative word, like crack, crack, crash, gnash. Cf. Skt. garj, to roar. Der. crack-sh, crack-er; crack-le, the frequentative form, signifying 'to crack often,' crake, to boast, an obsolescent word, also crack-n-sit, q.v.

CRACKNEL, a kind of biscuit. (F.-Du.) 'Crakenelle, brede, crepetullus, fraginellus,' Prompt. Parv. p. 100. 'Crakenell, cracque-llin,' Palsgrave. A curious perversion of F. cracquelin, which Cotgrave explains by 'cracknell'; the E. crack-en-el answering to F. crag-el-in. = Du. krakeling, a cracknel; formed with dim. suffix -el and the suffix -ing from kraken, to crack; from the crisp nature of the biscuit.

CRADLE, a child's crib; a frame. (F.) ME. cradel, Ancrén Riwle, p. 260. AS. cradol; in comp. cild-eradol, child-cradle; Ælfric's Homilies, ed. Thorpe, ii. 76. [A true Teutonic word, not borrowed from Celtic. Irish cradhal, Gael. creadhail, a cradle, a grate, are from English.] Allied to mod. G. krütze, a basket, given by Kluge; MHG. kratte, kretze, OIG. cratulo, crezzo, a basket (Schade). On the other hand, Schade regards these G. words as derived from L. crates, a hurdle; which seems unlikely.

CRRAFT, skill, ability, trade. (E.) ME. craft, craft; Layamon, i. 120. AS. craft, Grein, i. 167. + Du. kracht, power; Icel. kræft, kræft, craft, force; Swed. and Dan. kræft, power; G. kræft, power, energy. β. Formed with suffixed -t from Teutonic stem kraf-*; cf. Icel. kræft, strong, or daring. Perhaps allied to AS. cræfan, to crave, demand; see Crave. Der. craft-y, -ily, -iness, craft-s-man; also hand-i-craft, q.v.

word, like crack, crack, and crack; and see Crow. The Gk. κράξ, Lat. cras, also signifies a sort of land-rail, similarly named from its cry. Der. corn-crake, Holland The Howlat, l. 782; night-crake, Voc. 630. 40.

CRAMP, to press close together. (E.) ME. crammn. 'Fu crammyn!' Wyclif, IIos. xlii. 6. AS. crammian, to stuff. The entry 'farcio, ic crammige' occurs in Ælfric's Grammar, De Quarta Conjugatione. The compound verb undercrammian, to fill underneath, occurs in Ælfric's Homilies, i. 430. [+Icel. kræmja, to squeeze, bruise; Swed. krama, to squeeze, press; Dan. kramme, to crumple, crush.] From cramm, 2nd grade of the AS. strong verb crim-an, to crumple. Cf. OHG. chrimman, MHG. krimmen, to seize with the claws, G. grimmen, to grip, gripe. Allied to Cramp.

CRANBERRY, a kind of sour berry. (Low G.) For craneberry; from some fanciful notion. Perhaps 'because its slender stalk has been compared to the long legs and neck of a crane' (Webster). Not in ME.; first in 1672; from Low G. = Low G. kraanbere (Berghaus); G. kraanbere, explained in Flügel's Dict. as 'a crane-berry, red bilberry.' And, most unequivocally, in Dan. tranebær, a craneberry, Swed. tranebär, a craneberry, where the word follows the peculiar forms exhibited in Daa. trane, Swed. trana, a crane. See Crane, and Berry.

CRANE, a long-legged wading bird. (E.) 'Crane, byrde, grus,' Prompt. Parv. p. 100. Spelt cran, Layamon, ii. 422. Cf. also L. grus, a crane; Lith. garnys, a stork. β. The word is usually derived from the bird's cry; from G. GER, to call, cry out; cf. Gk. κράνω. β. It is to be noted, further, that, in the sense of a machine for raising weights, we have still the same word; see Arnold's Chronicle, 1502 (ed. 1811, p. 127). In this sense, we find Gk. κράνω, Dan. and Swed. kran, Du. kraan, G. krahn; cf. Icel. trana, a framework for supporting timber. Ultimately, a very different use of crank (a), from the notion of turning quickly. Cf. Norw. kring, active, brisk, Dan. dial. krang, dexterous, Icel. kringer, easy.

CRANNY, a rent, chink, crevice. (F.—L.) ME. crany, with one n; see Prompt. Parv. p. 100, where crane or crany is translated by L. rima, a chink. 'Crany, cranyse;' Palgrave. Formed by adding the E. dimin. suffix -y to F. cran, a notch; also spelt cran, as in Cotgrave; or from OF. crane, a nook (Godefroy). Cf. Ital. crena, a notch (Florio); and perhaps L. crēna, a notch, used by Pliny, but of doubtful authority; see Körtling, § 2591. Der. (from L. crēna) cran-ate, q. v., cran-ell-ate, q. v.

CRANTS, a garland, wreath. (MDu.—G.) In Hamlet, v. 1. 255. Lowland Scotch crance (Jamieson). The spelling krants is given by Kilian for the Du. word now spelt krans, a wreath, garland, chaplet; cf. Dan. krands, Swed. krans, — G. kranz, a wreath.

CRAPE, a thin crisp silk stuff. (F.—L.) 'A saint in crap;' Pope, Moral Essays, l. 136. — F. crapē, spelt crapē in Cotgrave, who explains it by 'cipes, cobweb lawne.' OF. crapē, 'curled, frizzled, crisped, criske;' id. — L. crispus, crisped, curled. See CRISP. Thus crapē is a doublet of crisp.

CRARE, a kind of ship. (F.) Shak. has 'sluggish crare;' Cymb. iv. 2. 205 (old edd. care); see also crarer in Halliwell; cray in Nares. MF. crayer, Allit. Morte Arthure, 738, 3666. — OF. crarier, crer, a vessel of war (Godefroy); apparently a Norman word; Low L. cratera, creyera. Origin unknown.

CRASH, to break in pieces forcibly, to make a sudden grating noise. (Scand.) Shak. has the sb. crash, Hamlet, ii. 2. 498. 'He shak't his head, and crash't his teeth for ire;' Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, bk. vii. st. 42. 'Crashyn, as tethe, fremo;' Prompt. Parv. p. 100; Allit. Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, l. 1109. A mere variant of craze, and both crash and craze are again variants of crack. Cf. clash, dash; of imitative origin. Perhaps suggested by Swed. krasa, to crackle; slå i kras, to dash to pieces; Dan. krase, to crackle; slaa i kras, to break to shivers. See CRASE, CRACK. Der. crash, sb.

CRASIS, the contraction of two vowels into a long vowel or diphthong. (Gk.) Grammatical. Borrowed from Gk. κράσις, a mixing, blending. — Gk. κράσιον, I mix, blend. See CRATER.

CRASS, thick, dense, gross. (L.) 'Of body somewhat crasse and corpulent;' Hall's Chron. Hen. VII. an. 21. § 5. — L. crassus, thick, dense, fat. D. r. crass-i-tude; crassel, q. v.

CRATCH, a manger, crib for cattle. (F.—OHG.) ME. crache, creche; used of the manger in which Christ was laid; Cursor Mundi, 11237; spelt creche, Ancien Riwle, p. 260. — OF. creche (mod. F. crèche), a manger, crib. [The Provencal form is crepcha, and the Ital. is greppia; all are of OHG. origin.] — OHG. cripēa (whence G. krippe), a crib; cf. OSax. kribbia, a crib; see the Heland, ed. Heyne, l. 382. And see CRIB. Der. cratch-cradle, i.e. crib-cradle; often unmeaningly turned into scratch-cradle.

CRATE, a wicker case for crockery. (MDu.) 'I have seen a horse carrying home the harvest on a crate;' Johnson, Journey to the Western Islands. Grose (1790) has: 'crates, panniers for glass or crockery.' And see F.D.D. Perhaps from MDu. kratte, Du. krat, a basket; cf. MDu. krēse, a wicker pannier (Hexham); OHG. cratin, a basket. β. Or, otherwise, from L. crātes, a hurdle; properly of wicker-wo. k. And see Cart, Cradle.

CRATER, the cup or opening of a volcano. (L.—Gk.) Used by Berkeley, to Arbutnot, Description of Vesuvius, 1717 (Todd's Johnson). 'Crater, a cup or bowl, a goblet;' Bailey, vol. ii. (1731). — L. crater, a bowl; the crater of a volcano. — Gk. κράτης, a large bowl in which things were mixed together. — Gk. κράσιον, I mix; from the base κρ-. Cf. Skt. grī, to mix.

CRAYAT, a kind of neckcloth. (F.—Austrian). Spelt crabat in Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3. 166: 'Canonical crabat of Smeck.' But this is a corrupted spelling. Dryden has: 'His sword-knot this, his cravat that designed;' Epilogue to the Man of Mode, l. 23. — F. cravate, meaning (1) a Croat, Croatian; and (2) a cravat. β. The history of the word is recorded by Ménage, who lived at the time of the first introduction of cravats into France, in the year 1636. He was more commonly termed Cravates; and he gives the date (1636) of its introduction into France, which was due to the dealings the French had at that time with Germany; it was in the time of the Thirty Years' War. See the passage quoted in Brachet, s. v. cravate; and in Nares, s. v. erabat. γ. Brachet also explains, s. v. corvée, the insertion, for euphony, of the letter v, whereby Cravate became Cravate or Cravate; a similar striking instance occurs in F. pouvoir, from L. potēre, for potēre. The word is, accordingly, of historic origin; from the name of Croatia, now a province of Austria. Cf. Cravats, i.e. Croations, which occurs in 1658; see Sir S. D. Scott, The British Army (1850), iii. 101; also N. and Q. 6 S. v. 113. The name is of Slavonic origin; cf. Russ. Kroat, a Croatian.

CRAVE, to beg earnestly, beseech. (E.) ME. craven (with v for u); Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 1408. AS. cregan, to crave; A. S. Chron. an. 1070; ed. Thorpe, p. 344. Cf. Icel. kræfa, to crave, demand; Swed. kräfa, to demand; Dan. kræve, to crave, demand, exact; also Icel. kræfa, a craving, a demand. Der. craving.

CRAVEN, one who is defeated, a recreant. (F.—L.) ME. cravant (with v for u); also spelt cravand, cravand. 'Al ha cneowen ham cravant and ouerumen' — they all knew them to be craven and overcome; Legend of St. Katharine, 132. 'Ilaa! cravand knyghte!' — ha! craven knight; Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, l. 133. β. The termination in -en is a mistaken one, and makes the word look like a past participle. The word is really cravant, where -ant is the regular French form of the present participle. — OF. cravant, pres. part. of craver, by-form of craver, to burst, to break; and hence, to be overcome. [Cf. Span. quabrar, to fail, to be bankrupt, which is the same word.] — L. crapantem, acc. of pres. part. of crapere, to burst. See further the uses of F. craver; thus, OF. le cuer nu crève means 'my heart is breaking'; OF. crève means 'dead'; and Walloon se kraver de rive is denounced by Remacle as being not a polite phrase. See Phil. Soc. Trans. 1902, p. 659.

CRAW, the crop, or first stomach of fowls. (E.) ME. crawe; Wyclif, 4 Kings, vi. 25. 'Crawe, or crowse of a hyrde or other fowlys, gabus, vesicula;' Prompt. Parv. p. 101. [Allied to crag or crag, the neck.] As if from AS. craga*, the neck (not found); NFries. krage, neck, carap. Cf. Du. krage, the neck, collar; G. kragen, a collar. Also (perhaps) Dan. kro, Swed. kräfa, crawl.

CRAWL, to creep along. (Scand.) Spelt crall; Spenser, F. Q. iii. 3. 26. See Cursor Mundi, 6612. Cf. prov. E. craffe, croff, to crawl. — Icel. kræfa, to paw, to scabble with the hands; kræfa fram úr, to crawl out of; Swed. krästa, to grope; Swed. dial. kralla, to creep on hands and feet; Dan. kræle, to crawl, creep. β. The orig. base is here Teut. krab-*, signifying 'to paw' or 'scree with the hands'; with the frequentative suffix -la; thus giving the sense of 'to grope,' to feel one's way as an infant does when crawling along. Cf. Low G. krabbeln, kräweln, kräulen, to crawl (Schamblach).

CRAYFISH, CRAWFISH, a species of crab. (F.—OHG.) Spelt crayfish in Holland, tr. of Pliny, bk. xxxii. c. 7 (p. 439 b). A mistaken accommodation of ME. crevis or creve, Wars of Alexander, 3864; spelt crevis, Babees Book, ed. Furnivall, p. 158; creveys, Prompt. Parv. — OF. crevisse, given by Roquefort as another spelling of OF. escrevisse, mod. F. écrevisse, a crayfish; Hatfield also cites the OF. form crevisse. — OHG. creviz, MHG. krebez, G. krebs, a crayfish, crab; allied to G. krabe, a crab. See Crab (1). It follows that the etymological division of the word into syllables is as cray-fish; and thus all connexion with fish disappears.

CRAYON, a pencil of coloured chalk. (F.—L.) In Evelyn's Diary, Sept. 30, 1644. Borrowed from F. crayon, explained by Cotgrave as 'dry-painting, or a painting in dry colours,' &c. Formed with suffix -on from F. cratie, chalk. — L. crēta, chalk. See Creta, creta.

CRAZE, to break, weaken, derange. (Scand.) ME. crasen, to break, crack. 'I am right siker that the pot was crased,' i.e. cracked; Chaucer, C. T., 16402 (G 934). Allied to crash, but nearer to the original. — Swed. krasa, to crackle; slå i kras, to break in pieces. Ihe also cites Swed. gå i kras, to go to pieces; and the MSwed. kraslig, easily broken; so also Dan. krase, to crackle. ¶ The F. écraser is from the same source; the F. verb was (probably) not borrowed from the French, but directly from Scand.; but the adj. crazy may have been suggested by the F. pp. crasé, broken. Der. cras-y, cras-i-ly, cras-i-mess. Cf. Crash.

CREAK, to make a sharp grating sound. (E.) ME. creken. 'He cryeth and he creketh;' Skelton, Colin Clout, l. 19. 'A crowe .. breked;' Fabyan, Chron. vol. i. c. 213. An imitative word, like Crake and Crack. Cf. EFries. kraken, to creak; as in krakende wagens, creaking wains (Koolman); OHG. chrægen, hrækin, to creak; MDu. kraken, 'to creak,' Hexham; also Du. krekel, a cricket (from its cry).

CREAM, the oily substance which rises in milk. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. creme, crayme. 'Cowe creme;' Babees Book, ed. Furnivall, p. 26; 'crayme of cowe;' id. 123. Also craym, creasm, creyme, P. Plowm. A. vii. 269; B. vi. 284; C. ix. 306. — OF. crème, F. crème, cream. Really the same word as OF. crème (F. chrème), chriam. — L. chrisma, —Gk. χρίσμα; see CHRISM. ¶ Derived in late times from L. corrupt, by error; whence cremor lactis, and even crema lactis (Ducange), but the guess was a wrong one. Der. cream, verb; cream-y, creamy—ness. Doublet, chrisim.

CREASE (1), a wrinkle, small fold. (F.—L.) Richardson well remarks that 'this word so common in speech, is rare in writing.' He quotes an extract containing it from Swift, Thoughts on Various Subjects. Also: 'The creases here are excellent good; the proportion of the chin good;' Sir Gyles Gooscappe (1606), Act ii. sc. 1; a quotation which seems to refer to a portrait. Phillips (in 1726) has crease, a fold; and the word is noted by Skinner (1671). But the earliest spelling is creast. In Lyte's tr. of Dudoens, bk. vi. c. 40, a peach-stone is said to be 'ful of creastes [i.e. crests, ridges] and gutters.' Hence Phillips (in 1638) has 'Creast-tile, a roof-tile, which is made to lay upon the ridge of a house;' whence prov. F. crease, 'a ridge-tile;' E.D.D. Suggested by OF. creast, crease; also, wrinkled or ruffled, in speaking of the surface of water; the form is Walloon, which has kress, a crest, a ridge, &c. (Remacle); cf. mod. Prov. cre-t, creis, a ridge. Thus crease is a doublet of crest; see CREST. Cf. Notes on E. Etym. p. 49. ¶ For the spelling crease, a crest, see Caxton, Morte Darthur, bk. v. c. 5. l. 66.

CREASE (2), CREESE, a Malay dagger. (Malay.) 'Four hundred young men, who were privately armed with crizes;' Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665; p. 68.—Malay kris or kris, 'a dagger, poignard, kris, or crease;' Marsden's Malay Dict., 1812, p. 258.

CREATE, to make, produce, form. (L.) Orig. a past part. 'When our lord hadde creat Adam;' Chaucer, C. T., B 2293. 'Since Adam was create;' Gascoigne, Dan Bartholomew, His Last Will, l. 3. Cf. K. John, iv. 1. 107.—L. creatus, pp. of creare, to create, make. β. Related to Skt. kr, to make, causal kārayāmi, I cause to be performed. Brugmann, i. § 641. Der. creat-ion, vive-or; also creat-ure (OF. creature, L. creatūra), a sb. in early use, viz. in Hampole, Tricke of Conscience, l. 38, King Ailsaund, 6948.

CREED, a belief. (L.) ME. crede, Andren Riwle, p. 20; and frequently credo, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 75. An AS. form creda is given in I. ye and Bosworth.—L. credo, I believe, the first word of the Latin version of the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds; from L. credere, to believe. †OIrish cretim, I believe; Skt. graddadhāmi, I believe; cf. graddhā, faith; both from the base grat. Brugmann, i. § 539. Der. From the L. credere we have also cred-ence, Gower, C. A. i. 249, bk. ii. 2677 (OF. credence, Late L. credentia, from the pres. part. credent-); cred-ent, ent-i-al; cred-ible (Gower, C. A. i. 23), cred-i-bil-ty, i-bile-ness, i-bly; also credit (from L. pp. creditus), credit-able, abl-y, able-ness, ur; also credulous (L. credulus, by change of -us into -ous), ly-ness; and credul-ity (F. credulité, Englished by credulity in Cotgrave, from L. acc. credulitatem, nom. credulitas).

CREEK, an inlet, cove, nook, bend. (MDu.)? Cf. Du. kreek, a creek; MDu. kriek (Frank); whence the Tudor E. creke, mod. E. creek, was probably derived. We also find ME. crike, Chaucer, C. T. prol. 411; kriki in Havelock, 708.—OF. crique, a creek, bay (Supp. to Godefroy).—Swed. dial. krik, a bend, nook, corner, creek, cove (Kietz); Icel. kriki, a crack, nook; cf. handarkriki, the arm-pit; Dan. dial. krik, a turn, bend, bending in. β. Possibly W. crig, a crack, crigyl, a ravine, creek, are from ME. The Swed. dial. armkrik also means the bend of the arm, elbow (Kietz); but the orig. form and sense are alike obscure. See CRICK. Der. creek-y.

CREEL, a large wicker basket. (F.—L.) 'Cralle, baskett;' Prompt. Parv. The pl. crelis occurs in Wyntoun, Chron. VIII. xxxviii. 51 (N.E.D.). Lowland Sc. creil.—OF. creil (Lacurne); given also in Ducange, s.v. clein, to translate L. crētes, a hurdle.—Late L. crēticulum*, neuter; just as F. grille is from Late L. graticula. Dimin. of L. crētes, a hurdle. See Notes on E. Etym. p. 51.

CREEP, to crawl, as a snake, &c. (E.) ME. crepen, creopen; Andren Riwle, p. 292. AS. creōpan, Grein, i. 169. †Du. kruipen, to creep, crawl; Icel. kriupa; Swed. krypa; Dan. krybe. Teut. type krepjan*, pt. t. kraup*, pp. krupanoz*. Der. creep-er.

CREESE, a Malay dagger; see CREASE (2).

CREMATION, burning, esp. of the dead. (L.) Used by Sir T. Browne, Urn Burial, c. 1.—L. crematio, acc. of crematio, a burning; cf. crematus, pp. of cremare, to burn.

CRENATE, notched, said of leaves. (L.) A botanical term. Formed as if from *L. crenatus, notched (not used), from Late L. crēna (Ital. crenna), a notch. See CRANNY.

CRENELLATE, to furnish with a parapet, to fortify. (Late L.—F.—L.) See List of Royal Licences to Crenellate, or Fortify; Parker's Eng. Archaeologist's Handbook, p. 233.—Late L. crēnellare, whence F. creneler, 'to imbattle;' Cotgrave.—Late L. crēnellus, a parapet, battlement; [OF. crenel, later creneau, a battlement; dimin. of OF. cran, cran, a notch;] from Late L. crēna, a notch (above).

CREOLE, one born in the West Indies, but of European or foreign blood. (F.—Span.—L.) See the quotations in Todd's Johnson.

—F. créole.—Span. criollo, a native of America or the W. Indies; a corrupt word, made by the negroes; said to be a contraction of criadillo, the dimin. of criado, one educated, instructed, or bred up, pp. of criar, lit. to create, but commonly also to bring up, nurse, breed, educate, instruct. Hence the sense is 'a little nursing.'—L. créant, to create. See CREATE. ¶ Cf. Span. criadilla, a worthless servant-maid, dimin. of criada, a servant-maid.

CREOSOTE, a liquid distilled from wood-tar. (Gk.) Discovered in 1832; so called because it has the quality of preserving flesh from corruption; lit. 'flesh-preserver.'—Gk. κρῆσ, for κρῆσις, flesh (allied to L. caro, flesh); and σωτῆρ, shortened from σωτήρ, a preserver, from σῴζω, to save, preserve. (Incorrectly formed.)

CREPITATE, to crackle. (L.) Medical.—L. crepitatus, pp. of crepitare, to crackle, rattle; frequentative of crepare, to rattle. Der. crepitat-ion. See CREVIOSE.

CREPUSCULAR, pertaining to twilight. (L.) First in 1668.—L. crepuscul-um, twilight; with suffix -ar. Allied to Sabine creper, dark (Varro).

CRESCENT, the increasing moon. (L.) Properly an adj. signifying 'increasing'; Hamlet, i. 3. 11.—L. crescent-, stem of crescere, pres. pt. of crescere (pp. creatus), to increase, to grow; an inchoative verb formed with suffix -sc-, allied to cre-ire, to create, make. See CREATE. Der. From the base of pp. cre-tus we have the derivatives ac-cret-ion, con-crete. The Ital. crescendo, increasing, a musical term, is equivalent to crescent. ¶ It must be added that the spelling crescent is an accommodated one. The word was formerly spelt cressant or cressant. We find 'Cressant, lunula' in the Prompt. Parv. p. 102. This is not from the Latin immediately, but from OF. creissant, pres. part. of OF. creistre, to grow, from L. crescere. It comes to the same at last, but makes a difference chronologically. Cf. 'a cressant, or half moon, croissant;' Sherwood's Index to Cotgrave: 'cressant, the new moon, cressant;' Palsgrave.

CRESS, the name of several plants of the genus Crucifera. (E.) ME. crese, eres; also spelt herse, herse, carse, by shifting of the letter r, a common phenomenon in English; cf. mod. E. bird with ME. brid. 'Wisdom and witte now is nought worth a carse;' P. Plowman, B. x. 17, where 4 MSS. read herse. 'Cresse, herbe, nasturtium;' Prompt. Parv. p. 102. 'Anger gaynce [avails] the not a cresse;' Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, i. 343. 'Not worth a cres' or 'not worth a herse' was a common old proverb, now turned into the meaningless 'not worth a carse.' LES. carse, carse, crese; see numerous references in Cockayne's Leechdoms, iii. 316. Cf. the entry 'nasturtium, tūn-herse,' i.e. town-cress, in Ælfric's Glossary; Voc. 135. 36. †Du. herse, eres, G. herse, water-cresses; OHG. cressa (whence F. cresson, according to Hatzfeld). Teut. type kvas-jan* (Frank); from kvas*, and grade of kres-*, as in OHG. cresan, chresan, to creep. Hence the sense is 'creeper.'

CRESETT, an open lamp, placed on a beacon or carried on a pole. (F.—L.) 'Creset, crucibollum;' Prompt. Parv. p. 102. 'A lyht brennende in a kressette;' Gower, C. A. iii. 217; bk. vii. 3743.—OF. creset, crasiet, a cresset. β. A glance at a picture of a creset, in Webster's Dict. or elsewhere, will show that it consisted, in fact, of an open iron cup at the top of a pole; and the cup was filled with burning grease or oil; whence the name.—OF. crasie (F. graisse), grease; Hatzfeld.—Folk L. crassia*, grease; from L. crassus, thick, dense. So also Walloon craché, a cresset; from crache, grease. See GROUSE, CRASS.

CREST, a tuft on a cock's head, plume, &c. (F.—L.) ME. creste, crest; Chaucer, C. T. 13834 (B 2096).—OF. creste, 'a crest, cop, comb, tuft;' Cot.—L. crista, a comb or tuft on a bird's head, a crest. Der. crest, verb, crest-les; crest-fallen, i.e. with fallen or sunken crest, dejected. Doublet, crest (1).

CRETACEOUS, chalky. (L.) It occurs in J. Phillips, Cyder, bk. i. l. 54; first printed in 1708.—L. crētācus, chalky; by change of -us to -ous, as in credulous, &c.—L. crēta, chalk; generally explained to mean Cretan earth, but this is hardly the origin of the word. See CRAYON.

CRETIN, a deformed idiot, chiefly in the Swiss Alps. (F.—L.—Gk.) First in 1779.—F. crétin, which in Swiss patois means (1) Christian, (2) a Christian being, one who is not a brute animal merely.—L. acc. Christiānum; from Christus, Christ.—Gk. Χρῆστις; see CHRIST.

CRETONNE, a kind of stout unglazed cloth. (F.) Modern.—F. cr-tonne, a fabric orig. made at Creton, a village in Normandy (Hatzfeld).

CREVICE, a crack, cranny. (F.—L.) ME. crevice, but also crevace. Spelt creuisse (with u for v), Gwain and the Grene Knight, ed. Morris, 2183; crevace, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 996.—AF. crevace (see quot. in Hatzfeld); MF. crevace, 'a crevice, chink, rift, cleft;' Cot. (Late L. crepātia); OF. (and F.) crever, 'to burst or break asunder, to chink, rive, cleave, or chawn;' id.—L.

crepère, to crackle, rattle; also, to burst asunder; a word possibly of imitative origin. Doublet, crevasse.

CREW, a company of people. (F.—L.) Formerly crue; Gascoigne, The Fruits of Warre, st. 46; 'If she be one of Cressid's crue;' Turberville, His Love shifted from wonted Troth; st. 15. Common as a sea-term, 'a ship's crew.' First used in 1455, Parliament Rolls, v. 297; where 300 men are 'ordeigned for a crue over the ordinary charge' at Calais. The earliest sense was a reinforcement; later, a company sent on an expedition; and lastly, a company (generally). 'The Fresh kyngs sent soone after into Scotlande a crue of Freshemen, to ayde suche enemies as kyng Edward there had;' Fabyan's Chron. ed. Ellis, p. 444. A crue is a corrupt substitution for accrue, accrue, or accrue, the obsolete sh. from which the verb to accrue is derived. Thus Hollinshed (Chron. iii. 1135) has: 'The towne of Calis and the forts thereabouts were not supplied with anie new accrues [reinforcements] of soldiers.' —OF. accrue, accrue, s. f. augmentation, reinforcement; Godefroy. —OF. accrue, fem. of pp. of accroître, to augment (Supp. to Godefroy). —L. accrescere, to increase. —L. ac-, for ad, to, in addition; accrescere, to grow. See Accrue, Accretion.

CREWEL, worsted yarn slackly twisted. (F.—Teut.) In King Lear, ii. 4. 7. Halliwell explains it by 'fine worsted, formerly much in use for fringe, garters, &c.' The Whitby Gloss, has 'crewels or crules, coloured worsteds for ornamental needle-work, &c.' Palsgrave has: 'Caddas or crule, sayette.' The earliest mention of crules is in Test. Eboracensis, ii. 100 (an. 1444). Generally in the pl. crewels, prob. at first applied to the hanks or skeins, of which there were many, of different colours.—OF. escrouelles (de laine), portions of wool (Godefroy); dimin. of OF. escrue, escrue, a shred. Cotgrave translates the F. croasse as 'a crosier or bishop's staff; also a cricket-staff, or the crooked staff wherewith boies play at cricket.' The first mention of cricket is in 1598; it was a development of the older game of club-ball, which was played with a crooked stick, and was something like the modern hockey; see Engl. Cycl. Supplement to Arts and Sciences, col. 653. —OF. cricquet, 'baton servant de but au jeu de boules' (Godefroy); so that the cricquet was practically the wicket. The Skt. krym(s) is cognate with Irish crain and W. pryf, a worm. Carmin is a doublet of crimson; see Carmin.

CRINGE, to bend, crouch, fawn. (E.) Used by Shak. in the sense of to distort one's face; Ant. and Cleop. iii. 13. 100; cf. crinkle, to wrinkle, which is related to cringe. ME. crengen; 'he crengit,' he cringed; Holland, The Houlate, l. 956. A causal derivative of AS. cringan, crinegan, crinean, to sink in battle, fall, succumb; Grcin, i. 169; and see Sweet's A. S. Reader. Thus cringe is a causative of cring, and cring is a by-form of crink, with the sense of 'to bend' or 'to give way,' further related to crank. See Crank (2). Cf. EFries. krengen, to lay on its side, carcen (a ship). Der. crink-le, q.v.

Formed by adding -le, the common frequentative termination, to the base crin- of the AS. strong verb crincan, to give way, bend in, fall in a heap. See Cringe. Thus crink-le is to bend frequently, to make full of bends or turns. Cf. Dan. krinkelgange, meanderings (Larsen). Compare Crimple.

CRINOLINE, a lady's stiff skirt. (F.—L.) Formerly made of hair-cloth. —F. crinoline, (1) hair-cloth; (2) crinoline; an artificial word. —F. crin, hair, esp. horse-hair, from L. crinis, acc. of crinis, hair; and lin, flax, hence, thread, from L. linum, flax. Dan. krybe, to creep; G. krippel, a cripple; cf. MHG. kräfen, to creep. β. The suffix has the same active force as in AS. byd-el, i.e. one who proclaims. The AS. creþpere, lit. AS. crisp occurs in the tr. of Beda, v. 2 (near the end). = L. crispus, curled; allied to W. erych, rumpled; see Brugmann, i. § 565 (3). Der. crisp-ly, criss.

In Hamlet, v. i. 299. = F. crocodile, a crocodile; Cot. = L. crocodilus. = Gk. κροκόδειλος, a lizard (an Ionic form, Herod. ii. 69); hence, an alligator, from its resemblance to a lizard. Origin unknown. ⚡ The ME. form was cohdrid, King Alisaunder, 5720; from the corrupt Late L. crocodillus.

CROCUS, the name of a flower. (L. = Gk.) In Milton, P. L. iv. 701. = L. crocus. = Gk. κρόκος, the crocus; saffron. Cf. Skt. kunkuma, saffron. β. Apparently of Semitic origin; cf. Heb. karkum, saffron; Arab. karkam or kurkum, saffron; Richardson's Dict. p. 1181.

CRONY, intimate associate. (Gk.?) 'Jack Cole. . . who was a great crony of mine.' Pepys, Diary, May 30, 1665 (N.E.D.). Said by Skinner, in 1671, to be 'vox academica' i.e. university slang; and Butler (Hudibras, pt. III. c. 2. l. 1269) rhymes cronies with monies. Perhaps for Gk. κρόνιος, a 'long-lasting' friend. = Gk. κρόνιος, time; see CHRONOLOGICAL.

We find croff as a gloss to spica (ear of corn), Luke, vi. 7; Northumbrian version. In Levit. i. 16, we have 'wurf bone croff'; i.e. throw away the bird's crop. The orig. sense seems to have been that which sticks up or out, a protuberance, bunch. = Du. crof, a bird's crop; croffen, to cram, to grow to a round head; G. croff, a crop, caw; Icel. cropp, a hunch or bump on the body; Swed. cropp, Dan. crof, the trunk of the body. CROSLER, a staff with a curved top. (F. = Late L.) 'Because a crozier-staff is best for such a crooked time; F. Gascoigne, Flowers: Richard Courtois, &c., last line. Spelt crozier, crozier, crozier, crozier in the MSS. of P. Plowman, C. vi. 113. Made by adding the F. suffix -ier to the sb. croce, also signifying a crozier or bishop's staff, P. Plowman, C. xi. 92. The 10th line of Chaucer's Freres Tale alludes to a bishop catching offenders 'with his hook'. Moreover, crozier (as now used) is practically short for crozier-staff, i.e. the staff carried by the 'crozier' or crook-bearer. = OF. crozier, one who carries a croce (Godefroy). = OF. croce, a crozier, a bishop's staff; carries a croce in the Chanson de Roland, 1670. Late L. crocia, crocia, a curved stick, a bishop's staff (Ducange). = OF. croce, a crook, hook. = Late L. croceum, acc. of croceus, a hook. ¶ The usual derivation from croce is historically wrong; but, as ME. croce, a crook, and croce were easily confused, the mistake was often made. Still the fact remains, that the true shape of the crozier was with a hooked or curved top; the archbishop's staff alone bore a cross instead of a crook, and was of exceptional, not of regular form. See my note to P. Plowman, C. xi. 92. 'Many 19th century ecclesiastical antiquaries have erroneously transferred the name crozier to the cross borne before an archbishop; N.E.D.'

CROSS, the instrument of the Passion. (C. = L.) ME. eros, Layamon's Brut, iii. 261. AS. eros, as in Normannes eros, in Birch, Cart. CROTCHET, a term in music; a whim. (F. = Late L.) ME. crochet; 'crotchet of tongue'; Prompt. Parv. The sense of 'whim' seems derived from that of 'tune' or 'air' from the arrangement of crotchets composing the air. 'As a good harper sticken far in years Into whose cunning hands the gunt doth fall, All his old crotchets in his brain he bears, But on his harp plays ill, or not at all; Davies, Immortality of the Soul, § 32. = F. crochet, 'a small hook. . . a quaver in music'; Cotgrave; who also has: 'Crocure, a quaver in Musick, whence il a des crochures en teste, his head is full of crotchets.' Dimin. of F. croce; a grapple, or great hook; id. = Late L. croceum, acc. of croceus, a hook. Der. crotchet-y. Doublets, crochet, croquet. Cf. crozier, crook.

The N.E.D. gives σπύριον, a tick, also the castor-oil plant (Ricinus communis), taken in botany as the name of an allied genus.

All of imitative origin; associated with crow, croak, and also with Sc. rupp, AS. krōpan, to cry, call aloud; Grein, ii. 108; Icel. krōpa, to call out; Goth. krōpan, to call out; Du. roepen; G. rufen, to call.

E. to croup out.] — Icel. krōppr, a hump or bump on the body; cf. krýppa, a hump, hump. Thus croup is a doublet of Crop, q. v. Der. crouper (see Hatzfeld); also crupper, q. v.

All of imitative origin. See Max Müller's Lectures, 8th ed. i. 416. Der. crow, a cawing bird, from AS. crāw, which see in Ps. cxlvi. 10, ed. Spelman; and cf. OSax. krāia, Du. kraai, G. krähe, a crow; also crow, a bar with a strong beak like a crow's; also crow-foot, a flower, called crow-toe in Milton; Lycidas, l. 143.

[The form of the infn. was crēadan*, not crēadan* (as in Grein); cf. MDu. krayden, with ay = AS. ā. The 3 p. pres. sing. crēdeþ and the pt. t. crēad occur. Der. crowd, sb.

CROWD (2), a fiddle, violin. (W.) Obsolete. 'The pipe, the tabor, and the trembling crowd'; Spencer, Epithalamion, l. 31. ME. crowde, Wyclif, Luke, xv. 25, where the Vulgate has chorum; also spelt crout, King of Tars, 485. — W. crout, anything swelling out, a bulge, trunk, belly, crowd, violin, fiddle (Spurrell). + Gael. cruit, a harp, violin, cymbal; Olirish crut, a harp; Celtic type krut-tā*; whence Late L. chrota. See Machain; and Rhys, Lect. on W. Philology, p. 114. Doublet, rote; see Rote (2).

CROWN, a garland, diadem. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. corone, coronne; also in the contracted form crune, crun, by loss of the former o. The contracted form is common at a very early period; crune occurs in Layamon, i. 181; Havelok, 1814. — AF. coronne, Liber Cust., p. 217; OF. corone (F. couronne), a crown. — L. corōna, a garland, wreath. — Gk. korōnē, the curved end of a bow; korōnis, a wreath, garland; cf. korōnis, curved, bent. Allied to Gk. kuprōs, bent, i. curvus; also to Gael. crunin, round, circular; W. crun, round, circular. See Curve. Der. corolla, corollary, coron-al, coron-er, coron-et, all from L. corōna. See these words. Also crun, sb.

CRUCIAL, in the manner of a cross; testing, as if by the cross. (F.—L.) 'Crucial incision, the cutting or lancing of an imposthume or swelling crosswise'; Phillips (1706). — F. crucial, 'cross-wise, cross-like'; Cot. Formed (as if from a L. crueiālis*) from cruci-, declensional stem of crux, a cross. See Cross.

CRUCIBLE, a melting-pot. (Late L.) Spelt crucible in Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 1; and Cotgrave translates F. creuset by 'crucible'. — Late L. crucibulum, crucibula, a hanging lamp, also, a melting-pot, Ducange; and see the Theatrum Chemicum. Dielenbach's Supplement to Ducange gives: 'Crucibulus, kruse, kruselin, krug, becher'. The suffix -bulum, -bulus answers to L. -bulum in thūri-bulum, a censer. β. The prefix cruci- points to the fact that the word was connected with L. crux (gen. crucis), a cross; and the original application was doubtless to a lamp with four nozzles, pointing four ways like the arms of a cross. I possess such a lamp, bought in Italy, and the pattern is common. In the N.E.D., it is explained as 'a lamp with crossed wicks, giving four flames'; but the wicks do not exactly cross. They point outwards from a common centre, and each flame is at the end of an arm.

CRUCIFY, to fix on the cross. (F.—L.) ME. crucifien, Wyclif, Mark, xv. 13. — OF. crucifier, 'to crucify, to nail or put to death on a cross'; Cot. — L. crucifigere*, for crucifigere, to fix on a cross; pp. crucifixus. — L. cruci-, declensional stem of crux, a cross; and figere, to fix. See Cross and Fix. Der. crucifix, which occurs early, in the Ancrer Riwle, p. 16; crucifix-ion, allied to the L. pp. crucifixus. From L. cruci- are also formed cruci-ferous, cross-bearing, from the L. ferre, to bear; and cruci-form.

CRUDE, raw, unripe. (L.) The words crude and cruditis occur in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth; bk. ii. c. 28; bk. iv. c. 1. Chaucer has crude, C. T. 16244 (G 772). — L. crudus, raw; connected with E. raw. See Raw. Der. crude-ly, -ness; crud-i-ty; and see cruel, crust, crustacean.

CRUEL, severe, hard-hearted. (F.—L.) ME. cruel, Rob. of Glouc. p. 417, l. 8615. — OF. cruel, harsh, severe. — L. crudelis, severe, hard-hearted. From the same root as crude. Der. cruel-ly; cruel-ty; from OF. cruele (F. crueauté), from L. acc. crudelitatem.

CRUMB, a small morsel. (E.) The final b is excrement. ME. crume, crume, crumme, crumme. Spelt crume, Ancrer Riwle, p. 342. AS. crāma, Matt. xv. 27. + Du. krum, crumb, pith; cf. Du. krummen, to crumble, krumel, a small crumb; krumig, krumelig, crumbly or crummy; Dan. krumme, a crumb; G. krume, a crumb; cf. G. krümelig, crumbling; krümeln, to crumble. β. The v in cruma was long; cf. prov. E. crum, a crumb, and Du. krum. Hence prov. F. crum, crem, to press, represents OE. criman* = crýman*, formed by mutation. Der. crumme-er or crumb-y, adj.; crumb-le, verb, cognate with Du. krumelen, G. krümeln.

CRUMPET, a kind of bread-cake. (E.) In Todd's Johnson. Wyclif has 'crumpid cake', to render L. lagnum (Exod. xxix. 23); cf. prov. E. crumpy cake, crisp cake. 'Crumpled together'; Palsgrave, p. 309; with om for um. β. Crumple is allied to cramp; from the weak grade of the strong verb krampen (in FFriesch), pp. krump-en. It signifies 'to cramp frequently', 'to pinch often'; hence, to pinch or squeeze into many folds or plaits. Cf. AS. crumpe, crooked; O. E. Texts, p. 81, l. 1411. See Cramp, Cramp.

CRUNCH, to chew with violence, grind with violence and noise. (E.) Rare in books. Swift has crunch. 'She would crunch the wing of a lark, bones and all, between her teeth'; Voyney to Brobdingnag, ch. 3. An imitative word, and allied to scrunch. Cf. prov. E. crinch, crunch, to crunch; also Du. schransen, to eat heartily. [A similar imitative word is 'Crunk', to cry like a crane; Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. This is the Icel. kránka, to cry like a raven, to croak.]

CRUPPER, the hinder part of a horse. (F.—Teut.) ME. croper, King Alisaunder, l. 3421. Spelt crouper in Spenser, F. 'A pope of that name [Urban] did first institute the crusado'; Bacon, On an Holy War (R.). Spelt crusado in Blount's Glossographia, ed. 1674. 'Crusado or Crusade'; Phillips, 1706. Hence the word is due to a blending of OF. croisade, a crusade (Roquefort) with the Prov. crozada and Span. crusada. — F. croisade, 'an expedition of Christians . . . because every one of them wears the badge of the cross'; Cot. — Span. crusada (with u changed to o); Late L. cruciata, a marking with the cross; orig. f. pp. of cruciare, to cross. — L. cruci-, decl. stem of crux, a cross. See Cross. Der. crusad-er.

The Shetland coob, to bring forth young, is applied to the seal only; from Icel. kobbi, a young seal, Dan. kobbe. The Dan. kubbe means a block, stump, short log; so also Swed. kubb. The sense of 'lump' seems common to both words. Rietz (p. 361, col. 1) gives Swed. kibb, kubbe, kubbe, as playful names for a calf.

'Hic zelotopus, a kukewald,' Wright's Vocab. i. 217. Spelt kukewald, Owl and Nightingale, 1542. β. The word seems to have been modified at the end by confusion with the ME. suffix -wold occurring in an-wold, power, dominion. Cf. cokold in the Coventry Mysteries, p. 120.—OF. cucualt, cucualt, a cuckold (Godefroy).—OF. cucu, F. concou, a cuckoo; with the depreciatory suffix -ault, -al (from G. wald); see Dietz, Gram. ii. 346. The F. concou also had the secondary sense of cuckold. [The allusions to the comparison between a cuckold and a cuckoo are endless; see Shnk. L. L. v. 2. 920.]—L. cuculus, acc. of cuculus, a cuckoo. See CUCKOO.

CUCKOO, a bird which cries cuckoo. (F.—L.) ME. cocoon, cukow, &c. All imitative words, from the sound kū made by the bird; indeed, the OF. cucu need not be referred to the L. form, as it is itself imitative. See COOK, COOKATOO. Der. cuckold, q. v.

CUCUMBER, a creeping plant with edible fruit. (L.) ME. cucumer, later cucumber, with excrement or inserted b. Spelt cucumer, Wyclif, Baruch, vi. 69.—L. cucumerem, acc. of cucumis, a cucumber. β. Perhaps so called because ripened by heat; cf. CUD, food chewed by ruminants. (F.) ME. cule, Crmulum, 1237. In Wyclif, Deut. xiv. 6, where the text has cude, three MSS. have quide, which is a mere variant of the same word. See QUID. AS. cudu, for cududu, later form of cudus; see AN. Leechdoms, vol. ii. pp. 54, 56, 66, where hwit cudus means 'mastic'; called hwit cudus (gen. cuidwes) at p. 182; hwit cudu, id. iii. 72. Teut. type kuechtum*, neuter. Cf. Skt. jatu, resin; Icel. kváða, resin. Orig. sense 'glutinous substance.'

CUDBEAR, a purple or violet powder, used for dyeing. (E.) First in 1771. 'A name devised, from his own Christian name, by Dr. Cuthbert Gordon, who obtained a patent for this powder;' N.E.D. From AS. Cūþbeorht; compounded of cūð, well known, and beorht, bright.

CUDDLE, to embrace closely, fondle. (E.) Rare in books. R. quotes: 'They cuddled close all night'; Somerville, Fab. ii. 1. 9. 'Cuddling of my cow'; Burlesque Song, in Reliq. Antiquæ, l. 239. Probably a corruption of couth-ile*, to be frequently familiar, a frequentative verb formed with the suffix -ile from the ME. couth, well known, familiar; whence also prov. E. couth, to fondle. We find kud for cūð in Will. of Palerne, ed. Skeat, ii. 11, 114, 501, &c. See numerous examples of couth, familiar, loving, in Jamieson's Scottish Dict. This adj. couth was originally a p. signifying known, well-known.—AS. cūð, known, familiar; used as p. of cunnan, to know; cf. Icel. küðr, another form of kunnr, familiar; Goth. kunths, known, pp. of kunnan, to know. Compare further AS. cūðlæcan, to be friendly; Alfric's Saints' Lives, xxv. 644.

CUDGEL, a thick stick. (E.) In Shak. Merry Wives, ii. 2. 292. ME. kuggel; Ancren Riwle, p. 292. AS. cycgel, a cudgel; in Gregory's Pastoral Care, ed. Sweet, c. 40, p. 297. Perhaps a 'knobbed' stick; and allied to COG.

CUDWEED, a plant of the genus Gnaphalium. (E.) 'Cotton-weed or Cudweed, a sort of herb;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. 'Cudweed, the cotton-weed;' Halliwell. Turner, in his Names of Herbs (1548) explains Centunculus by chafweede, 'in Yorkeshyre cudweede.' The common name for the genus Gnaphalium; [so named from the plant being administered to cattle that had lost their cud;] N.E.D. From CUD and WEED.

CUE (1), a tail, a billiard-rod. (F.—L.) The same word as queue, q. v. [An actor's cue is a different word; see below.] Ash's Dict. (1775) has 'Cue, the tail of a wig.'—OF. cue (Suppl. to Godefroy), cue (Roquefort); mod. F. queue, a tail.—L. cōda, cauda, a tail. See CAUDAL. ¶ The F. queue also means a handle, stalk, billiard-cue. See HATZELD.

CUE (2), a direction for an actor's appearance. (F.—L.) In Shak. Merry Wives, iii. 3. 39. Sometimes written q or qu in the 16th century, and said to stand for quando, when. This is the more probable because cue or q was previously in use to denote the sum of half a farthing in college accounts, and signified quadrans. 'Cue, half a farthing;' Minshew (1627). 'Cu, Cue, half a farthinge;' Prompt. Parv.; see Way's note. The sound of cue denotes the Anglicised pronunciation of the French name of the Latin letter. Hence also cue, an actor's part, and the phrase 'a merry cue.'

CUFF (1), to strike with the open hand. (Scand.) Taming of the Shrew, ii. 221. 'I cuff one;' Palsgrave, p. 502.—Swed. kuffa, to thrust, push. Three translates it by 'verberibus insultare,' and says it is the E. cuff; adding that it is the frequentative (?) of the Swed. kufva, MSwed. kufwa, to subdue, suppress, cow; see COW (2); but this is improbable. Berghaus has kuffen, to hit, cuff, and it is found also in Ilaaburg and in Pomeranian (Kichey, Dähmert); cf. Norw. kuffa, to cuff (Ross). De Ho gives WFlm. koove, koffe, (1) a coil, (2) a box on the ear; which seems to connect it with cuff (2). Der. cuff, sb.

CUFF (2), part of the sleeve. (L.?) Formerly it meant a glove or mitten; now used chiefly of the part of the sleeve which covers the hand but partially. ME. cuffe, cuff. 'Cuffs, glove or meteyne, or mitten, mita;' Prompt. Parv. p. 106. The pl. cuffs is in P. Plowman, B. vi. 62. The later use occurs in: 'Cuffe over ones hande, poignet,' Palsgrave. β. Origin uncertain; but probably the same word as cuff, which occurs in the pl. cuffian, in Kemble's ed. of the A. S. Charters, no. 1290, vol. vi. 133, l. 29, where Leo supposes it to signify 'a covering for the head'; whence, perhaps, a covering for the hand. Cf. O.H.G. cuppha, M.H.G. kuffe, kuppe, kuffe, a coil. See Coff, and Cuff (1).

CUIRASS, a kind of breast-plate. (F.—Ital.—L.) Orig. made of leather, whence the name. In Milton, Samson, 132. Also in Chapman's tr. of the Iliad, bk. vii. l. 221.—M.F. cuisse, cuisse (now cuisse), 'a cuirass (sic), armour for the breast and back'; Cot. [Introduced from Ital. in the 16th century (Brachet).]—Ital. corazza, a cuirass; Late L. corātia, corācium, a cuirass, breast-plate. Formed as if from an adj. corācius, for corācieus, leathern.—L. corium, hide, leather; whence F. cuir. Der. cuirassier.

CULDEES, one of an old Celtic monastic fraternity. (C.) 'The pure Culdees were Albyn's earliest priests of God'; Campbell, Reul-lura, 1. 5. The note on the line says: 'The Culdees were the primitive clergy of Scotland, and apparently her only clergy from the 6th to the 11th century. They were of Irish origin, and their monastery on the island of Iona, or Icolmkill, was the seminary of Christianity in North Britain.'—OIrish cile de, Irish cilede, a servant of God, a Culdee. From OIrish cile, Ir. cille, a spouse, also a servant; and dé, gen. of dia, God. See Rhys, Lect. on W. Philology, p. 412. Cf. Late L. Culdei, Culdeci, Culdees; misspelt cildei as if from L. colere Deum, to worship God.

CULINARY, pertaining to the kitchen. (L.) 'Our culinary fire'; Boyle's Works, i. 523.—L. culinarius, belonging to a kitchen.—L. culina, a kitchen; cf. coquina, a kitchen, with similar suffix. Culina is for co-sina*, from coquere, to cook; Giles, § 188.

A corrupt form for culverin*.—OF. culverine (Hatzfeld), MF. culverine, 'a culverin, the piece of ordnance called so'; Cot. Fem. form of OF. culverin, 'adder-like'; id.—OF. culveure, an adder; id.—L. colubra, fem. form of coluber, a serpent, adder; whence the adj. colubrinus, snake-like, cunning, wily. ¶ It appears that this cannon was so called from its long, thin shape; some were similarly called serpentina; see Junius, quoted in Richardson. Other pieces of ordnance were called falcones.

CULVERT, an arched drain under a road. (Du.?) Not in Johnson. First used ab. 1770. Origin unknown. We might expect it to be Dutch, in connexion with making of canals, &c. But no such word is known in Dutch; though we might imagine a Du. coul-waert*, to express the sense, viz. from Du. coul, as in coul-age, leakage, coul-ant, flowing (Calisch), and Du. waert, a channel, canal, water-course, from varen, to go; see Fare. β. The Du. coul is borrowed from F.; cf. MF. coulverre, 'a channel, gutter, &c.'; Cot.—F. coulter, to flow, trickle.—L. colāre, to filter.—L. cōlum, a strainer. See Colander.

CUMBER, to encumber, hinder. (F.—Late L.) ME. comben, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, bk. iii. met. 10. l. 6; Piers Plowman's Crede, 461, 765. The sb. comburment occurs in K. Alisaunder, ed. Ducange gives the pl. combr, impediments. Of doubtful origin; some refer it to G. kumner, grief, oppression, prov. G. kumner, rubbish. Others, to L. cumulus, a heap, by change of l to r, not uncommon; with inserted b. See Cumulate. Der. cumbr-ous (i.e. cumber-ous), -ly, -ness; also cumber-some, by adding the E. suffix -some.

In the AS. translation we find the forms cymyn, cymen, and cumin, in the MSS. There is an OF. form comin; see Hartsch, Chrest. Franc. col. 275, l. 19. Cotgrave has: 'Commin, cummin.' Both OF. and AS. forms are from the L. cuminum or cyminum in Matt. xxiii. 23.—Gk. κύμινον—Heb. kammīn, cummin. Cf. Arab. kammīn, cummin-seed; Rich. Dict. 1206, 1207.

and various vessels. See Cup and Board. ¶ The sense of the word has somewhat changed; it is possible that some may have taken it to mean cup-board, a place for keeping cups; but there was no such word, and such is not the true etymology.

CURE, a small dog. (E.) ME. kur, curre. In early use. 'The fule kur dogge', i. e. the foul cur dog, Ancrén Riwe, p. 290. Cf. Piers Plowman's Crele, ed. The word is imitative, and the letter R is known to be 'the dog's letter', Romeo, ii. 4. 222. Cf. ME. kurren, to make a harsh noise. 'R is the dog's letter, and kurren in the sound'; Ben Jonson, Eng. Grammar. Der. (perhaps) curmudgeon.

CURASSOW, a gallinaceous bird, like a turkey. (Span.) In a tr. of Buffon (1792); ii. 52. A phonetic spelling of Curaçao (above); whence it came.

CURARI, another spelling of Wourah, q. v.

CURATE, one who has cure of souls. (L.) ME. curat, Chaucer, C. T. prol. 219. = Late L. curatus, a priest, curate; cf. Late L. curatus, adj.; curatum beneficium, a benefice with cure of souls pertaining to it. Formed as a pp., from the sb. cura, a care. See Cure. Der. curacy. From the L. pp. curatus we have also curat-ive; also (from curare), the sb. cura-tor, a guardian.

CURB, to check, restrain, lit. to bend. (F. = I.) In Merch. of Ven. i. 2. 26. Curbed = bent. 'Hy crooked and curbed lines'; Holland, Plutarch, p. 678. ME. courben, to bend; used also intransitively, to bend oneself, bow down. 'Yet I courbed on my knees'; P. Plowman, B. ii. 1. Cf. 'Hir necke is schort, hir shuldres courbe', i. e. bend; Gower, C. A. bk. i. 1687. Also ME. corbe, sb., as in 'a strong bitte with a corbe'; 'Dietes of the Philosophers (1477); fol. 26, back. = OF. (and F.) courber, to bend, crook, bow. = L. curvare, to bend. = I. curvus, bent, curved. See Curve. Der. curb, sb., curb-stone, kerb-stone.

CURD, the coagulated part of milk. (E.) ME. curd, more often crud or crud, by the shifting of r so common in English. 'A few crudes and cream'; P. Plowman, B. vi. 284; spelt craddes, id. C. ix. 306. From AS. crud, weak grade of cridan, to crowd, to press together; whence also prov. F. crout-y, a kind of oatmeal gruel. + Irish and Gael. gruth, curd. See Stokes-Fick, p. 119. Origin uncertain; the OLat. form was cōra or cōtra, for koizā*; Brugmann, i. 874. ¶ It is well to remember that cure is wholly unconnected with E. care; the similarity of sound and sense is accidental. In actual speech, care and cure are used in different ways. Der. cure, verb; cur-able; cure-less; also curale, q. v.; curious, q. v. And, from the same source, ac-cur-ale, q. v.

CURFEW, a fire-cover; the time for covering fires; the curfew-bell. (F. = L.) ME. curfew, curfew, curfu. 'Aboute curfew-tyme'; Chaucer, C. T. A. 3645. 'Curfu, ignitumque'; Prompt. Parv. p. 110. = AF. coverfu, Statutes of the Realm, i. 102 (an. 1285); curfen, Liber

Albus, p. 369; OF. coure-feu, later couvre-feu, in which latter form it is given by Roquefort, who explains it as a bell rung at a fixed hour as a signal for putting out fires. The history is well known; see Curfew in Eng. Cycl., div. Arts and Sciences. = OF. covrir, later covrir, to cover; and F. feu, fire, which is from the L. foetum, acc. of focus, hearth, fire. See Cover and Focus. Der. curfew-bell.

CURIOUS, inquisitive. (F. = L.) ME. curious, busy; Romaine of the Rose, 1052. = OF. curios, careful, busy. = L. curiosus, careful. = L. cūra, attention. See Cure. Der. curious-ly, ness; curious-i-ty (ME. curiosité, Gower, C. A. iii. 383, bk. viii. 3114), from F. curiosité, Englished 'curiosity' by Cotgrave, from L. acc. curiositatem. Bacon uses curiosity to mean 'elaborate work'; Essay 46, On Gardens.

CURL, to twist into ringlets; a ringlet. (Scand.) In English, the verb seems rather formed from the sb. than vice versa. Gascoigne has: 'But curl the locks with bodkins and with braids'; Epil. to the Steel Glas, l. 1142; in Skeat, Spec. of English. Palsgrave has curled, p. 309. We find another form curl, due to the shifting of r; cf. criss, curd. Chaucer has: 'With lokkes curly', i. e. with curled or crisped locks; Prol. 81; from the adj. curl, curly. Not in AS.; but cf. EFries. krulle, krull, krul, a curl. β. The form curl is of Scand. origin; cf. Norw. kurle, a curl; Dan. dial. kurle, a twist in threads; Swed. dial. kurla, to curl. + Du. krul, a curl; krullen to curl; MDu. krul, adj. curled; krullen, to curl, wrinkle, rumple; Dan. krulle, to curl; krulle, to curl; Swed. krullig, crisp; Swed. dial. krulla, to curl (Rietz); Norw. krull, a curl (Aasen); G. krulle. γ. The orig. sense is clearly to twist, or bend; it is allied to EFries. krillen, to bend, turn, wind; Low G. krellen, to turn; NFries. krull, closely twisted; suggesting a Teut. base krallan*, to wind, str. vb.; pl. t. krall*, pp. krallanan* (Frank.). Der. curl-y, ing.

CURLEW, an aquatic wading bird. (F.) ME. corlew, curlew, curlu. Spelt corlew, P. Plowman, C. xvi. 243; corlue, id. B. xiv. 43; curlu, Early E. Psalter, Ps. 104 (105). 38. = OF. corlieu, a curlew (Godefroy); ME. corlieu, 'a curlew'; Cot. It. also gives the F. spellings corlis and courlis. Cf. Ital. chiurlu, a curlew; Span. chorlito, a curlew, evidently a dimin. form from an older chorlo*. β. An imitative word, from the bird's cry. Cf. Ital. chiurlare, to howl like the horn-crowl, Meadow-lark; also Swed. kurin, to coo (Wiedgren).

CURMUDGEON, a covetous, stingy fellow. (E. and F.?) Spelt curmudgeon, Forl. The Lady's Trail, A. v. sc. 1; curmudgeon, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 2. l. 497 (Richardson), altered to curmudgeon in Bell's edition, i. 202. First found in 1577, spelt curmudgeon, in Stanyhurst's Deser. of Ireland (in Holinshed, p. 102). [Spelt cur-mudgeon (or curmudgeon) by Holland, to translate the L. frumentarius, a corn-dealer; see Holland's tr. of Livy, pp. 150, 154, as cited in Richardson. The latter passage speaks of fines paid by 'certain curmudgeons for hoarding up and keeping in their grain.' This is a forced spelling, and only tells us that the first syllable is not really a derivative of corn.] The etymology is wholly unknown, but the form shows that at least the latter part of the word is of French origin. It has been suggested that cur represents E. cur, a dog. Lowland Scotch has murgeon, to mock, to grumble; also mudgeon, a grimace; see E.D.D. Perhaps it meant 'grumbling cur.'

CURRENT, a Corinth raisin. (F. = L. = Gk.) In Shak. Wint. Tale, iv. 3. 40. Haydn gives 1533 as the date when currant-trees were brought to England; but the name was also given to the small dried grapes brought from the Levant and known in England at an earlier time. 'In Liber Curc Cocorum [p. 16] called roysons of coranus, F. raisins de Corinthe, the small dried grapes of the Greek islands. Then applied to our own dried grapes of somewhat similar appearance; Wedgwood. So also we find 'roysons of corance'; Babees Book, ed. Furnivall, p. 211, last line. = F. Raisins de Corinthe, currants, or small raisins; Cot. Thus we find a corruption of F. Corinthe, Corinth. = L. Corinthus. = Gk. Κόρινθος. ¶ Referred to in 1390; 'pro j lb. sacemorum de corenc, vj d.;' Earl of Derby's Expedition in Gascon, Sac. p. 11, l. 22.

CURRENT, running, flowing. (F. = L.) ME. corrant. 'Lik the corrant fire, that renneth Upon a corde, as thou hast seen, What it will poudre is so beset Of sulphre'; Gower, C. A. iii. 96; bk. vii. 352. Afterwards altered to current, to look more like Latin. = OF. curant, pres. pt. of OF. currere (more commonly corre), to run. = L. currere, to run. Prob. for currere; and allied to horse. Brugmann, i. § 499. 516. See Horse. Der. current, sb.; -ly, current-y; curricule, q. v.; and from the same source are curvise, curvise, q. v. From the same root are concur, incur, occur, recur; corridor, courtir; course, concourse, discourse, intercourse; excursion, incur; concur, precursor; corair, &c.

CURRICLE, a short course; a chaise. (L.) 'Upon a curricule in this worlda, vola a long course of the next'; Sir T. Browne, Christ. Morals, vol. ii. p. 23 (R.). The sense of 'chaise' is late; see N.E.D. = L. curriculum, a running, a course; also, a light car (Cicero). Formed as a double diminutive, with suffixes -cu and -la.

from the stem curri-; cf. parti-cu-la, a particle. = L. currere, to run. See Current. Doublet, curriculum, which is the L. word, unchanged. Cf. curcule.

CURRY (1), to dress leather. (F.—L. and Teut.) 'Thei curry kinges,' i.e. flatter kingly, lit. dress them; said ironically; Piers Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, 365. 'Like as he wold correy his maystres hors.' 1 ydgate, Minor Poems, p. 53. The E. verb is accompanied by the M.E. sb. currie, apparatus, preparation, armament; K. Alisaunder, 5118.—OF. conreyer, correyer, to prepare, arrange, set in order; earliest form conredder (Godefroy); later conroyer; whence the forms conroyer, conroyer, given by Cotgrave, and explained by 'to curry, tew, or dress leather.'—OF. conrei, later conroy, equipage, gear, preparation of all kinds; earliest form conreuil (Godefroy). [Formed, like array (OF. arroi), by prefixing a Latin preposition to a Teutonic word; see Array.]—OF. con-, prefix, from L. com- (for cum), together; and the OF. reid, array, order. This word answers to Ital. -redo, order, seen in Ital. arredo, array.—Late L. -redum, -redium, seen in the derived arridium, conredium, equipment, furniture, apparatus, gear. β. This -redium is of Teut. origin; cf. Swed. reda, order, sb., or, as verb, to set in order; Dan. rede, order, sb., or as verb, to set in order; Icel. reidi, tackle; also O. Low G. rēde, AS. rēde, ready; see Ready. The same root appears in array and disarray; and in F. disarroi, arroi, corroyer. Der. curri-er. CUR The phr. to curry favour is a corruption of M.E. to curry favel, i.e. to rub down a fallow-coloured horse. Favell was a common old name for a horse; and curry favel occurs in Hoccleve, De Regim. Principum, st. 755, l. 5282. See my note to P. Plowman, C. iii. 6.

CURRY (2), a kind of seasoned dish. (Tamil.) A general term for seasoned dishes in India, for which there are many recipes. See Curry in Yule.—Tamil kari, sauce, relish for rice. Yule adds that the Port. form caril is from the cognate Canarese karil.

CURSE, to imprecate evil upon. (E.) ME. curseien, cursen, corsen. 'This cursed croze'; Chaucer, C. T. 4852 (B 432); 'this cursed dede'; id. 4853 (B 433). The sb. is curis, Chaucer, C. T. Prol. 663. AS. curian, A. S. Chron. an. 1137; where the compound þu forscured also occurs. The AS. sb. is curis; Liber Scintillarum, c. 56; p. 174, l. 6. β. Remoter origin unknown; perhaps originally Scandinavian, and due to a particular use of Swed. kor-a, Dan. korse, to make the sign of the cross, from Swed. and Dan. kor, a cross, a corruption of Icel. kruss, a cross, and derived from Old Irish cross; see Cross. γ. The N.E.D. says there is no trace of any connexion; but Norw. kor, korss, a cross, plague, worry, trouble, comes very near the sense of a curse; so Du. kruis, tribulation; slechte kinderen hebben is een gruid kruis, it is a great cross to have bad children; cf. Dan. dial. korself, that which one dreads, or crosses oneself against; as, korselfigt veir, horrible weather, which comes near the sense of 'curse weather.' The ultimate connexion seems to me possible. Indeed, Berghaus gives Low G. krütsigen, to curse (lit. to cross). Note, further, that Windsch gives Old Irish cúrsaigim, 'I reprehend.' Der. ac-cursed, curd-ed, curd-er.

CURSIVE, running, flowing. (L.) Modern. Not in Todd's Johnson. A mere translation of Late L. curvius, cursive, as applied to handwriting.—L. curvus, pp. of currere, to run. See Current.

CURSORY, running, hasty, superficial. (L.) The odd form currosary (other edd. cursenary, curselary) is in Shak. Hen. V. v. 2. 77. 'He discoursed currosly.' Bp. Taylor, Great Exemplar, pt. iii. § 14 (R.).—Late L. currosius, chiefly used in the adv. currositer, hastily, quickly.—L. currosi, declensional stem of curros, a runner.—L. curvus, pp. of currere, to run. See Current. Der. currosi-ly.

CURT, short, concise. (L.) 'Maestro del campo, Peck I his name is curt.' Ben Jonson, The New Inn, iii. 1.—L. curtus, docked, clipped. Cf. Gk. akroty, chopped.—SKER, to shear, cut; whence also E. shear, and Icel. skærð, docked. See Shear. Der. curt-ly, curt-ness; curt-nail, q.v.

CURTAIL, to cut short, abridge, dock. (F.—L.) α. Curtail is a corruption of an older cirtail, and was orig. accented on the former syllable: there is no pretence for saying that it is derived from the F. court tail; to cut short, a phrase which does not appear to have been used; though it is probable that both E. tail and F. tailleur had some influence on the development of the word. The two instances in Shakespeare may suffice to show this. 'I, that am cirtail'd of this fair proportion.' Rich. III. i. 1. 18. And again: 'When a Gentleman is dispos'd to swear, it is not for any standers-by to cirtail his oaths.' Cymbeline, i. 1. 12, according to the first folio; altered to curtail in later editions. β. Cotgrave translates accourcir by 'to shorten, abridge, curtail, clip, or cut short;' and this may help to show that the French for curtail was not court tailleur (1), but accourcir. γ. The verb was, in fact, derived from the adj. curtail or cirtail, having a docked tail, occurring four times in Shakespeare, viz. Pilgr. 273; M. Wives, ii. 1. 114; Com. Err. iii. 2. 151; All's Well, ii. 3. 65.—MF. courtault, courtant; both forms are given by Cotgrave, and explained by 'a curtail;' or, as an adj., by 'curtail, being curtailed.' He also gives: 'Double courtault, a strong curtail, or a horse of middle size between the ordinary curtail, and horse of service.' δ. The occurrence of the final lt in curtail shows that the word was taken into English before the old form courtault fell into disuse. Cf. Florio, who gives the Ital. cortaldo, a curtail, a horse without a tail; cortare, to shorten, to curtail; corta, short, brief, curtailed.—OF. cort (Ital. corio), short; with suffix -ault, -alt, equivalent to Ital. -aldo, Late L. -aldus, of Germanic origin, as in Regin-ald; from G. wald, O. Low G. wald (Icel. vald), power. See Hatzfeld's French Dict. pref. § 138.—L. curtus, docked. See Curt. CURTAIN, a hanging cloth. (F.—L.) ME. curtin, curtin; Chaucer, C. T. 6831 (D 1249). The pp. curtined, furnished with curtains, is in K. Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 1028.—OF. cortine, curtine, a curtain.—Late L. cortina, a small court, small enclosure,croft, rampart or 'curtain' of a castle, hanging curtain round a small enclosure. See Exod. xxvi. 1 (Vulgate).—L. corti, stem of cirs, a court; with suffix -ina, fem. of -inus, adj. suffix. See Court (1). Der. curtain, verb.

CURTLEGE, a court-yard. (F.—L.) 'All the comedities (sic) wythyn the seid gardyn and curtleage.' Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 46 (A.D. 1467).—AF. curtilage, Slat. of the Realm, i. 221. Formed, with suffix -age, from OF. curtil, courtill, 'a back-yard;' Cot.—Late L. cortile, an enclosure, small yard (Incunage). Dimin. of Late L. cortis, a court-yard, from L. cirs. See Court (1).

CURTLEAXE, a corruption of cutlas; see Cutlass.

CURTSEY, an obeisance; see Courtesy.

CURULE, chiefly in the phr. curule chair, a chair used by the highest magistrates of Rome. (L.) Butler has 'curule wit'; Huiultras, i. 1. 715.—L. curūlis, curūlis, applied to equi, horses, and to sellā, the curule chair.—L. currus, a chariot; see Curriole.

CURVE, adj. crooked; sb. a bent line. (L.) Not in early use. The MF. form was curvare, whence E. curv, q.v. Blount's Glossographia, ed. 1674, has the adjectives curvus and curvilinear, and the sbs. curvature and curvity. 'This line thus curve.' Congreve, An Impossible Thing, l. 137.—L. curvus, crooked, bent (base curv).—Gk. κῠρ-τός, bent. See Crown. Der. curve, verb; curval-cure, L. curvātūra, from curvāre, to bend; curvi-linear; curve, q.v. And see curb.

CURVET, to bound like a horse. (Ital.—L.) The verb is in Shak. As You Like It, iii. 2. 258; the sb. is in All's Well, ii. 3. 299.—Ital. corvetta, a curvet, leap, bound; corvetta, to curvet, frisk. [The E. word was orig. corvet, thus Florio has: 'Coruella, a coruet, a sault, a prancing or continual dancing of a horse.'—M. Ital. corvare, old spelling of curvare, 'to bow, to bend, to stoop, to crouch, to make crooked'; Florio. Thus to curvet meant to crouch or bend slightly; hence, to prance, frisk.—L. curvare, to bend.—L. curvus, bent. See Curve. Der. curvet, sb. (Ital. corvetta).

CUSHAT, the ring-dove, wood-pigeon. (E.) 'Cushat', palm-bus; Nicholson's Glossary Northamptonshire, in Ray's Collection, ed. 1691, pp. 130–152. Cushate; Catholicon Angl. (1483). AS. cū-scote, a wild pigeon; Voc. 260. 7; cū-scote, E. E. Texts, p. 85. For cū-scote, where sote prob. means darter, lit. 'shooter.' from scot, weak grade of scotlan, to shoot (cf. AS. scōta, a kind of trout); and perhaps cū refers to the coo of the bird. Cf. 'Coo, coo, coo now,' &c.; Song of the Cushat; in T. Dyer, Folklore, p. 98.

CUSHION, a pillow, soft case for resting on. (F.—L.) The pl. cushions is in Wych, i Kings, v. 9. Spelt quyashin, Chaucer, Troil. and Cress. ii. 1229.—OF. coissin, a cushion (Suppl. to Godefroy); later cousin, 'a cushion to sit on'; Cot. [It is supposed that coissin was the true form; perhaps it was influenced by OF. coute, a quilt.]—Late L. type cossinum, a support for the hip; from coxa, hip, thigh (like L. cubital, elbow-cushion, from cubitus, elbow). Cf. Ital. cuscino, cushion, cossin, hip; Span. cojin, cushion, cujin, hip. See Romania, 1892, p. 87. ¶ The AF. form quissine occurs in A. Neckam (Wright's Vocab. i. 100); cf. E. cuisse, q.v. ¶ The G. kissen, cushion, is borrowed from one of the Romance forms; cf. Ital. cuscino, cusino, Span. cojin, Port. coxim.

CUSP, a point, tip. (L.) Not in early use. 'Full on his cusp his angry master sate, Conjoin'd with Saturn, baleful both to man'; Dryden, The Duke of Guise, Act iv (R.). It was a term in astrology. 'No other planet hath so many dignities, Either by himself or in regard of the cusps;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Bloody Brother, iv. 2. = L. cuspis, a point; gen. cuspis-is. Der. cuspis-ate, cuspis-al-ed.

CUSTARD, a composition of milk, eggs, &c. (F.—L.) In Shak. All's Well, ii. 5. 41; custard-coffin, the upper crust covering a custard; Tam. Shrew, iv. 3. 82. The old custard was something widely different from what we now call by that name, and could be cut into squares with a knife. John Russell, in his Boke of Nurture, enumerates it amongst the 'Bake-meets'; see Babes Boke, ed. Furnivall, p. 147, l. 492; p. 271, l. 1; p. 273, l. 21; and esp. the note on l. 492, at

p. 211. It was also spelt custade, id. p. 170, l. 802. β . And there can be no reasonable doubt that such is a better spelling, and that it is, moreover, a corruption of the ME. crustade, a general name for pies made with crust; see the recipe for crustade ryal quoted in the Babees Book, p. 211. [A still older spelling is crustade, Liber Cure Cocorum, ed. Morris, p. 40, derived immediately from L. crustatus.] — OF. crustade, 'paté, tourte, chose qui en couvre une autre,' i.e. a pastry, tart, crust; Roquefort. Roquefort gives the Prov. form crustado. Cf. Ital. crostata, 'a kind of dainty pie,' Florio. — L. crustatus, pus, of crustare, to encrust, from crusta, a crust. See CRUST. Der. custard-apple, an apple like custard, having a soft pulp; Dampier, Voyage, an. 1699, iii. 33.

CUT, to make an incision. (Scand.) ME. cutten, kitten, a weak verb; pt. t. kutte, kutte. The form cutt, signifying 'the cut,' past tense, occurs in Layamon, i. 349; iii. 228; later text. These appear to be the earliest passages in which the word occurs. It answers to a late AS. form cyttan* (for cut-ian*); and is of Scand. origin. Cf. Swed. dial. kuta, kitta, kvala, to cut with a knife; kuta, kylti, a knife (Rietz); Icel. kutla, a little knife; Norw. kyttel, kyttul, a knife for barking trees (Asen); MSwed. kotta, to cut with a knife (Ihre). All (possibly) due to OF. cou-er, a knife; see Cutlass. Der. cut, sb.; cut-ing, er; cut-water; cut-purse.

CUTCHEERY, a court-house, office. (Hind.) 'The prodigious labour of cutcherry,' Thackeray, Vanity Fair, ch. 57 (or ch. 22 of vol. ii). — Hind. kuchahri, 'a hall of justice, town-house, court, a public office for the receipt of revenue,' &c.; Forbes.

CUTLASS, a sort of sword. (F.—L.) The orig. sense was 'a little knife.' Spelt coutelace, in Dodsley's Old Plays, ed. Hazlitt, v. 189. Better spelt cutlas, with one s. — F. coutelas, 'a cuttles, or courtelars, or short sword, for a man-at-arms,' Cot. Cf. Ital. coltellaccio, 'a cuttelax, or knife,' Florio. [The Ital. suffix -accio (L. -acium) is a general augmentative one, that can be added at pleasure to a sb.; thus from libro, a book, is formed libraccio, a large ugly book. So also Ital. coltellaccio means 'a large ugly knife.'] — OF. coutel, cuttel (Littre), whence F. couten, a knife. Cf. Ital. coltello, a knife, dagger. — L. cutellum, acc. of cutellus, a knife; dimin. of cutler, a ploughshare. See Coulter. [The F. suffix -accio, Ital. -accio, was suggested by the L. suffix -acium; but was so little understood that it was confused with the F. asse. Hence the word was corrupted to cutleaze, as in Shak. As You Like It, i. 3. 119: 'a gallant cutleaze upon my thigh.' Yet a cutleaze was a sort of sword!]

CUTLER, a maker of knives. (F.—L.) ME. colter; Geste History of the Destruction of Troy, ed. Pantton and Donaldson, l. 1597. — AF. coltierre, Liber Custumarum, p. 185; OF. coltier; later coutelier, as in mod. F. — Late L. cutellarius, (1) a soldier armed with a knife; (2) a cutler. Formed with suffix -arius from L. cutell-, base of cutellus, a knife, dimin. of cutler, a ploughshare. See Coulter. Der. cutler-y.

CUTLET, a slice of meat. (F.—L.) Lit. 'a little rib.' 'Cutlets, a dish made of the short ribs of a neck of mutton;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. — F. côtelette, a cutlet; spelt cotelette in Cotgrave, who explains it by 'a little rib, side, &c.' A double diminutive, formed with suffixes -el and -ette, from OF. coste, a rib (Cotgrave). — L. costa, a rib. See Coast.

CUTTER, a swift sailing vessel. (Scand.) First in 1745; from the verb to cut, to speed (E.D.D.). — Norw. kut, weak grade of kuta (pt. t. kaut), to run, to speed. See Phil. Soc. Trans. 1903, p. 145.

CUTTLE, CUTTLE-FISH, a sort of mollusc. (E.) Cotgrave translates the F. corne by 'a sea-cut or cuttle-fish,' and the F. seiche by 'the sound or cuttle-fish.' Cuttle occurs in Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 742. The Prompt. Parv. has both cutol and cutoll. Cf. prov. E. cuddle, coodle. Corrupted from cuddle by the influence of similar words in MDu. and H. German. The form cuddle is a legitimate and regular formation from AS. cudde, the name of the fish. 'Sepia, cudde, vel wise-seite,' Ælfric's Glossary, ed. Sommer, Nomina Piscium. [The name wise-seite means ooze-shooter, dirt-shooter, from the animal's habit of discharging sepia.] + MDu. kuttel-wisch, a cuttle-fish; Killian. But this is rather a High-German form, and borrowed from the G. kuttel-fisch, a cuttle-fish. β . The remoter origin is obscure; the G. kuttel-fisch is in no way connected with the G. kuttl, bowels, entrails. γ . Perhaps it meant 'little bag,' from its shape, or its ink-bag; cf. Low G. kudel, a purse (Lübhen), AS. codd, a bag. See Cod (2). See Phil. Soc. Trans. 1902, p. 661.

CYANOGEN, a compound radical (in chemistry), consisting of nitrogen and carbon. (Gk.) Named by Gay-Lussac (1815) from its occurring in Prussian blue; N.E.D. — Gk. κύανον, for κύανος, a dark blue mineral; and γεν- as γίνομαι, race, with the idea of 'producing.' Der. (from κύανος), cyan-ide, cyanite, cyan-type.

CYCLE, a circle, round of events. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'Cycle and epi-cycle, orb in orb,' Milton, P. L. viii. 84. And in Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 12, § 10. Older form cikle, Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, bk. i. c. 25, § 3. — F. cycle, 'a round, or circle,' Cotgrave. — L. cyclos, merely a Latinised form of Gk. κύκλος, a circle, cycle. — Skt. chakra, a wheel, disc, circle, astronomical figure. Allied to E. wheel; see Wheel. [The word may have been borrowed immediately from Latin, or even from the Greek. Der. cycl-ic, cycl-ic-al; cycloid, from Gk. κύκλωειν, cir. ular (but technically used with a new sense), from Gk. κύκλος, for κύκλος, and ειδός, form, shape; cycloid-al; cyclone, a coined word of modern invention, from Gk. κύκλω, whirling round, pres. part. of κύκλω, I whirl round, from Gk. κύκλος. [Hence the final -e in cyclone is mute, and merely indicates that the vowel o is long.] Also cyclo-metry, the measuring of circles; see Metre. Also cyclo-pædia or cyclo-pædia, from Gk. κύκλωπαιδία, which should rather (perhaps) be encyclopædia, from Gk. ἐγκύκλιον παιδεία, used for ἐγκύκλιον παιδεία, the circle of arts and sciences, lit. circular or complete instruction; der. from ἐγκύκλιος, circular, and παιδεία, instruction; which is from ἐν, in, κύκλος, a circle, and παιδ (gen. παῖδος), a boy, child. Also epi-cycle, bi-cycle, tri-cycle.

CYCLAMEN, a flower; a genus of Primulaceae. (L.—Gk.) Lyte (tr. of Dodæus, bk. iii. c. 11) has cyclamen, and cyclaminon. — Late L. cyclamen, for L. cyclaminus. — Gk. κύκλαμινος, -ov, cyclamen; named from its bulbous roots; from Gk. κύκλος, a circle.

CYGNET, a young swan. (F.—L.—Gk.) Spelt cignet in old edd. of Shak. Tro. and Cress. i. 1. 58. Formed as a diminutive, with suffix -et, from OF. cigne, a swan; Cot. 1. At first sight it seems to be from Lat. cygnus, a swan; earlier form cygnus. — Gk. κύκνος, a swan. 2. But the oldest F. form appears as cigne (Littre); cf. Span. cisne, a swan; and these must be from late L. ciacinus (Diz), a by-form of cucinus (Brugmann, i. § 950), likewise from κύκνος (as before). β . The Gk. κύκνος is allied to Skt. gākuna-s, a large bird; L. ciconia, a stork. See Diz; 4th ed. p. 714.

CYLINDER, a roller-shaped body. (F.—L.—Gk.) Cylinder is in Minshew, ed. 1627. [An older form chylindre is in Chaucer, C. T. Group B, 1396, where Tyrrwhit reads kalerder. C. T. 13136. It there means a cylindrically shaped portable sun-dial.] — MF. cilindre, later cylindre, the y being introduced to look more like the Latin; both forms are in Cotgrave. — L. cylindrus, a cylinder. — Gk. κύλινδρος, a cylinder, lit. a roller. — Gk. κύλινδρον, to roll; an extension of κύλινδρον, to roll. Cf. Church-Slav. kolo, a wheel. (✓ QEL.) Der. cylindr-ic, cylindr-ic-al.

(as in L.). = ∇ KEU, to swell; Gk. svu, to be pregnant. Doublet, cyma (L. cyma), an ogee moulding of a cornice.

CYNIC, misanthropic; lit. dog-like. (L.—Gk.) In Shak. Jul. Cies. iv. 3. 133.—L. cynicus, one of the sect of Cynics.—Gk. κυνικός, dog-like, cynical, a Cynic.—Gk. κυν, stem of κύνω, a dog. + L. can-is, a dog; Irish cú (gen. can), a dog; Skt. gyan, a dog; Goth. hund, a hound. See Hound. Der. cynic-al, -al-y, -ism; and see cynosure.

CYNOSURE, a centre of attraction. (L.—Gk.) 'The cynosure of neighbouring eyes,' Milton, l'Allegro, 80.—L. cynosura, the constellation of the Lesser Bear, or rather, the stars composing the tail of it; the last of the three is the pole-star, whence the sense of 'guiding-star,' or centre of interest.—Gk. κυνόσωρα, a dog's-tail; also, the Cynosure, another name for the Lesser Bear, or, more strictly, for the tail of it.—Gk. κύνος, dog's, gen. case of κύνω, a dog; and οὐρά, a tail. See Cynic.

CYPRESS (1), a kind of tree. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. cipres, ci-presse, cypresse. 'Ase palmie othee cipres;' Avenbite of Inwyt, p. 131. 'Leaves of cypresse;' Palladius on Husbandry, b. x. st. 6. Also called a cypir-tree. Prob. of Eastern origin; by some supposed to be the Heb. gopher, gopher-wood. Gen. vi. 14; see Gesenius.

CYPRESS (2), CYPRESS-LAWN, a kind of lawn or crape. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'A cypresse [or cypress] not a bosom I bideth my heart;' Tw. Nt. iii. 1. 132. 'Cypress black as c'er was crow;' Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 221. See note on cypress in Ben Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, i. 3. 121, ed. Wheatley. β. Palsgrave explains F. cypres by 'a cypres for a womans necke;' and Cotgrave has: 'Crespe, cypres, cob-web lawn;' which seems to show some confusion between cypress and crape. But in old wills they are kept distinct. Thus, in Testaments Floracensis, l. 240 (A.D. 1398), we find: 'unum [velum] de cypres,' a cypress veil; 'ij. flameola de cypres,' id. l. 289 (A.D. 1402); also 'flameolam meam de crispo,' my crape veil, l. 271 (1400); 'flameolam de kerpe,' l. 382 (1415). γ. But the ME. cypres also meant (1) a cloth of gold or other valuable material; (2) a valuable satin (N.E.D.). It is probable that all these were alike named from the island of Cyprus, whence they were imported.—OF. Cypre, Cypre, Cyprus.—L. Cyprum, acc. of Cyprus.—Gk. Κύπρος, Cyprus.

CYST, a pouch (in animals) containing morbid matter. (L.—Gk.) Formerly written cystis. 'Cystis, a bladder; also, the bag that contains the matter of an imposthume;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715.—Late L. cystis, merely a Latinised form of the Gk. word.—Gk. κύστις, the bladder; a bag, pouch. Der. cystic.

CZAR, the emperor of Russia. (Russ.—Teut.—L.) 'Two czars are one too many for a throne;' Dryden, Hind and Panther, iii. 1278.—Russian tsar (with e mute), a king. Oslav. česar; Miklosich, p. 28. Borrowed from Tentonic; cf. Goth. kaisar—L. Cæsar. ¶ This has been disputed; but see Miklosich, cf. Matt. xiii. 24, in Schleicher, Indogermanische Chrestomathie, p. 275; where Oslav. česar occurs for Russ. tsar, kingdom; &c. Der. czar-ina, with Ital. suffix -ina, from G. -ia, fem. suffix, as in landgravine, margravine, the Russ. form being tsarisa, also czarowitz, from Russ. tsarevich, the czar's son.

DAB (1), to strike gently. (E.) ME. dabben. 'The Flemishse hem dabbeth o the het bare'—the Flemings strike them on the bare head; Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 192. The ME. sb. is dabbe. 'Philot him gaf another dabbe'—Philotas gave him another blow; K. Alisaunder, ed. Weber, i. 2306. Now generally associated with the notion of striking with something soft and moist, but the orig. sense is merely to tap. An E. word; of imitative origin. MDu. dabben, to pinch, to knead, to fumble, to dabble; Oudemans. Cf. Norw. dabba, to tap with the foot (Ross); prov. G. 'Strassburg' dabbe—G. tappen (C. Schmidt); G. tappen, to grope, fumble; prov. G. tapp, tappe, fist, paw, blow, kick; Flügel's Dict. ¶ From the G. tappen we have F. taper, and E. tap. Hence dab and tap are doublets. See Tap. Der. dab, sb. See Dabble, and Dub.

DAB (2), expert. (E.) The phrase 'he is a dab hand at it' means he is expert at it. Goldsmith has: 'one writer excels at a plan; ... another is a dab at an index;' The Bee, no. 1. A word of slang origin, and perhaps due to dab, vb. (above). It may have been to some extent confused with the adj. dapper. See Dapper. ¶ There is no evidence connecting it with adept, as some have guessed.

DAB (3), a fish. (E.) A small flat fish; ME. dabbe, Liber Albus, p. 375; pl. dabys (A.D. 1460), Antiquarian Repository, ii. 211. Prob. considered as a soft mass dabbed down. See Dab (1). And cf. prov. G. (Kurhessen) dob, soft, dabberig, soft (Vilmar).

DABBLE, to keep on dabbling. (E.) The frequentative of dab, with the usual suffixed -le. 'The word is used by Drayton, Polyolbion, s. 25, l. 97; see quotations in Richardson. Cf. 'dabbled in blood'; Shak. Rich. III, i. 4. 54.—+ MDu. dabbelen, to pinch, to knead, to fumble, to dabble, splash about; formed by the frequentative suffix -el from MDu. dabben, with a like sense; Oudemans. See Dab (1). Cf. Norw. dabla, to dabble in water (Ross); Icel. dafra, to dabble; Wflem. debbelen, to fumble, handle.

DAB-CHICK, DOB-CHICK; see Didapper.

DACE, a small river-fish. (F.—O. Low G.) 'Dace or Dare, a small river-fish;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Shak. has dace, 2 Hen. IV, iii. 2. 356. 1. Another name for the fish is the dart. 2. Dare, formerly pronounced dahr (dahr), is simply the F. dard (=Late L. acc. dardum), and dart is due to the same source. Cf. ME. dar, Voc. 763. 36. 3. So also dace, formerly darce (Babes Book, ed. Furnivall, p. 174), answers to the OF. nom. dars or darz, a dart, javelin, for which Roquefort gives quotations, and Littré cites OF. dars with the sense of 'dace.' The AF. pl. darecs occurs in Liber Custumarum, p. 279. This OF. dars is due to Late L. nom. dardus, a dart, javelin, of Low G. origin. ¶ From this OF. dars is also derived the Breton darz, a dace; cf. F. dard, 'a dart, a javelin; ... also, a dace or dare fish;' Cotgrave. ¶ So named from its quick motion. See Dart. DACHSHUND, a badger-hound. (G.) From G. dachshund, badger-hound. See dachs, a badger, in Kluge.

DACOT, a robber. (Hind.) See Dacot in Yule.—Hind. dakait, a robber belonging to an armed gang (Forbes).—Hind. dakā, robbery by an armed gang (Forbes; II. II. Wilson). Der. dacot-y, robbery.

DACTYL, the name of a foot, marked — — — (L.—Gk.) Puttenham, Arte of Poetrie, ed. Arber, p. 83, speaks of 'the Greeke daetilus;' this was in A.D. 1589. Dryden speaks of 'spondees and dactyls' in his Account prefixed to Annus Mirabilis.—L. dactylus, a dactyl.—Gk. δακτύλος, a finger, a dactyl; from the three joints of the finger. See Trench, On the Study of Words, on the sense of dactyl. Der. dactyl-ic.

DAD, a father. (E.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. iv. 2. 140; K. John, ii. 467. A child's word for father. So also EFries. tatte; W. tad, father; Corn. tar; Bret. tar, tad, father; Irish dad; Gael. daidein, papa (used by children); Gk. πάτερ, father; used by youths to their elders; Skt. itā, father; itān, dear one; a term of endearment, used by parents addressing their children, by teachers addressing their pupils, and by children addressing their parents. A familiar word, and widely spread. Der. daddy-y, a dimin. form.

DADO, the die, or square part in the middle of the pedestal of a column, between the base and the cornice; also, that part of an apartment between the plinth and the impost moulding. (Ital.—L.) So defined by Gwilt, in Webster; see also Gloss. of Architecture, Oxford, 1840. The word is somewhat odd, and occurs in Phillips, ed. 1706. Like some other architectural terms, it is Italian.—Ital. dado, a die, cube, pedestal; Torriano (1688) has 'dado, any kind of dye to play withall, any cube or square thing.' The pl. dadi, dice, is in Florio, from a sing. dado. The same word as Span. dado, OF. dei; see further under Die (2), which is a doublet.

DAFFODIL, a flower of the anemylis tribe. (F.—L.—Gk.) The d is no part of the word, but prefixed much in the same way as the t in Ted, for Edward. It is difficult to account for it; it is just possible that it is a contraction from E. th'affodill, used by Cotgrave. At any rate, the ME. form was affodille. 'Affodille, herbe, affodillus, albus;' Prompt. Parv.—OF. asphodile, more commonly affrodille, (th) affodill, or asphodill flower; Cotgrave. Cf. asphodille, the affodill, or asphodill flower; id. [Here the French has an inserted r, which is no real part of the word, and is a mere corruption. It is clear that the E. word was borrowed from the French before this r was inserted. We have sure proof of this, in the fact that Cotgrave gives, not only the forms asphodille, asphrodile, and affrodille, but also asphodile, 'the daffodill.' The last of these is the oldest.]—L. asphodelus, borrowed from the Greek.—Gk. ἀσφodelos, asphodel. See Asphodel. Der. Corrupted forms are daffodilly and daffadown-dilly, both used by Spenser, Shep. Kal. April, II. 60, 140. ¶ See N.E.D.; and the article by Dr. Murray in Phil. Soc. Proceedings, Feb. 6, 1880.

DAGGER, a dirk; short sword for stabbing. (F.) ME. daggers, Chaucer, C. T. prol. 113. [Connected with the ME. verb daggen, to pierce. 'Derle dynitts thay dalte with daggende speers,' i.e. they dealt severe blows with piercing spears; Allit. Morie Arthure, ed. Brock, l. 3749. Cf. MDu. daggen, to stab; Oudemans; MDu. dag, a dagger; id.]—F. dague, a dagger, of unknown origin; and certainly neither Celtic nor Germanic; Körtling, § 2738. β. It might be better to take Late L. daga as the source; since OF. dague hardly occurs before 1397 (see Ducange). Cf. also Ital. and Span. daga, a dagger; Port. adaga. The Port. form suggests an Eastern origin; cf. Heb. dākhāh, to strike; or Arab. dahw, driving, thrusting.

DAGGLE, to moisten, went with dew. (Scand.) So in Sir W. Scott. 'The warrior's very plume, I say, was daggled by the dashing spray'; Lay of the Last Minstrel, i. 29. Pope uses it in the sense of to run through mud, lit. to become wet with dew; Prol. to Satires, l. 225. Palsgrave has: 'I daggyll, or I dagge a thing with myer'; p. 506. It is a frequentative verb, formed from the prov. Eng. dag, to sprinkle with water; see Atkinson's Cleveland Glossary. —Swed. dagg, dew; Icel. dugg (gen. dugga), dew. These sbs. are cognate with E. dew. See Dew. Cf. also Icel. duggva, Dan. bedugge, to bedew.

DAGUERROTYPE, a method of taking pictures by photography. (Hybrid; F. and Gk.) 'Daguerrotype process, invented by Daguerre, and published A.D. 1838'; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Formed from Daguerre, a French personal name (with o added as a connecting vowel), and E. type, a word of Gk. origin. See Type.

DAHABEEYAH, a large sailing-boat, used by travellers up the Nile. (Arab.) Lit. 'golden'; as being like a gilded state barge. —Arab. dahabiyah, golden; from dahab, gold; Rich. Dict. p. 712. (δ-th in thai.)

DAHLIA, the name of a flower. (Swedish.) 'Discovered in Mexico by Humboldt in 1789, and sent to Prof. Cavanilles, of the Botanic Garden at Madrid, who [in 1791] named the genus in honour of the Swedish Professor Dahl'; Beckmann, Hist. of Inventions (1846); i. 517. Dahl is a Swedish personal name; the suffix -ia is botanical Latin.

DAINTY, a delicacy; pleasant to the taste. (F.—L.) ME. deinté, deinté, generally as a sb.; Ancren Riwle, p. 412. But Chaucer has: 'Ful many a deynté hors hadde he in stable'; C. T. prol. 168. This adjectival use is, however, a secondary one, and arose out of such phrases as 'to leten deinté'—to consider as pleasant (Ancren Riwle, p. 412), and 'to thinken deyntee', with the same sense (P. Plowman, B. xi. 47). —OF. daintie (to be accented daintie), also deintie, dainte (deintie, dainte), joy, pleasure, also a tit-bit (Godefroy). —L. acc. digitatē, dignity, worth. —L. dignus, worthy. See Dignity. ¶ Cotgrave gives the remarkable adj. dain, explained by 'dainty, fine, quaint, curious (an old word)'; this is precisely the popular F. form of L. dignus, the learned form being digne. Cf. dis-dain, in which -dain again represents L. dignus. Der. dainti-ly, dainti-ness.

DAIRY, a place for keeping milk to be made into cheese. (Scand. and F.) ME. daierie, better deyerie, Chaucer, C. T. 597 (or 599). The Low I. form is daieria, but this is merely the E. word written in a Latin fashion. a. The word is hybrid, being made by suffixing the F. -erie (L. -aria) to the ME. deye, a maid, a female-servant, esp. a dairy-maid; late AS. dæge, Thorpe, Diplom. p. 641. Similarly formed words are bottle-ry (= bottle-ry), win-ry, pan-ry, laund-ry; see Morris, Hist. Outlines of Eng. Accidence, p. 233. b. The ME. deye, a maid, occurs in Chaucer, Nonne Pr. Tale, l. 26 (B 4036), and is of Scand. origin. —Icel. (ONorw.) deigja, a maid, esp. a dairy-maid; see note upon the word in Cleasby and Vigfusson; Swed. deja, a dairy-maid. y. However, the still older sense of the word was 'kneader of dough,' and it meant at first a woman employed in baking, a baker-woman. The same maid no doubt made the bread and attended to the dairy, as is frequently the case to this day in farm-houses. Teut. type daig-jun-, f. lit. 'dough-er'; from the Teut. type daig-oz, as in the Icel. daig, Swed. deg, dough. The suffix -jun- had an agentual force; cf. Mesopotam. Gt. verbs in -jan. See further under Dough; and see Lady.

DAIS, a raised floor in a hall. (F.—L.—Gk.) Now used of the raised floor on which the high table in a hall stands. Properly, it was the table itself (L. discus). Later, it was used of a canopy over a seat of state or even of the seat of state itself. ME. deis, deys, sometimes dois, a high table; Chaucer, Kn. Tale, 1342 (A 2300); P. Plowman, B. vii. 17, on which see the note. —AF. deis, OF. dois, deis, a high table in hall. The later sense appears in Cotgrave, who gives: 'Dais, or Daiz, a cloth of estate, canopy, or heaven, that stands over the heads of princes throes; also, the whole state, or seat of estate.' For examples of OF. dois in the sense of 'table,' see deis in Supp. to Godefroy. —L. discum, acc. of discus, a quoit, a plate, a platter; in late Latin, a table (Ducange). —Gk. δίσκος, a round plate, a quoit. See Dish, Disc.

DAISY, the name of a flower. (E.) Lit. day's eye, or eye of day, i.e. the sun; from the sun-like appearance of the flower. ME. dayseye; explained by Chaucer: 'The dayseye, or elles the ye of day.' Prol. to Legend of Good Women, 184. AS. dagseige, a daisy, in MS. Cott. Faustina, A. x. fol. 115 b, printed in Cockayne's Leech-

DALE, a low place between hills, vally. (E.) ME. dale, Ormulum, 9203. AS. dāl (pl. dalu), a valley; Grein, i. 185. [As much Scand. as AS.; the commoner AS. word was denu, used to translate uallis in L. iii. 5; hence mod. E. denn, dene, dun; see Denn.] + Icel. dāl, a dale, valley; Dan. dāl; Swed. dāl; Du. dāl; OFries. dāl; OSax. dāl; Goth. dāl; G. thal. Further allied to OSlav. doł, Russ. doł, a dale; cf. Gk. δῶλος, a vault. Der. dell; see Dell.

DALLY, to trifle, to fool away time. (F.—T.) ME. dalien. 'Dysours daly,' i.e. dicers play; K. Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 6991. 'To daly with derely your daynte wordes'—to play dearly with your dainty words; Gawain and the Grene Knight, 1253. Also spelt daylien, id. 1114. —AF. dallier, to converse, chat, pass the time in social converse; see gloss. to N. Bozon, ed. P. Meyer; OF. dallier, to 'chaff,' jest at (Godefroy). Of Teut. origin; cf. Bav. dalen, to speak and act as children (Schmeller); mod. G. dahlen, to trifle (which see in Kluge). See Notes on E. Etym. p. 56. Der. dalliance, ME. dalliance, Gawain and Grene Knight, 1012; AF. dalliance, Polit. Songs, p. 320.

DALMATIA, an ecclesiastical vestment. (F.—Dalmatia.) ME. dalmatyk, Wyntown, Chiron. IX. vi. 153 (N.E.L.). —F. dalmatique, 'a fashion of a long white gown, . . . spotted . . . with purple, at first brought up by the Dalmatian, or Slavonian priests; also a wide-sleeved vestment, worn . . . by deacons'; Cot.—L. dalmatica (uestis); fem. of Dalmaticus, belonging to Dalmatia.

DAM (1), an earth-bank for restraining water. (E.) ME. dam, tr. by Lat. agger; Prompt. Parv. p. 113. No doubt an AS. word, being widely spread; but not recorded. We find, however, the derived verb fordæmnan, to stop up; AS. Psalter, ed. Remoter origin uncertain; prob. allied to Gk. δαμῶν, a heap, δαμῶν, I constrain. Observe that the E. sb. is older in form than the verb. Der. dam, vb.

Though not found earlier, it can hardly be other than an E. word; cf. EFries. damp, vapour. [It can hardly be Scandinavian, the Icel. damp being a mod. word; see Cleasby and Vigfusson.] + Du. damp, vapour, steam, smoke; whence dampen, to steam; Dan. damp, vapour; whence dampe, to reek; G. dampf, vapour. sol. 'And ladies, and damoisels;' K. Alisaunder, 171. = OF. damoisele (with many variations of spelling), a girl, damsel; fem. form of OF. damoiseau, a young man, squire, page, retained in mod. F. in the form damoiseau; = Late L. domicellus, a page, which occurs in the Statutes of Cluni (Brachet). This is shortened from domicellus, also domicellus, a regular double diminutive from L. dominus, a lord; made by help of the suffixes -e and -el. See Don (2), and Dominat.
 ¶ For dan = sir (Chaucer), see Dan.

DAMSON, the Damascene plum. (F. — L. — Syria.) 'When damscines I gather;' Spenser, Shep. Kal. April, 152. Alacan has dammasin, Essay 46, Of Gardens; also 'the damasin plumme'; Nat. Hist. § 509. Lydgate has damysyns; Minor Poems, p. 15. = MF. damaisine, 'a Damascene, or Damson plum'; Cotgrave. = F. Damas, Damascus; with fem. suffix -ine. = L. Damascus. See Damask.

DAN, an honourable title; sir. (F. — L.) Spenser speaks of 'Dan Chaucer'; F. Q. iv. 2. 32. Chaucer has 'dan John'; C. T., B 3119. = OF. dan, acc., dans, nom., sir, lord. = L. dominus, acc. of dominus, lord. See Don (2). Der. dan (2), dame, damsel.

DANDELION, the name of a flower. (F. — L.) The word occurs in Cotgrave. The older spelling dent-de-lyon occurs in G. Douglas, Prolog to xii Book of Aeneid, l. 119; see Skeat, Specimens of English. ME. dent de lyoun, Medical Werkes, ed. Henslow, p. 91, l. 12. = F. dent de lion, 'the herbe dandelion'; Cot. [Cf. Span. pierre de lion, dandelion.] ¶ The plant is named from its jagged leaves, the edges of which present rows of teeth. = L. dentem, acc. of dens, a tooth; dr, preposition, of, and leionem, acc. of leo, a lion. See Tooth, and Lion.

DANDLE, to toss a child in one's arms, or fondle it in the lap. (Low G.) In Shak. Venus, 562; 2 Hen. VI, i. 3. 148. Palsgrave has: 'I dandyl, as a mother or nurrice doth a child upon their lappe.' Another meaning was to play, trifle with. Thus we find: 'King Henries ambassadors into France having bene dandled [trifled with, cajoled] by the French during these delusive practices, returned without other fruit of their labours'; Speed, Hen. VII, b. ix. c. 20. s. 28 (R.). Not known before the 16th century. ¶ In form, it is a frequentative verb, made by help of the suffix -le from an O. Low German base dand, which appears in the WPolen. dand-eren, to bounce up and down, like an elastic ball (De Ho). ¶ Cf. MItal. dandolare, dandolare, 'to dandle or dangle, to play the baby or gull'; Florio; dandola, dondola, 'a babies [doll], a puppy, . . . a kind of play at the ball; also, dandling or dangle'; id. This word is from the same Low G. root. Perhaps we may also compare MF. dandiner, to balance or sway the body, or to swagger (Supp. to Godfrey); and EFries. divanduen, to walk unsteadily, to sway from side to side (Koolman). And see prov. E. dander, to tremble, shake, saunter, trifle, in E.I.D.; MHG. tant, G. tand, a trifle, toy.

DANDRIFF, scurf on the head. (Scand.) 1) Formerly dandruff: 'the dandruffe or scurfie scales within the haire of head or beard'; Holland's Pliny, b. xx. c. 8. A compound word; composed of dander and hurf. Of these, dander is a Yurksh. word, signifying a slight scurf on the skin (E.I.D.); and hurf or wrf (at Whitley), or huff (EAnglia) with the sense of 'scurf' is from (Icel. hrufta, a scab. Thus the latter part of the word is of Scand. origin; perhaps the former was the same. See Hurf in E.I.D.; and Notes on E. Etym., p. 57.

DANDY, a top, cockcomb. (Gk. 1) The N.E.D. says: 'In use on the Scottish border at the end of the 18th century; and about 1813-9 in vogue in London, for the "exquisite" or "swell" of the period. Perhaps the full form was Jack-a-dandy, which occurs from 1659, and in 18th c. had a sense which might easily pass into that of dandy. Jack o' Dandy occurs in 1632, which suggests that Dandy was a variant of the name Andrew (as in Scotland). If so, the word is of Greek origin. = Gk. Ἀνδρίας; from ἀνδρῆος, manly. = Gk. ἀνδρῆος (gen. ἀνδρῆος), a man. = Skt. nara-s, a man.

DANGER, penalty, risk, insecurity. (F. — L.) On the uses of this word in early writers, see Trench, Select Glossary, and Richardson; and consult Brachet, s.v. danger. ME. daunger, daungere; Rob. of Glouc. p. 78, l. 1751; Chaucer, C. T. Prolog. 663 (or 665). Still earlier, in the Ancien Kivle, p. 326: 'ge polieſe oſte daunger of swuche oſerhwele yet muhte beon ower jrel' = ye sometimes put up with the arrogance of such an one as might be your thrall. =

OF. danger (mod. F. danger), absolute power, irresponsible authority; hence, power to harm, as in Shak. Merch. of Venice, iv. 1. 180. The word was also spell dangier, which rhymes with dangier in a poem of the 13th century cited in Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 362, l. 2; and this helps us out. ¶ According to Hatzfeld, this answers to a Late L. dominiarius, a form not found, but an extension from dominus, power, for which see Dominion. At any rate, dominus is certainly the true source of the word, and was used (like OF. dangier) to denote the absolute authority of a feudal lord, which is the idea running through the old uses of F. and E. danger. ¶ Brachet remarks: 'just as dominus had become domnus in Roman days, so dominiarius became domniarius, which conformed the ia (see the rule under abriger and Hist. Gram. p. 65), whence domniarius, whence OF. dangier; for m = n, see changer [from cambiare]; for -arium = -ier see § 198. A word similarly formed, and from the same source, is the E. dungeon. See Dominion, and Dungeon. Der. danger-ous, -ous-ly, -ous-ness.

DANGLE, to hang loosely, swing about. (Scand.) In Shak. Rich. II, iii. 4. 29. = Dan. dangle, to dangle, bob; Swed. dial. dangla, to swing, Kietz; who also cites NFriesic dangeln from Outzen's Dict. p. 44. Thre gives MSwed. dangla, dangla; and Aasen has Norw. dangla. Another form appears in Swed. dingla, Icel. dingla, Dan. dingle, to dangle, swing about. ¶ The suffix -le is, as usual, frequentative; and the verb is the frequentative of dang, 2nd grade of ding, to strike, throw; so that the sense was to throw about often, to bob, to swing. See Ding. ¶ We even find Low G. dung-eln, to dangle; from the weak grade dung-. Der. dangl-er.

DANK, moist, damp. (Scand.) In the Allit. Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, l. 313, we find 'the dewe that is danke'; and in l. 3750, we have it as a sb. in the phrase 'one danke of the dewe', i.e. in the moisture of the dew. And cf. 'Drops as dew or a danke rayne'; Destruction of Troy, 2368. It also occurs as a verb, in Specimens of Lyric Poetry, ed. Wright; see Specimens of Early Eng. ed. Morris and Skeat, sect. IV d. l. 28: 'deawes donketh the downes', i.e. dews moisten the downs. = Swed. dial. dank, a moist place in a field, marshy piece of ground, Kietz; Icel. dökk, a pit, pool; where dökk stands for dunk, by the assimilation so common in Icelandic, from Teut. stem dank-wō*. We also find Swed. dial. dänka, to moisten; Dan. dial. danke, dynte, to sprinkle linen with water before ironing it; also MSwed. dukenhet, moisture, Dan. dial. dunkel, moist; Norw. dynka, to wet. The forms prove the existence of an obs. Scand. verb danka*, to be wet, pt. t. dank*, pp. dunkinn*. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 57. Cf. Damp.

DAPPER, spruce, neat. (Du.) Orig. good, valiant; hence brave, fine, spruce. Spenser speaks of his 'dapper ditties'; Shep. Kal. October, l. 13. 'Dapfor, or praty [pretty], elegans'; Prompt. Parv. = Du. dapper, valiant, brave, intrepid, bold. ¶ OIIG. tuphar, heavy, weighty, (later) valiant; G. tapper, brave; + Ch. Slav. dobrit, good; Russ. dobroti, good, excellent. See Brugmann, l. § 563.

DAPPLE, a spot on an animal. (Scand.) 'As many eyes upon his body as my gray mare hath dapples'; Sidney, Arcadia, b. ii. p. 271 (R.). Hence the expression: 'His stede was al dappel-gray'; Chaucer, C. T. 13813 (B 2074). = Icel. depill, a spot, dot; a dog with spots over the eyes is also called depill; the orig. sense is a pond, a little pool, from Norw. dape, a pool, in Aasen; and Cleasby and Vigfusson. Cf. Swed. dial. depp, a large pool of water. Also MDan. duppe, a puddle, a hole where water collects. Der. dapple, verb; 'Dapples the drowsy eat with spots of grey'; Much Ado, v. 3. 27; and dappled. ¶ As Mr. Wedgwood well observes, 'the resemblance of dapple-grey to Icel. apalgrár, or apple-grey, Fr. gris pommelé, is accidental.' The latter phrase is equivalent to Chaucer's pomely-grey, C. T. prol. 616 (or 618). Still, association with apple may have changed dap- into dap-.

DARE (1), to be bold, to venture. (E.) a. The verb to dare, pt. t. dared, pp. dared, is the same word with the auxiliary verb to dare, pt. t. durst, pp. durst. But the latter keeps to the older forms; dared is much more modern than durst, and grew up by way of distinguishing, to some extent, the uses of the verb. ¶ The present tense, I dare, is really an old past tense, so that the third person is he dare (cf. he shall, he can); but the form he dares is now often used, and will probably displace the obsolescent he dare, though grammatically as incorrect as he shall, or he cans. ME. dar, der, dear, I dare; see Stratmann's O. E. Dict. 'The pore dar plede', i.e. the poor man dare plead; P. Ploverman, B. xiv. 108. Past tense dorsté, dursté. 'For if he yaf, he dorsté make avaunt' = for if he gave, he durst make the boast; Chaucer, C. T. prol. 227. AS. ie dear (for dear); I dare; þu dearst, thou darest; he dearst (r), he dare or dares; wú, gú, or hig durran, we, ye, or they dare. Past tense, ic dorste, I durst or dared; pl. we durston, we durst or dared. Infin. durran, to dare; Grein, l. 212. + Goth. dars, I dare; daursta, I durst; pp. daurats; infin. daurstan, to dare; OHG. tar, I dare; torsta, I dared; turran, to dare.

[This verb is distinct from the OHG. durfan, to have need, now turned into dürfen, but with the sense of 'dare'. In like manner, the Du. durven, to dare, is related to Icel. durfa, to have need, AS. durfan, Goth. durpan, to have need; and must be kept distinct. The verb requires some care and attention.] + Gk. duraviv, to be bold; duraviv, bold; Skt. duraviv, to dare. — DHERS, to be bold, to dare; Brugmann, i. § 502. ¶ AS. dearr < darr* < daz* = Goth. dars; cf. pt. t. dors-te. Der. dar-ing, dar-ing-ly.

DARE (2), a dace; see Dace.
DARK, obscure. (E.) ME. dark, derk, deork; see dearc in Stramann. AS. deorc, Grein, i. 191; base derk-*. The OIlg. tarchan-jan, to hide (answering to WGer. dark-n-jan*) from the 2nd grade dark-* of the same base. Cf. also OSax. der-ne, AS. der-ne, OHG. tar-ni, secret, dark. See Darn and Tarnish.

DARKLING, adv., in the dark. (E.) In Shak. Mid. Nt. Dream, ii. 2. 86; Lear, i. 4. 237; also in 'goth him-self darkeling'; Lord Rivers, Dices and Sayings (Caxton), fol. 35, l. 7. Formed from dark by help of the adverbial suffix -ling, which occurs also in falling, i.e. flatly, on the ground; see Halliwell's Dict., p. 360. It occurs also in hedding; 'heore hors hedding mette', i.e. their horses met head to head, King Alisaunder, l. 2261. β. An example in older English is seen in the AS. baeling, backwards, Grein, i. 76; and see Morris, Hist. Outlines of Eng. Accidence, sect. 322, ADV. Suffixes in -long, -ling.

DARKSOME, obscure. (E.) In Shak. Lucrece, 379. Palgrave has darksome, p. 309. Formed from dark by help of the suffix -some (AS. sum); cf. ful-some, blithe-some, win-some, &c.

DARLING, a little dear, a favourite. (E.) ME. deorling, dorling, durling, durling; spelt deorling, Ancien Riwle, p. 56. AS. dorling, a favourite; Ælfred's tr. of Boethius, lib. iii. prosa. 4. β. Formed from deor, dear, by help of the suffix -ling, which stands for -ling, where -l and -ing are both suffixes expressing diminution. Cf. duckling, goose-ling; see Morris, Hist. Outlines of Eng. Accidence, sect. 321. See Dear.

DARN, to mend, patch. (E.) 'For spinning, weaving, darning, and drawing up a rent'; Holland's Plutarch, p. 783 (R.). This darn seems to be merely a peculiar use of ME. dernen, to hide, conceal (prob. also to stop up a hole). Related to AS. gedyrnan, which not only meant 'to hide, conceal, keep secret', but also 'to stop up a hole', as shown by the gloss: 'oppulitum, gedyrned'; Yco. 461. 7; 494. 25. So also prov. E. darn (Aberdeen) means not only 'to hide, but also 'to stop up a hole with straw'; E.D.D. So also Westphalian stoppen means (1) to stop up; (2) to darn a stocking; Notes on E. Etym., p. 57. β. AS. gedyrnan is from the adj. dyrne, dierne (Merc. derne), 'secret', for Teut. darn-jo* (Sieviers, AS. Gr. § 159, 299), whence also OIlg. tarni, secret, dark; see under Dark.

DARNEL, a kind of weed, ryegrass. (F.—Scand. and L.) ME. darnel, darnel, Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 25, 29. Apparently a F. word. Mr. Wedgwood cites (from Grandgnage) the Rouchi darnelle, darnel (given by Hécart) and compares it with Walloon darnisse, darnisse, tipsy, stunted, giddy (also in Grandgnage). β. The former syllable also appears as dor- in Lowl. Sc. dornel, darnel; and is explained by Swed. där-repe, hearded darnel (Öman). This prefix prob. signifies 'stupefying'; cf. MDu. door, foolish (Oudemans), Swed. dära, to infuriate, dära, a fool, Dan. dære, a fool, G. thor, a fool; all of which are from a base dau-, for dauz-, dauz-*, the weak grade of which appears in AS. dys-ig, stupid; see Dizzy. γ. The latter syllable is from OF. nelle, neele, nielle, darnel (Godefroy). — Late L. nigella, a plant, one kind of which has black seeds. — L. nigellus, blackish; dimin. of niger, black. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 59; Lyte, tr. of Dodocens bk. ii. c. 96, bk. iv. c. 45. At least three plants have been confused, gith, cockle, and darnel. In Lolium temulentum, temulentum is represented by dar-, and lotium by -nel. Cf. MF. gyrone, 'darnell', Cot.; from gyrne, 'drunken'; id.

DART, a javelin. (F.—O. Low G.) ME. dart, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 178; Chaucer, C. T., A. 1564.—OF. dart (mod. F. dard), a dart; a word of O. Low G. origin. Cf. AS. darōð, darōð, or dard, a dart; Swed. dart, a dagger, poniard; Icel. darrað, a dart; cf. OHG. lart, a dart. β. Perhaps from the base dar- of AS. derian, to harm, injure. ¶ The Low L. dardus is evidently from an O. Low German source. Der. dar, verb, and see Dace.

DASH, to throw with violence. (Scand.) Orig. to beat, as when we say that waves dash upon rocks. ME. daschen, daschen. 'Into the cité he con dasche', i.e. he rushed, King Alisaunder, 2837; and see Layamon, i. 62; l. 1469.—Dan. dask, to slap; Swed. daska, to beat, to drub; Swed. dial. daska, to slap with the open hand, as one slaps a child (Rietz). — Low G. daschen, to thrash (Berghaus). β. A shorter form appears in Swed. dial. dia, to strike (Rietz). Der. dash-ing, i.e. striking; dash-ing-ly.

DASTARD, a cowardly fellow. (Scand.; with F. suffix.) 'Dastard or dullarde, durbuctius'; Prompt. Parv. p. 114. Dastarde, estourdy, butarin'; Palgrave. 1. The suffix is the usual F. -ard, as in dull-ard, slugg-ard; a suffix of Germanic origin, and related to Goth. hardus, hard. In many words it takes a bad sense; see Brachet, Introd. to Etym. Dict. sect. 196. 2. The stem dast- answers to E. dazed, and the t appears to be due to a past participial form.—Icel. dæstr, exhausted, breathless, pp. of dæsa, to groan, lose breath from exhaustion; closely related to Icel. daðr, exhausted, weary, pp. of dasak, to become exhausted, a reflexive verb standing for dasa-sik, to daze oneself. Another past participial form is Icel. dasin, commonly shortened to dasi, a lazy fellow. Thus the word is to be divided dast-t-ard, where dast- is the base, -t- the past participial form, and -ard the suffix. The word actually occurs in MDutch without the t, viz. in MDu. dasaert, dasaardi, a fool (Oudemans); and an ME. dasart, a dullard, occurs once, in Minor Poems of the Vernon MS. (E.E.T.S.), p. 333. On the other hand, we find Swed. dial. däst, weary (Rietz). See further under Dase. ¶ The derivation from AS. adastrigan, to frighten, is absurd; I find no such word; it is recorded by Sommer, but is an error for ONorthumb. adustriga, to curse; Matt. xxvii. 74. Der. dastard-ly, li-ness.

DATE (1), an epoch, given point of time. (F.—L.) ME. date; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, i. 505. 'Date, of scripture, datum'; Prompt. Parv. p. 114.—F. date, the date of letters or evidences; Cotgrave.—Late L. data, a date.—L. data, neut. pl. of datum, pp. of dare, to give. In classical Latin, the neut. datum was employed to mark the time and place of writing, as in the expression datum Romæ, given (i.e. written) at Rome. + Gk. di-dō-mi, I give; cf. di-dō-mi, a giver, di-dō-mi, given; Skt. da-dā-mi, I give, from the root dā, to give; cf. dātā, a giver; Church Slav. dati, to give; Russ. darite, to give. — di-dō, to give. Der. From the L. datum, given, we have also neut. sing. datum, and neut. pl. data; also dat-ive. And see dose, donation.

DATE (2), the fruit of a palm. (F.—L.—Gk.—Semitic.) ME. date; Maundeville's Travels, ch. 5, p. 57. 'Date, frute, dactylus'; Prompt. Parv. p. 114.—AF. date, Liber Albus, p. 224; OF. date (Littré); later F. datte, badly written date, a date; both spellings are in Cotgrave.—L. dactylus, a date; also, a dactyl.—Gk. δάκτυλος, a date (no doubt assimilated to the Gk. word for 'finger'; but of Eastern origin). From Semitic; cf. Aramaic diplā, a palm-tree; whence Heb. Diqlah, as a proper name, Gen. x. 27; also Arab. dagal, a kind of palm; Rich. Dict. p. 679.

DAUB, to smear over. (F.—L.) ME. dauben, to smear; used to translate L. linire, Wyclif, Ezek. xli. 10, 11; and see note 3 in Prompt. Parv. p. 114.—OF. dauber, occurring in the sense of 'plaster'. Cf. AF. daubours, plasterers, Late L. dealbātōres, Liber Custumarum, pp. 52, 99. The earlier form of this OF. verb could only have been dauber*, from L. dealbare, to whitewash, plaster. [Cf. F. auire from L. alba (see Alb), and F. dorer from L. deaurare.] β. This etymology of dauber is confirmed by Span. jalbar, to whitewash, plaster, corresponding to a hypothetical L. derivative dealbicare*. γ. From L. dē, down; and albāre, to whiten, from albus, white. See Alb. ¶ The sense of the word has probably to some extent influenced that of dab, which is of Low G. origin. W. dub, plaster, dubio, to daub; Gael. dob, plaster, dobair, a plasterer; Irish dob, plaster, dohaim, I plaster, are all borrowed from E. daub.

DAUGHTER, a female child. (E.) ME. doghter, daughter, dochter, dochter, doutter, &c.; the pl. dohtren occurs in Layamon, i. 124, l. 2924; dahtren in O. Eng. Homilies, i. 247; dehter in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, ii. 270. AS. dohtor, pl. dohtro, dohtro, dohtro, and dohter; Grein, i. 105. + Du. dochter; Dan. dochter, dotter; Swed. dotter; Icel. dóttir; Goth. dahtair; OHG. tohter, G. tochter. Teut. type dohter*; Idg. type dhughter*; whence Lith. dukė, Russ. doche; Gk. θύγάτηρ, Pers. duktār, Skt. duhitā. β. Lassen's etymology from the Skt. duh (for dhugh), to milk—'the milker'—is not now generally accepted.

DAUNT, to frighten, discourage. (F.—L.) ME. daunten, K. Alisaunder, 312.—AF. danter (Gaimar, 3201), daunter (Bozon); OF. danter (Roquefort); MF. donter (Cotgrave), (of which the last = mod. F. dompter), written for an older domter*, to tame, subdue, daunt.—L. domitiare, to subdue; frequentative of domare, to tame; which is cognate with E. tame. See Tame. Der. dauntless, lessness. DAUPHIN, eldest son of the king of France. (F.—L.—Gk.) Formerly spelt Dauphin, Fabyan, vol. ii. Car. VII. an. 16 (p. 560); also Dolphine, Hall, Edw. IV. an. 18. § 1.—OF. dauphin, for dauphin, a dolphin; also 'the Dolphin, or eldest son of France; called so of Dauphiné, a province given or (as some report it) sold in the year 1349 by Humbert earl thereof to Philippe de Valois, partly on condition, that for ever the French king's eldest son should hold it, during his father's life, of the empire'; Cotgrave. Brachet gives the date as 1343, and explains the name of the province by saying that the title of Dauphin was peculiar to SE. France. It first appears A. D. 1140. The origin of it is unknown, though it certainly represents the L. delphinus. A doublet of dolphin; see Dolphin.

DAVIT, a spar used as a crane for hoisting a ship's anchor clear of the vessel; one of two supports for ship's boats. (Heb.) 'Davut, a short piece of timber, used to hale up the flook of the anchor, and to fasten it to the ship's bow'; Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Older spelling David, a Christian name of Heb. origin. Capt. Smith (Works, ed. Arber, p. 793, A.D. 1646) has: 'the block at the David's end.' So also F. davier, formerly daviet, from davie, dimin. of OF. davi, [as] in 'davier de barrière, the pinser wherewith he [the barber] draws or pulls out teeth'; Cotgrave. He also gives: 'Davier d'un pelican, a certain instrument to pick a lock withal; an iron hook, or cramp-iron for that purpose.' So also AF. daviot, from davit, Riley, Memorials of London, p. 370 (1373); E. daviot, Naval Accounts, p. 49 (1485).

DAW, a jackdaw, bird of the crow family. (E.) In Skelton, Ware the Hawk, l. 327. In l. 322 he uses the compound daw-cocke. The compound ca-daw, i.e. caw-daw, occurs in the Prompt. Parv. p. 57; on which see Way's Note. May be claimed as an E. word, being certainly of O. Low G. origin. β . A cognate word is traced by Schmeller, in his Bavarian Dict. col. 494. He says that the Vocabularius Theonicus of 1482 gives the forms dach and dula; the latter of these answers to G. dohle, a jackdaw, and is a dimin. form, for an older dähle, dimin. of däha. This däha is the O. Low G. form answering to OHG. däha, MHG. dähe, a daw; whence MHG. dähle, later dähle, and now spelt dohle. γ . The word, like chough, is doubtless imitative; Schmeller gives dah düh as a cry used by hunters. By a change of the initial letter, we have the imitative E. word caw; and by uniting these words we have caw-daw, as above. Cf. also Ital. taccada, 'a chough, a rook, a daw'; also a skondil, a prater; also a raying or a skoulding; Florio. This Ital. word is plainly derived from Old High (German). Daw, jack-daw.

DAWOLE, to waste time, to loiter. (Scand.) And dawdle over a dish of tea; Boswell's Johnson, June 3, 1781. Of Scand. origin; cf. Norw. dawdall, indolent (Koss); Swed. däldag, a slothful man (Kietz); Low G. dädeln, to dawdle (Berghaus); Pomeran. dawdeln, to waste time. Allied to Norw. dawdler, faint, stupid, lifeless (lit. dead); and to Icel. dauði, Swed. död, death. See Death.

DAWK, transport by relays of horses or bearers; a post. (Hind.) See Yule. — Hind. dūk, transport, the post (Forbes). Cf. Skt. drūk, quickly; drā, to run.

DAWN, to become day. (Scand.) ME. dawnen; but the more usual form is dawen. 'Dawey, idem est quod Dayyn, dawynen, or dawen, aurora'; Prompt. Parv. p. 114. 'That in his bed her daweth him no day'; Chaucer, C.T., A 1676; cf. l. 14600 (B 3872). We find daweynen, daweynen, daweynen; Genesis and Exodus, 77, 1808, 3264. β . The -n is a suffix, often added to verbs to give them a neuter or passive signification; cf. Goth. fullnan, to become full, from fulljan, to fill; Goth. gahailnan, to become whole; and the like. The ME. word is to be derived as daw-nen, from the older dawnen, and the insertion of the n was suggested by Swed. and Dan. dawning, sb., a dawning, a dawn, as if from a verb dawnga, from dag, a day. γ . ME. dawen is the AS. dagian, to dawn; Grein, i. 182; from the AS. dag, day. So G. tagen, to dawn, from tag, day. See Day. Der. dawn, sb.

DAY, the time of light. (E.) ME. day, dai, dai; spelt dai in Layamon, ii. 2, l. 10246. AS. dæg, pl. dagas. + Du. dag; Dan. and Swed. dag; Icel. dagr; Goth. dag; G. tag. Teut. type dagos*, m.; allied to Lith. dagas, a hot season, dagā, harvest; OPruss. dagis, summer; Skt. ni-dāgha-, the hot season, dāgha, a burning, heat. — γ DHEGII, to burn, as in Lith. dēg-i, to burn, Skt. dah, to burn. Thus the orig. sense was 'hot time'. Brugmann, i. § 60. ¶ Perhaps it is well to add that the L. dies, Irish diu, W. dydd, meaning 'day', are from quite a different root, and are wholly unrelated. Der. dai-ly, day-book, -break, -spring, -star, and other compounds. Also daity, q.v.; dawn, q.v.

DAYWOMAN, dairy-woman. (Scand. and E.) In Shak. I. i. l. 1. i. 2. 137. The addition of woman is needless. Day = ME. dewe, a dairy-woman. — ONorw. deigja, a dairy-maid; see Dairy.

DAZE, to stupefy, render stupid. (Scand.) ME. dazen; the pp. dased (or dawed) is in Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, ii. 150; in the Pricke of Conscience, 6647; and in Allot. Poems, ed. Morris, i. 1085. The ME. dazen is also intransitive, in the sense to become stupefied; see N.E.D. = Icel. dasa, in the reflexive verb dasask, to daze oneself, to become weary and exhausted; Swed. dasa, to lie idle; Norw. dasa, to grow faint; dasa, to grow faint, be exhausted by cold or wet; dast, pp. faint, tired out; Dan. dial, dase, to be idle. Cf. Low G. däsen, däsen, to be listless; in 'n däs' sinn, to be in a daze (Berghaus). ¶ Hence also OF. daser, to be dazed. Der. daz-tard, q.v., and dazzele, q.v.

DAZZLE, to confuse the sight by strong light. (Scand.; with E. suffix.) In Shak. Hen. V. i. 2. 279; also intransitively, to be confused in one's sight, 3 Hen. VI. ii. 1. 25. 'I dayill, as ones eyes do for lokyng agaynst the sonne'; Palsgrave. The frequentative of daze, formed with the usual suffix -le; lit. 'to daze often.' See Daze. DE-, prefix, (1) from L. prep. de, down, from, away; also (2) occurring in French words, being the OF. de, F. de in composition; in which case it = L. dis-. 'It is negative and oppositive in destruy, deseide, deform, &c. It is intensive in declare, desolate, desiccate, &c.' Morris, Hist. Outlines of Eng. Accidence; sect. 336.

DEACON, one of the third order of clergy. (L. — Gk.) ME. deken; Chaucer has the compound archdeken, C. T. 6884, (D 1300). The pl. dekenes is in Wyclif, i Tim. iii. 8. AS. deacon, Exod. iv. 14. = L. diaconus, a deacon. = Gk. δίακονος (with α), a servant; hence, a deacon. The Ionic form is δίακων. 'From δία and κονος (α < αυ); allied to ἐκ-κονος, I am quick, ἐκ-κονος, a maid-servant'; Prellwitz. Dor. deacon-ess, where the suffix is of F. origin; deacon-ship, where the suffix is of AS. origin; deacon-ry, with F. suffix -ry (for -rie); also diacon-ate, -al, formed from L. diacon-us by help of the suffixes -ate and -al, of L. origin.

DEAD, deprived of life. (E.) ME. dead, ded; Chaucer, C. T. prol. 148. AS. drad, dead, Grein, i. 189; [where drad is described as an adjective, rather than as a past participle. And to this day we distinguish between dead and died, as in the phrases 'he is dead' and 'he has died'; we never say 'he has dead'. But see below.] + Du. dood; Dan. død; Swed. död; Icel. dauði; Goth. dauða, dead. β . The termination -ths in Moso-Gothic is the special mark of a weak past participle, and there can be no doubt that dauða was formed with this participial ending from the stem daw, second grade of Teut. daw*, whence the Gothic dauvan, to die. The Teut. type is dauwiz*, answering to Idg. dhauidh*, the change from -idh to -diz being due to Verner's Law. And this dauwiz* is the pp. of Teut. dawjan*, to die, exactly preserved (with mutation of au to o) in Icel. dauja, to die. Formerly allied to Russ. dawit, to strangle. Der. dead-ly (ME. deedly, Wyclif, Heb. vii. 8); dead-line; dead-ness, and see Death.

DEAF, dull of hearing. (E.) ME. deaf, def, deff; Chaucer, C. T. prol. 446 (or 448). AS. dræf; Grein, i. 192; + Du. doof; Dan. døv; Swed. döf; Icel. daufr; Goth. dauþs; G. tauh. β . Teut. type dauwiz*; orig. 'obscured'; and allied to the G. toben, to bluster, rage, be delirious; also to the Gk. ῥῆπος, smoke, darkness, stupefaction, stupor; and to τυφλός, 'blind'. (✓DHEUBII). Der. deaf-ly, deaf-ness, deaf-en.

DEAL, (1), a share, division, a quantity. (F.) The sense of 'quantity' arose out of that of 'share' or 'portion'. ME. deal, dæl, Chaucer, C. T. A 1835; Kn. Tale, 967. AS. dæl, a portion, share; Grein, i. 186. + Du. deel, a portion, share; Dan. dæl, a part, portion; Swed. dæl, a part, share; Goth. dails, 2 part; OHG. teil; G. teil. Teut. type dailiz*; allied to Lith. dalis, a share; Oslav. dělu. Brugmann, i. § 279 (2). Der. deal, verb; whence deal-er, -ing, -ings; cf. dole.

DEAL, (2), to divide, distribute; to traffic. (F.) ME. delen, Chaucer, C. T. prol. 247, where it has the sense of 'traffic'. AS. dellan, to divide; Grein, i. 186. + Du. deelen, to divide, share; Dan. dèle; Swed. dela; Icel. dala; Goth. dailjan; OHG. teilan; G. theilen. Teut. type dailjan*, from dailiz*, sb. The form of the verb shows that it is derived from the sb. See Deal (1).

DEAL, (3), a thin plank of timber. (D.) The word is not E., but Dutch. The earliest use of the word is in the Earl of Derby's Expeditions, 1390-3 (Camden Soc.), where find deles, boards, frequently; see p. 359, col. 2, s.v. Wood. 'A thousand deal-boards to make huts for the soldiers'; Clarendon, Civil War, ii. 675 (R.). In Florio (1598), we find: 'Doga, a deal board to make hogheads with.' — Du. dele, scem, deal, board, plank, threshing-fork (distinct from dele, deal, part, which is neuter). In MDu. the word was dissyllabic; Hexham gives deele, 'a plank, or a board' (distinct from dele, deyl, a part). + Low G. dela, a board (which in the Bremen Wörterbuch is wrongly connected with AS. dæl); G. diele, board, plank; MHG. dille; OHG. dille; AS. jille, E. thill. Thus deal (3) is the same word with Thill, q.v. ¶ The use of Du. de for Eng. th appears again in drill (1), q.v., and in deck.

DEAN, a dignitary in cathedral churches and colleges. (F. — L.) The orig. sense is 'a chief of ten'. ME. den, den, dene, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 65; also found in the comp. pl. suddene, equivalent to subdenes, i.e. sub-deans; P. Plowman, B. ii. 172. — OF. dean (Roquefort); mod.F. dean. — L. decanum, acc. of decanus, one set over ten soldiers; later, one set over ten monks; hence, a dean. — L. decan, ten; cognate with E. ten. See Decemvir and Ten. Der. dean-ery, dean-ship; also decan-al, directly from L. decan-us.

DEAR, precious, costly, beloved. (F.) ME. dere, dere, dere; spelt deore in Layamon, i. 7, l. 143. AS. dēore, dēre, Grein, i. 193, 215. + Du. dier; Dan. and Swed. dyr, dear, expensive; Icel. dýr, dear, precious; Osk. diwri; OHG. tiwri; MHG. tiwre, G. theuer, dear, beloved, sacred. Teut. type dēw-joz*. Root unknown. Der. dear-ly, -ness; also dar-ling, q.v., dear-th, q.v.

DEARTH, dearth, scarcity. (E.) ME. derthe, P. Plowman, B. vi. 330; Politt. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 342. Not found in AS., but regularly formed from AS. dēore, dear; cf. heal-th, leug-th, warm-th; see Morris, Hist. Outlines of Eng. Accidence, sect. 321. † Icel. dýrð, value; hence, glory; OSax. diurika, value; OHG. tiurida, value, honour. See above.

AS. deāð, Grein, i. 189. † Du. dood; [Dan. død; Swed. död; Icel. dauði]; Goth. dauhtis; G. tod. Teut. type dau-thuz*. Der. Dead and Die. ¶ The ME. form deð is rather Scandinavian than AS.; cf. the Danish and Swedish forms.

DEBAR, to bar out from, hinder. (F.) In Shak. Sonnet 28. Earlier, in The Floure of Curtesie, st. 10, by Lydgate; pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. cccviii, back. Made up by prefixing the OF. des [= L. dis] to the E. bar; see Bar. ¶ It agrees in sense neither with Late L. debarre, to take away a bar, nor with OF. debarrier, to unbar (Cotgrave).

DEBARKE, to land from a ship. (F.) Debarik* (not much used), to disembark; Ash's Dict. 1775. = F. debarquer, to land; spelt debarquer in Cotgrave. = F. des (for L. dis, away), and F. barque, a bark, ship. See Bark (1). Der. debarikation, also spelt debarcation.

DEBASE, to degrade, lower, abase. (Hybrid.) In Shak. Rich. II, iii. 3. 127. A mere compound, from L. de, down, and basis. See Base. Der. debase-ment, debas-ing.

DEBATE, to argue, contend. (F.—L.) 'In which he wol debate'; Chaucer, C. T. 13797 (B 2058). The ME. sb. debat occurs in P. Plowman, C. xxii. 251. = OF. debatre (F. débattre), to debate, argue, discuss; 'Cot.—L. de, down; and battere, popular form of L. battere, to beat. See Beat, and Batter. Der. debate, sb., debat-er, -able.

DEBAUCH, to seduce, corrupt. (F.—L. and Teut.) Only the pp. debauched is in Shakespeare, and it is generally spelt debauch'd; Tempest, iii. 2. 29. = OF. debaucher (mod. F. déboucher), 'to debauch, mar, corrupt, spoil, vitiate, seduce, mislead, make lewd, bring to disorder, draw from goodness'; Cot.—OF. des, prefix, from L. dis, away from; and OF. bauche, of rather uncertain meaning. Cotgrave has: 'bauche, a row [row], rank, lane, or course of stones or bricks in building.' See Bauche in Dicz, who remarks that, according to Nicot, it means a plastering of a wall; according to Ménage, a workshop (apparently in order to suggest an impossible derivation from L. apotheca). β. The compounds are esbaucher, to rough-hew, frame (Cotgrave); embaucher, 'to employ, occupy, use in business, put unto work' (id.); and desbaucher. Roquefort explains OF. bauche as a little house, to make it equivalent to Low L. bugia, a little house. Dicz proposes to explain debaucher by 'to entice away from a workshop.' He suggests as the origin either Gael. balc, a balk, boundary, ridge of earth (which is mere English), or the Icel. bálkr, a balk, beam. γ. The latter of these suggestions may be nearly right; but it may be better to derive it from OSax. balko, a beam, or OHG. balco, balcho; the word bauche had clearly some connexion with building operations. At this rate, we should have esbaucher, to balk out, i.e. set up the frame of a building; embaucher, to balk in, to set to work on a building; desbaucher, to dis-balk, to take away the frame or the supports of a building before finished or to leave it incomplete. Cf. Kötting, § 1183. And see OF. debaucher in Supp. to Godefroy. See Balk (1). Der. debauch, sb.; debauch-ee (F. débauché, debauched); debauch-ery.

DEBENTURE, an acknowledgment of a debt. (L.) Spelt debetur by Lord Bacon, in the old edition of his speech to King James, touching Purveyors. The passage is thus quoted by Richardson: 'Nay, farther, they are grown to that extremity, as is affirmed, though it be scarce credible, that they will take double poudage, once when the debeture [old ed. debetur] is made, and again the second time when the money is paid.' Blount, in his Law Dict., has: 'Debetur, was, by a Rump-Act in 1649, ordained to be in the nature of a bond or bill, &c. The form of which debetur, as then used, you may see in Scobell's Rump-Acts, Anno 1649, cap. 63.' Also in the Paston Letters, i. 364, n. 264 (ab. 1455). = L. debetur, they are due; 'because these receipts began with the words debetur mihi'; Webster. = L. differre, to be due. See Debt.

DEBILITATE, to weaken. (L.) The verb occurs in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, bk. ii. c. 30; Shak. has debile, i.e. weak, Cor. i. 9. 48; and debility, As You Like It, ii. 3. 51; cf. MF. debilitare, 'to debilitate, weaken, enfeeble'; Cot.—L. debilitatus, pp. of debilitare, to weaken. = L. debilis, weak. Prob. from L. de, away, not; and bilis, allied to Skt. bala, strength; cf. Skt. dur-bala (for dau-bala*), feeble. Brugmann, i. § 553. Der. From the same source is debility, spelt debilitie, Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 10; OF. debilité, from L. debilitatus, acc. of debilitas, weakness.

DEBONAIR, courteous, of good appearance. (F.—L.) In early use. ME. deboners, Rob. of Glouc. p. 167, l. 2481; Ancrer Riwele, p. 186; also the sb. debonairite, O. Eng. Hom. i. 269, l. 15. = AF. debonera, debonairs, adj. affable, Life of Edw. Confessor, l. 238; compounded of de bon aise, lit. of a good mind. Here de is L. de, of; bon is from L. bonus, good; and aise was a sb. (orig. masc.) signifying place, stock, race, a word of uncertain origin, but perhaps from L. aren, an open space, or L. acc. agrum, field. Kötting, § 848.

DEBOUCH, to march out of a narrow pass. (F.—L.) First in 1760. A modern military word (Todd). = F. déboucher, to uncork, to emerge. = F. de, for L. dis, out, away; and boucher, to stop up the mouth; thus déboucher is lit. 'to unstop.' From F. bouche, the mouth; L. bucca, the cheek; also, the mouth.

DEBT, a sum of money due. (F.—L.) The introduction of the b (never really sounded) was due to a knowledge of the Latin form, and was a mistake. See Shak. L. L. L. v. i. 23. ME. detie, Chaucer, C. T. Prol. 280 (or 282); P. Plowman, B. xx. 10. The pl. dettes and dettur (i.e. debtor) both occur on p. 126 of the Ancrer Riwele. = OF. detie, a debt; Cot. has both detie and debtie. = L. debita, a sum due; fem. of debitus, owed, pp. of debere, to owe. β. Débire is for débirere*, lit. to have away, i.e. to have on loan; from de, down, away, and habere, to have. See Habit. Der. debt-er (ME. debtur, OF. deteur, from L. debitum, acc. of debitor, a debtor). We also have debit, from L. debitum.

DEBUT, a first appearance in a play. (F.) Modern, and French. = F. début, a first stroke, a first cast or throw in a game at dice, first play in a game at bowls; verbal sb. from debuter. The MF. debuter meant 'to repel, to put from the mark he aimed at'; Cot. The change of meaning is singular; the verb seems to have meant (1) to displace an opponent's bowl; and thence (2) to lead in the next bout (as is usual at bowls). See Notes on E. Myrm., p. 63. = OF. des, for L. dis, apart; and but, an aim. See Butt (1).

[Hall also uses the short form decors (from OF. decorer); Hen. V, an. 2. § 19. The word decor in Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 4, is a proper name. *L. DECOY, to allure, entice. (Hybrid; L. and Du.-L.) A coined word. The word decoy-duck, i.e. duck for decoying wild ducks, occurs in Beaumont and Fletcher, Fair Maid, Act. iv. sc. 2 (Clown); 'you are worse than simple wildgeons, and will be drawn into the net by this decoy-duck, this tame cheater.' But Burton, Anat. Melan. ii. 2. 4, has: 'Fowling . . . with . . . coy-ducks.' Made by prefixing L. dē, down, to prov. E. coy, a decoy, which was borrowed from Du. kooi, a cage, a decoy, MDu. koye, also kouwe (Hexham). This is not a true Du. word, but adapted from Late L. cava, whence also F. and E. cage; see Cage. β. Perhaps the prefixing of dē was due to association with MF. cogen, to quiet; so that dē-coy seemed to mean 'to quiet down.' (See Notes on E. Etym., p. 64.) Cf. accoy, Spenser, F. Q. iv. 8. 59; 'Coyyn, blandior;' Prompt. Parv. See Coy. Der. decoy-duck, -bird.

DEFIANCE, DEFICIENT; see Defy, Defect.

DEFILE (1), to make foul, pollute. (Hybrid; L. and E.) A clumsy compound, with a L. prefix to an E. base. The force of the word is due to E. foul, but the form of the word was suggested by OF. defouler, to trample under foot; so that the ME. defoulen, to tread down, passed into (or gave way to) a later form defile; occasionally defoil. [We also had befoul and befile.] Both sources must be taken into account. A. We have (1) ME. defoulen, to tread down. Rob. of Glouc., describing how King Edmund seized the robber Lifsa, says that he 'from the bord hym drou, And defouled him vnder him mid hond and mid fote', i.e. thrust him down; p. 277, l. 5620. Wyclif translates conculcatus est (A. V. 'was trodden down') by was defouled; Luke, viii. 5. 'We defouile with our feet ye fine gold schene', as a translation of 'aurum pelibus conculcatus'; Alexander and Dinidius, ed. Skeat, 1027. 'This is the OF. defouler, 'to tread or trample on'; Cot. Derived from L. de, down; and Late L. fullare, to full cloth; see FULLER. B. Again, we have (2) ME. defoulen, to defile, imitated from the former word, but with the sense of E. foul engrafted on it. Wyclif translates conculcatus (A. V. 'defiled') by defouled; Matt. xv. 11. Later, we find defouled, Sir T. More, Works, p. 771 a; afterwards defile, Much Ado, iii. 3. 60. 'This change to defile was due to the influence of ME. fylen, the true E. word for 'to pollute', correctly used as late as in Shak. Macb. iii. 1. 65: 'have I fyld my mind.' This is the AS. fylian, to make foul, whence the comp. disfylian, to pollute utterly, in Gregory's Pastoral, § 54, ed. Sweet, p. 421; also befylian, to defile; Bosworth. The verb fylian is regularly formed by the usual mutation of ū to y, from the adj. ful, foul. See Foul. Der. defilement.

DEFILE (2), to pass along in a file. (F.—L.) 'Defile, to march or go off file by file'; Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Hence 'Defile, or Defiles, a straight narrow lane, through which a company of soldiers can pass only in file'; id.—F. defiler, to file off, defile; an earlier sense was to unravel, said of thread.—F. de < OF. de-, L. dis-, apart; and filer, to spin threads, from fil, 'a thread'.—L. also a file, ranke, order; Cot.; from L. filum, a thread. See FILE (1). Der. defile, sb., formerly defile (as above), from F. defile, pp. of defiler.

DEFINE, to fix the bounds of, describe. (F.—L.) ME. definien; 'I have defined that blissfulness be sovereyn good'; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 2; l. 49. Cf. definiuncion, Chaucer, C. T. 5607 (D 25). [The latter is a false form, for definiuncion.]—OF. definier, Romanic variant of definire, 'to define, conclude, determine or discuss, precisely to express, fully to describe'; Cot.—L. definire, to limit, settle, define.—L. de, down; and finire, to set a bound, from L. finis, a bound, end. See FINISH. Der. defin-able, -ite, -ite-ly, -ite-ness, -it-in, -it-ive, -it-ive-ly.

DEFLECT, to turn aside, swerve aside. (L.) 'At some part of the Azores it [the needle] deflecteth not'; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, bk. ii. c. 2, § 13. 'Deflexure, a bowing or bending'; Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674.—L. deflectere, to bend aside.—L. de, down, away;

DELECTABLE, pleasing. (F.-L.) [The usual ME. word was delectable; see Delight. The quotations in Richardson are misleading; in the first and second of them, read delectable and delectably. The occurrence of delectable in the Romaine of the Rose, 1440, is due to Thynne's edition, and the occurrence of delectable in the only edition of Mandeville's Travels, c. 14, p. 155, is suspicious.] However, we find delectable in Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 22; delectable in Caxton's Golden Legend, St. Paul first Hermit, i. 1; and in the Bible of 1551, 2 Sam. i. 26, where the A.V. has 'pleasant.' Condemned as a Gallicism in 1795, but used by Burke (Todd). — F. déranger, to disarrange; spelt desranger in Cotgrave. — OF. des < L. dis, apart, here used negatively; and OF. ranger, to rank, range, a word of Germanic origin. See Range. Der. dérangement.

DÉRELICTION, complete abandonment. (L.) Derelict, in the sense of 'abandoned,' is also in use. Dereliction is in Hooker, Eccl. Polity, b. v. § 17. — L. acc. derelictionem, from nom. derelictio, complete neglect; cf. derelictus, pp. of derelinquere, to forsake utterly. — L. de, fully; and relinquere, to leave. See Relinquish.

DÉRIDE, to laugh at, mock. (L.) In Spenser, F. Q. vi. 7. 32. — L. deridare, pp. derisus, to mock. — L. de, fully, very much; and ridere, to laugh. See Risible. Der. derid-er; also deris-ion (Caxton, Troy-book, leaf 95, l. 8), -ive, -ive-ly, from pp. derisus.

DÉRIVE, to draw from, make to flow from. (F.—L.) For the classical use of the word in English, see Trench, Select Gloss. ME. deriuen (with u for v), used as a neuter verb by Chaucer, C. T. 3008 (A 3036), but in the usual way in l. 3040 (A 3038). — OF. deriver, 'to derive, or draw from; also, to drain or dry up;' Cot. — L. derivare, pp. derivatus, to drain, draw off water. — L. de, away; and rivus, a stream. Der. derogation, -or-y, -or-ily.

DERRICK, a kind of crane for raising weights. (Du.) Applied to a sort of crane from its likeness to a gallows; and the term derrick crane had special reference to a once celebrated hangman of the name of Derrick, who was employed at Tyburn. He is mentioned in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, and Mr. Tancock sends me the following clear example. 'The theefe that dyes at Tyburne . . . is not halfe so dangerous . . . as the Politick bankrupt. I would there were a Derrick to hang vp him too;' T. Dekker, Seven Deadly Sins of London (1606); ed. Arber, p. 17. The name is Dutch; Sewall's Du. Dict. (p. 523) gives Diederik, Dierryk, and Dirk as varying forms of the same name. This name answers to the G. Dietrich, AS. þeodric, i. e. 'ruler of the people.' The AS. þeod is cognate with Goth. þiudin, people; see Dutch. The suffix -ric answers to Goth. -reiks, as in Friðareiks, Frederick; cp. Goth. reiks, adj., chief, mighty, hence rich; see Rich.

DERRING-DO, desperate courage. (E.) Spenser has 'For ever, who in derring-doe were drede,' &c.; Shep. Kal., Oct. 65. This extraordinary word is due to a total misconception of a phrase in Chaucer; he has imagined it to mean 'daring action.' But Chaucer has: 'In durring don that longeth to a knight;' Troil. v. 837; where durring is a sb., meaning 'daring;' and don is the infin., meaning 'to do.' Later authors have blindly adopted Spenser's error, in total ignorance of ME. grammar. See my Notes on E. Etym., p. 65.

DERVIS, DERVISH, a Persian monk, ascetic. (Pers.) 'The Derwuse, an order of begging friar;' Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 324. 'An order of Monks, who are called Derwises;' Sandys, Trav. (1532), p. 55. — Pers. darwish, poor, indigent; a dervish, monk; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 260. So called from their profession of extreme poverty. Cf. Zend drivy-, poor (Horn).

DESCANT, a variation (in music), a disquisition. (F.—L.) 'Twenty doctours expounde one text xx. wayes, as children make descant upon playne song;' Tyndal's Works, p. 168; col. 1. Spelt dyscant, Squire of Low Degree, l. 790. — ONF. descant, for OF. descant, 'descant of music,' also, a psalmody, recantation, or contrary song to the former; Cot. — OF. des < L. dis, apart, separate; and ONF. cant, for OF. chant, a song; see Burguy, who gives cant, canter as variants of chant, chanter. From L. cantus, a song; cantere, to sing. See Chant, and Cant. Der. descant, verb.

—L. dē, down; and scandere, to climb. See Scand. Der. descendant (OF. descendant, descending; Cot.); descend-ent (L. pres. pt. stem descend-ent); descens-ion-ol; descent, Gower, C. A. iii. 207; bk. vii. 3432 (OF. descence, a sudden fall; formed from descendere by analogy with the form venire from venire, and the like).

This was a French form, from OF. descriere.] —L. dē, describe, pp. descriptus, to copy, draw out, write down. —L. dē, fully; and scribere, to write. See Scribe. Der. describable, descript-ion (Chaucer, C. T. Group A, 2053), descript-ive, -ive-ly.

DESCRY, to make out, espy. (F.—L.) In early use. ME. descryen, descryen. 'No couthe ther non so muche descrye' [badly spelt descrye, but rhyming with nygromauncye], i. e. nor could any one discern so much; King Alisaunder, l. 138.—OF. descrire, a shorter spelling of descriure, to describe; cf. mod. F. descrire, —L. dē, describe, to describe. See Describe. ¶ Thus the word is merely a doublet of describe; but it was not well understood, and we frequently find in our authors a tendency to confuse it with decry. Cf. 'Decryinge, Decripco' Prompt. Parv. p. 119.

DESECRATE, to profane. (L.) 'Desecrated and prophaned by human use,' Bp. Bull, vol. i. ser. 4 (R.). —L. dē, descriatus, pp. of descriere, to desecrate. —L. dē, away; and sacrare, to make sacred, from sacro, for sacer, sacred. See Sacred. Der. desecrat-ion, Bailey, vol. ii. (1727).

DESERT (1), a waste, wilderness. (F.—L.) Prop. an adj. with the sense 'waste,' but early used as a sb. ME. desert, K. Alisaunder, p. 199, l. 4772; Rob. of Glouc. p. 232, l. 4785; Wyclif, Luke, iii. 4.—OF. desert, a wilderness; also, as adj. deserted, waste. —L. dē, desertus, waste, deserted; pp. of deserrere, to desert, abandon, lit. to unhind.—L. dē, in a negative sense; and serere (pp. seruus), to bind, join. See Serius. Der. desert, verb; desert-er, -ion.

DESERVE, to merit, earn by service. (F.—L.) ME. deservien (with u for v), P. Plowman, C. iv. 303; Chaucer, C. T. 12150 (C. 216). —OF. deservir. —L. dē, deservire, to serve devotedly; in Late L. to deserve; DuCange. —L. dē, fully; and servire, to serve, from servus, a slave, servant. See Serve. Der. deserv-ing, -ing-ly, -ed-ly; also desert (2), q. v.

DESHABILLE, undress, careless dress. (F.—L.) So in Mrs. Centlivre, Busybody, A. i. sc. 1 (Miranda). But formerly quadrasyllabic with final -i; Steele has deshabill, Spectator, no. 49, § 3.—F. deshabille, undress; orig. pp. of deshabiller, to undress.—F. des, OF. des < L. dis, apart, used as a negative prefix; and habiller, to dress. See Habillment. ¶ Now usually dishabille.

T. 1503 (A. 1501).] —OF. desirer, formerly dē-irer (Burguy). —L. dē, desiderare, to long for, esp. to regret, to miss. β. The orig. sense is obscure, perhaps 'to note the absence of the stars,' hence, to miss, regret; but there can be little doubt that, like consider, it is derived from sider, for sides, stem of sidus, a star. See Consider. Der. desire, sb.; desir-able, -abl-y, -able-ness; -abil-ty; -ous, -ous-ly.

DESIST, to cease from, forbear. (F.—L.) In Shak. DESPATCH, DISPATCH, to send off quickly. (Span.—L.) The orig. sense was 'to dispatch business.' In Shak. K. John, i. 99; v. 7. 90; the sb. is also common, as in Cymb. iii. 7. 16. The spelling dispatch is very common, and is also more in accordance with E. analogy (N.E.D.). First in 1517 (spelt dispatched); Palsgrave (1530) has dispathe, vb., p. 520.—Span. despachar, 'to dispatch, to ride out of the way'; Minshew. Cognate with Ital. dispiacere, to dispatch (Torriano); usually spaciare, 'to dispatch, hasten, speed' (Florio). —L. type dis-pacture*; from dis, intensive particle, and pacture*, for Late L. pacare, to make an agreement, from L. pactum, an agreement; see Pact. β. Confused by Johnson with F. dépêcher, OF. depescher, obs. E. depnach (N.E.D.). Here pescher answers to a Late L. pedicare, as in impedicare, to place obstacles in the way. Hence to depeach = to remove obstacles. Pedicare is formed from L. pedica, a letter; from ped-, stem of pes, a foot; see Impach. ¶ Dispatch might have been from Ital., but Ital. generally has the shortened form; and dispatch seems to have been due to dealings with Spain (ab. 1517). Coined from Gk. δι-, double (from δίς, twice); and Gk. κοτύλη, a cup-shaped hollow or cavity.—Gk. κοτύλη, anything hollow, a cup. Cf. L. calinus, a bowl; see Kettle. Der. dicotyledon-ous.

DICTATE, to command, tell what to write. (L.) 'Sylla could not skill of letters, and therefore knew not how to dictate'; Bacon, Adv. of Learning, ed. W. A. Wright, l. 7. 29; p. 66. Shak. has dictator; Cor. ii. 2. 93.—L. dictāns, pp. of dictare, to dictate; cf. 'Sylla nesciuit literas, non potuit dictare', quoted in Bacon, Essay xv. β. Dictare is the frequentative of dicerē, to say; see Dictation. Der. dictat-ion, -or, -or-ship, -or-i-al, -or-i-al-ly.

DICTION, manner of discourse. (F.—L.) In Shak. Hamlet. v. 2. 123.—F. diction, 'a diction, speech, or saying'; Cot.—L. acc. dictiōnem, from nom. dictio, a saying, speech; cf. dict-, pp. stem of dicerē, to say, also, to appoint; from the same root as dicerē, to tell, publish.—Gk. διδόναι, I show, point out; Skt. dg, to show, procl. Gōth. ga-teihan, to tell, announce; G. zeigen, to point out.—√ DEIK, to show, point out; Brugmann, i. § 207. From the same root are indicate, indict, index, avenge, judge, preach, &c.

DID, pt. of do; see Do.

DIDACTIC, instructive. (Gk.) In Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. ser. 10; also in his Dissuasive from Popery, pt. i. s. 9 (R.).—Gk. διδασκτικός, instructive; cf. 1 Tim. iii. 2.—Gk. διδάσκω, to teach; where διδά- = di-dā-* = di-dā-. + L. doc-ere, to teach; cf. doc-ere, to learn. DIDAPPER, a diving bird, a dabchick. (E.) 'Dapper, or dy-dapper, watry-byrd, mergulus'; Prompt. Parv. p. 127. For dy-dapper. 'Like a dy-dapper peering through a wave'; Shak. Venus, 86. Compounded of dive (q.v.) and dapper, i.e. a diver, dipper, plunger, so that the sense of dive occurs twice in the word, according to a common principle of reduplication in language. [Cf. Derwent-water—white-water—water.] β. Dapper answers to AS. doppa; cf. dop-chicken, the Linc. word for the dab-chick (Halliwell); dappers, i.e. dippers or Anaplastics, used by Ben Jonson in his masque entitled News from the New World; and the form doppar cited from the Prompt. Parv. above. The AS. form dife-doppa actually occurs, to translate the L. pelicanus (Bosworth); where -if is an agential suffix, replaced (later) by -er; and dop = dup*-, weak grade of deup*-, as seen in AS. dēop, deep. Cf. Swed. doppa, to dip, plunge, immerse. Hence also dap-chick, for dop-chick, i.e. the diving bird, corrupted to dab-chick for ease of pronunciation. See Dip, Deep.

DIDDLE, to overreach. (E.) Also, to waste time by dawdling; see E.D.D. From the base dyd-, as in AS. dyd-rian, to delude; formed (by vowel-change of u to y) from aud-, weak grade allied to audh-, as seen in dēn, death; cf. Dawdle. Cf. Efrics. duđen, beduđen, to overreach, duðlen, to be stupid, dote, dream; Norw. duðla, to hush to sleep (Koss); Dan. dude, darnel (because it stupefies); Larzen.

DIE (1), to lose life, perish. (Scand.) ME. dien, dyan, dizen, dēzen, dēzen. Spelt dēzen in Layamon, 31796. Late AS. dēga, Holy Rood-tree, ed. Napier (E.E.T.S., 1894), p. 14, l. 25; so that the word may be a native one, after all. [The ordinary AS. word is sterfan or sweltan; hence it is usual to regard die as Scandinavian.] = Icel. dreyn, to die; Swed. dö; Dan. dø; OSax. dōian; MHG. tuonen, to die. Cf. also OFries. deia, deja, to kill; Gōth. af-dawjan, to harass, Matt. ix. 36. The Teut. base is dau*; whence dau-jan*, to die (Icel. dreija). Cf. Russ. davie, to strangle. See Death, Dead.

DIE (2), a small cube used for gaming. (F.—L.) The sing. die is in Shak. Wint. Tale, iv. 3. 27; he also uses the pl. dies (id. i. 2. 133). Earlier, the sing. is seldom found; but the ME. pl. dys is common; see Chaucer, C. T. 1240, 11002, 12557 (A 1238, F 690, C 623). Some MSS. spell the word dees, which is, etymologically, more correct.—OF. dé, a die (Burguy), later dé, pl. dés (Cotgrave); cf. Prov. dat. a die (Brachet); also Ital. dado, pl. dadi, a die, cube, pedestal; Span. dado, pl. dados.—Late L. datum, a thing given or decreed; hence applied to a die for casting lots. Orig. neuter of dare, pp. of dare, to give, let go, give forth, thrust, throw. See DATE (1). Der. die, a stamp, pl. die; also dice, verb, ME. dyeen, Prompt. Parv. p. 121. Doublet, dado.

DIET (1), a prescribed allowance of food. (F.-L.-Gk.) 'Of his diet measurable was he'; Chaucer, C. T. 437 (A 435). Cf. 'And 3if thou diest the thus, i. e. diet thyself in this way'; P. Plowman, B. vi. 270.-OF. diète, 'diet, or daily fare'; also, a Diet, Parliament; Cot.-Late L. dieta, diata, a ration of food.-Gk. diata, mode of life; also, diet. Brugmann, i. § 650. Der. diet-ary, -et-ic.

DIET (2), an assembly, council. (F.-L.-Gk.) 'Thus would your Polish Diet disagree'; Dryden, Hind and Panther, ii. 407. It occurs also in Cotgrave.-OF. diète, 'diet'; also, a Diet, Parliament; Cot.-Late L. dieta, a public assembly; also, a ration of food, diet. β. The peculiar spelling diata and the suffix -ta leave no doubt that this word is nothing but a peculiar use of the Gk. diata, mode of life, diet. In other words, this word is identical in form with Diet (1), q. v. γ. At the same time, the peculiar sense of the word undoubtedly arose from a popular etymology that connected it with the L. diēs, a day, esp. a set day, a day appointed for public business; whence, by extension, a meeting for business, an assembly. We even find dieta used to mean 'a day's journey'; and diata, 'a day's work, or a daily duty'; Ducange.

DIFFER, to be distinct, to disagree. (F.-L.) 'Dynerse and differing substances'; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. v. pr. 5; i. 17. Ch. also has the sb. difference, id. b. v. pr. 6; i. 157.-OF. différer (Hatzfeld); F. différer, also with the sense of 'defer'.-L. differe, to carry apart, to differ; also, to defer.-L. dif- (for dis-), apart; and ferre, to bear, cognate with F. bear. See BEAR (1). Der. differ-ent (OF. different, from L. pres. part. stem different-), -ent-ly, -ent-ial; also diff-er-ence (OF. différence, from L. differentia). Doublet, defer.

DIFFICULTY, an obstacle, impediment, hard enterprise. (F.-L.) [The adj. difficult is in Shak. Oth. iii. 3. 82, but it is somewhat rare in early authors, and was merely developed from the sb. difficult, which was a common word and in earlier use. The MF. word for 'difficult' was difficil, occurring in Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 23. § 5.] ME. difficulte; Chaucer, C. T. 6854 (D 1272).-OF. difficilte; Cot.-L. difficultatem, acc. of difficultas, difficulty, an abbreviated form of difficilis*.-L. difficilis, hard.-L. diff-, -dis-, apart; and facilis, easy. See FACILE, FACULTY. Der. difficult-ly.

John, i. 65.-L. diffidentem, acc. of diffidens, pres. pt. of diffidere, to distrust; cf. L. diffidentia, distrust.-L. diff-, -dis-, apart, with negative force; and fideri, to trust, allied to fides, faith. See FATH. Der. diffident-ly, diffidence; see diffidence in French, Select Glossary.

Chaucer has diffusoun, Troilus, iii. 296.-L. diffusus, pp. of diffundere, to shed abroad.-L. diff-, -dis-, apart; and funderi, to pour. See FUSE (1). Der. diffuse, adj.; -ly, -ness, diffus-ible, -ed, -il-ly, -ed-ness, -ion, -ive, -ive-ly, -ive-ness.

DIG, to turn up earth with a spade. (F.-Du.) ME. diggen. 'Dikeres and delcures digged up the bakes' = ditchers and delvers dug up the banks; P. Plowman, B. vi. 109, where, for digged, the earlier version (A. vii. 100) has dikeden. [Thus diggen is equivalent to dikene, to dig.] F. diguer, to make a dike (15th cent.); Littré. -F. digue, 'a ditch'; Cot.-Du. dijk, a dike; cognate with AS. dice, a dyke, or dike, a ditch. Cf. Swed. dika, to dig a ditch, from dike, a ditch; Dan. dige, to dig, from dige, a ditch. ¶ At first a weak verb; the strong pt. t. dug is of late invention, the true pt. t. being digged, which occurs 18 times in the A. V. of the Bible, whereas dug does not occur in it at all. Cf. stuck, late pt. t. of stick. See DIKE. Der. digg-er, digg-ings.

DIGAMMA, a Greek letter representing the sound of E. w. (Gk.) 'Digamma, the letter F'; Cooper's Thesaurus (1565). Lit. 'double gamma' from its shape (F), which resembled that of a gamma (Γ) with a doubled horizontal bar.-Gk. dig, double; and gamma, the letter γ. See DI- (2), and GAMUT.

T. 10661 (F 347); so also digestive, id. 14967 (B 4151); and digestible, id. 439.] ME. digest, used as a pp.-digested; Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 195.-L. digestus, pp. of digere, to carry apart, separate, dissolve, digest.-L. di-, -dis-, apart; and gerere, to

DIGIT, prepared, disposed, adorned. (L.) Nearly obsolete. 'The clouds in thousand liveries digit'; Milton, L'Al. 62. Digit is here short for digitated, so that the infinitive also takes the form digit. 'And have a care you digit things handsomely'; Beaumont and Fletcher, Coxcomb, Act iv. sc. 3 (end). ME. dikten, dihten, verb; the pp. digit is in Chaucer, C. T. 14447 (B 3719). AS. dihtan, to set in order, dispose, arrange, prescribe, appoint; Luke, xxii. 29.-L. dictare, to dictate, prescribe. See DICTATE. ¶ Similarly, the G. dicten, MIIG. tihien, dihten, is borrowed from the same L. verb. DIGIT, a finger, a figure in arithmetic. (L.) 'Computable by digits'; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 12. § 23.-L. digitus, a finger, a toe; the sense of 'figure' arose from counting on the fingers. ¶ Gk. δάκτυλος, a finger, seems to be unrelated. Der. digit-al, -ale, -at-ed, -al-ion.

DIGNIFY, to make worthy, exalt. (F.-L.) In Shak. Two Gent. ii. 4. 158.-OF. dignifier, to dignify (Godefroy); omitted in Cotgrave, but given in Sherwood's index to that work.-Late L. dignificare, to think worthy, lit. to make worthy.-L. digni, for digno, for dignus, worthy; and -ficare, a suffix due to facere, to make. See DIGNITY and FACT. Der. dignifi-ed.

Apparently from a base dunp* (with mutation of u to y). It answers in form to G. rümpel, dümpfel, a pool; Olig. rumplo. Cf. Dan. dial. dunp, a hollow in a field; Du. dampelen, to dive. All perhaps allied to Swed. dial. dunpa, to fall down, to plunge, str. vb. (pt. t. dunp, supine dunpid). If so, the orig. sense of dimple was 'deep pool'; thence, a hollow place. Cf. Lith. dūdi, to be hollow (pres. t. dūmū = u). See Dingle.

F. diner, to dine. = Late L. disjūnare*, short for disjūnare*, to break one's fast. = L. dis, away; and jūnare, to fast, from jūnare, fasting. See Romania, viii. 95; where it is explained that OF. diner, inf., answers to Late L. type disjūnare*, whilst the Late L. type disjūnare* (1 p. s. pr.) produced the OF. disjūnare, déjeuner, I breakfast. The difference in form is due to the difference in accentuation. Somewhat similar is the formation of F. aider from L. adiutare. See Aid. Körtig, § 3007. Der. dinner (ME. diner, from OF. dinner, where the infin. is used as a sb.).

DING, to throw violently, beat, urge, ring. (E.) 'To ding (i.e. fling) the book a colt's distance from him;' Milton, Areopagitica, ed. Hales, p. 32. ME. dingan, pt. t. dang, dong, pp. dungen. 'Godrich stert up, and on him dong;' Havelok, 1147; dungen, id. 227. Though not found in AS., the word is probably E. rather than Scand.; for it is a strong verb, whereas the related Scand. verbs are but weak. Cf. Icel. dengja, to hammer; Dan. dange, to bang; Swed. danga, to bang, thump, beat. Cf. also MDan. dinge, to blunt an edge by beating on it; OHG. tangol, a hammer. DINGLE, a small dell, little valley. (E.) In Milton, Comus, 312. ME. dingel, a deep hollow, an abyss; 'deopre then ent seadingle,' deeper than any sea-pool; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 263. [It thus answers in sense to what appears to have been the orig. sense of dimple; cf. the variant dimple. 'Within a gloomie dingle shee doth dwell, Downe in a pitt, ore-grown with brakes and briars;' Ben Jonson, Sad Shepherd, A. ii. sc. 2. 'And satyrs, that in slades and gloomy dingles dwell;' Drayton, Poly-Olbiion, s. 2. l. 190.] β. It is clearly related to ME. dung, a pool; 'so deop dung that he drunceth therein,' so deep a pool that they are drowned therein; Seinte Marherete, ed. Cockayne, p. 15, l. 21. Cf. Olig. tune, an underground cave; Lith. deng-ti, to cover. See Dimple.

DINGO, the native Australian dog. (New S. Wales.) New S. Wales dingo, written teingo in 1798 (Morris).

DINGY, soiled, dusky, dimmed. (E.) Very rare in books. 'Dingy, foul, dirty;' Somersetshire; Halliwell. So also 'dingy, dirty;' Pegge, Kenticisms (1736). This sense of 'dirty' is the original one. The word really means 'dun-g-y' or 'soiled with dung.' The f is due to an AS. y, which is the modification of u, by the usual rule; cf. fill, from full: whilst ng has taken the sound of nj. β. This change from u to i (for y) appears as early as the tenth century; we find 'stercoratio, dingung' = a dunging; Ælfric's Vocab., pr. in Voc. 104. 8. γ. We can explain the change from ng to nj, by observing that there was an AS. weak f. dynege as well as the str. f. ding; cf. misendingan, acc. lit. mixen-dung; Anglia, vol. ix. p. 261, l. 9; also AS. gedyngan, weak vb., prov. E. dunge, to soil. And cf. sting, from sting. See Dung. ¶ Cf. Swed. dyngig, dungy, from dyng, dung.

AS. dynt, a blow; Grein, i. 213. + Icel. dyntir, a dint; dynta, to dint; Swed. dial. dunt, a stroke; dunta, to strike, to shake. All from a Teut. base dunt-. See Dent.

Probably dork is the same word with Du. dolk, Swed. and Dan. dolk, G. dolk, a dagger, poniard. This is thought to be a word of Slavonic origin; cf. Polish tułich, a dagger. ¶ Irish diure, a poniard, is borrowed from E.

DIS-, prefix. (L.) 1. From L. dis, apart; dis and dis are both forms from an older dis, which is from L. duo, two; cf. Goth. twain, apart. Brugmann, i. § 279. Hence the sense is 'in two,' i.e. apart, away. 2. The Gk. form of the prefix is dis; see DI-(2). 3. The L. dis became dis in OF, mod. F. dis; this appears in several words, as in dis-fat, dis-fy, &c., where the prefix must be carefully distinguished from that due to L. dis. 4. Again, in some cases, dis is a late substitution for an older dis, which is the OF. dis; thus Chaucer has disarmen from the OF. des-armen, in the sense of dis-arm.

DISABLE, to make unable, disqualify. (L. and F. — L.) In Spenser, F. Q. v. 4. 31; and see Trench, Select Glossary. Made by prefixing L. dis to able. See DIS and ABLE. Der. disabil-i-ty.
